BAKER'S
BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY OF MUSICIANS

PREFACE

In the preparation of the present edition it was the editor's constant care to maintain the high standard of impartiality, completeness and accuracy that characterized the two earlier editions, and have established Dr. Baker's Dictionary as an authoritative work of reference. The long period (13 years) that has elapsed between this and the last edition accounts for the considerable increase in the size of the book. Besides necessary additions to the older articles room had to be found for some 2000 new biographies. In order to keep the contents within the limits of a single volume a number of the less important earlier musicians have been eliminated. The general reader is not likely to notice their omission; the musicologist will naturally turn to Eitner's Quellenlexikon.

Regarding the alphabetical arrangement, the following method has been adopted: ae, oe, ue are treated as distinct letters; no distinction is drawn between original vowels (a, o, u) and modified vowels (ä, ö, ü). Thus SCHAEFER comes before SCHÄFER. However, in such cases as FORSTER and FÖRSTER, when both forms are represented by several individuals, the names have been divided into two groups, the one with the original vowel preceding. In the case of two or more Christian names the order is determined by the name generally known. Thus WAGNER, (WILHELM) RICHARD before WAGNER, SIEGFRIED.

The system of transliteration of Russian names adopted for this Dictionary requires some explanation. (1) X is rendered by ch because the velar aspirate which it represents is familiar from the Scotch (loch) and numerous German words (Bach, Bruch, Koch). Furthermore, it was preferred to kh, because in all languages the symbol k uniformly represents the one familiar sound, which is also retained in the combination kh in words of foreign origin (khaki, khan, khedive); whereas no such uniformity can be claimed for ch, even in English (child, chemist, choir, machine, yacht). (2) Ч is transliterated as tch. In the first place, the initial sound is actually t (followed by sh). Then, a practical consideration added great weight: Such forms as TCHAIKOVSKY, TCHEREPNIN, etc., which have gained general currency in English-speaking countries (in recent years also adopted in several French publications), differ but slightly from TSCHAIKOWSKY, TSCHEREPNIN, etc., the form used in all other European countries. The alphabetical arrangement under T, then, is universal. (3) Ы, which represents a sound quite peculiar to Russian (halfway between ē and ü), is transliterated as ÿ. The usual transliterations as i or y are both inaccurate. (4) For Ж zh suggested itself as the natural transliteration, being the voiced sibilant corresponding to its voiceless mate sh (the identical relation as between z and s). (5) The 'soft' vowels Ѣ, Ю, Я are transliterated as ye, yu, ya when initial, and in the feminine adjective ending (aya); as ie, iu, ia when medial. (6) Ь, technically silent, is by many omitted in transliteration. But it invariably 'softens' the preceding sound, and is actually heard as a very faint fricative. Therefore it is consistently represented by j (zhiznj, vidietj).—Two or three concessions have been made to custom. The famous publisher YURGENSON appears as JURGENSON, because in this form the name is familiar from the title-pages of his publications. KŸI seemed a little too startling (as yet); therefore the French form CUI was retained. In this connection it may be remarked that such forms as BORODINE, SCRIABINE, LIAPOUNOV, etc., are French transliterations. Those interested are referred to the articles by M. Montagu-Nathan and S. W. Pring on Russian-English Transliteration in the London 'Musical Times' (Nov. and Dec., 1917); the system of the British War Office was published in the same journal (Feb., 1918).

All Russian dates are made to correspond to the Western Calendar. Special care has been exercised on this important point. Promiscuous use of both styles has caused much confusion, especially in books giving only the year of an event. Thus it is stated by one writer that Balakirev was born in 1836, and by another, in 1837. The fact is, that according to the Russian Calendar he was born Dec. 21, 1836, and according to the Western Calendar on Jan. 2, 1837.

The orthography of foreign languages has been made to conform to the latest recommendations of the respective academies (where such exist) or other recognized authorities.

The large space devoted to bibliography is only proportionate to the importance of the subject. Reference to sources, where fuller treatment can be found, constitutes a natural and essential supplement to the necessarily condensed statements of a Dictionary. Much time and thought have been given to the selection of titles, and only such have been included as are of real value. The care expended on this part of the task has resulted not only in the correction of errors (wrong titles, dates or places of publication, confusion of different editions, etc.) in the bibliography of predecessors, but many important items in the articles themselves have thus been verified or corrected.

Among the outstanding merits of the original edition of this Dictionary was trustworthiness. Hundreds of errors contained in the standard works of reference had been discovered by Dr. Baker, and eliminated in his own work. Nothing had been accepted without critical examination. The same policy has been followed in the preparation of the present edition, and for this purpose the following recent authorities have been critically examined and collated: Robert Eitner, Biographisch-bibliographisches Quellen-Lexikon (10 vols.; Leipzig, 1900–4), with its quarterly supplements 'Miscellanea Musicæ bio-bibliographica'; Ernesto Vieira, Diccionario biographico de Musicos portuguezes (2 vols.; Lisbon, 1900); Felix Clément and Pierre Larousse, Dictionnaire des Opéras, new ed. rev. by A. Pougin (Paris, 1904); Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians, 2d ed. by J. A. Fuller-Maitland (5 vols.; London, 1904–10); Giuseppe Albinati, Dizionario di Opere teatrali (Milan, 1913); Albert Lavignac, Encyclopédie de la Musique et Dictionnaire du Conservatoire (Paris; 3 vols. since 1913); Hugo Riemann, Musiklexikon (8th ed.; Leipzig, 1916), as well as the earlier Russian and French translations containing amplifications not utilized in the last German edition; Tobias Norlind, Allmänt Musiklexikon (2 vols.; Stockholm, 1916). Every point of divergence found in these works has been carefully investigated, and the result embodied in the present edition of the Dictionary.

In the vast majority of cases the pronunciation of foreign names has been indicated in brackets. Of course, nothing can take the place of the living sound; all phonetic systems are only a matter of more or less close approximation. That of the 'Association Internationale Phonétique (the best yet devised) is far too complicated for the layman to master without special study.

The editor, therefore, adopted, with slight modifications, a simple and very practical system devised by Dr. Theodore Baker for his Pocket Manual of Musical Terms (New York, 1905).

From living musicians information has been obtained, wherever possible, through personal correspondence. Comparatively few letters have remained unanswered. In such cases the editor was obliged to gather what information he could from various sources more or less reliable, a process in which much valuable time was consumed—rather, wasted.

Despite all vigilance, the present edition undoubtedly contains mistakes. Any corrections or suggestions tending to the improvement of the next edition will be gratefully received, and should be addressed to the editor, in care of the publishers.

To the many artists who have cheerfully contributed the required material the editor extends his sincere thanks. He takes pleasure in acknowledging his obligations to Messrs. Richard Aldrich, William H. Humiston and R. F. Loehr of New York, Felix Borowski of Chicago, Joseph E. Schuëcker of Pittsburgh and John Curtis of Philadelphia for valued favors of various kinds (furnishing materials for other than personal biographies, loan of rare books, etc.). To Dr. Otto Kinkeldey, chief of the music-division of the New York Public Library, the editor is indebted for the privilege of unrestricted access to parts of the library closed to the public, as well as for personal assistance in obtaining information; after his enlistment in the army his assistant, Mr. Julius Mattfeld, cheerfully rendered similar service. Special thanks are due to Dr. Theodore Baker, not only for his scrupulous care in reading the proofs, but even more for valuable advice and a deep personal interest throughout the progress of the work.

In conclusion the editor feels impelled to express his appreciation of the unlimited freedom granted him in carrying out his plans. For this he owes thanks to Mr. Rudolph E. Schirmer.

THE EDITOR.

New York, August 1, 1918.

KEY TO PRONUNCIATION

ah as a in father.
ăh " ah " the college cheer 'rah! rah! rah!' Such words as 'blot, plot,' do not represent the pure short sound corresponding to long ah; they have an admixture of ô.
ă " a " bat.
ä " a " hare.
ā " a " fate.
ĕh is the short sound of long ā (closer than e in bet).
ĕ as e in pet.
ē " ee " meet.
ĭ " i " sit.
ī " i " side.
oh " o " old.
ŏh " o " obey.
ô " aw " law.
ö " oe " Goethe (or Fr. eu in 'feu'). In closed syllables it represents the open eu, as in 'peur.'
oi " oi " oil (approximately); the German äu and eu are more closed (ah-ü), while the Engl. oi is open (ô-ē).

oo as oo in food.
ŏŏ " oo " foot.
ow " ow " owl.
ŭ " u " but.
ü " u " French 'rue' (street).

ÿ represents the Russian yerui (a sound midway between ē and ü).

g always as in 'go.'
h as ch in Ger. 'ach' or Scotch 'loch.'

n represents the French nasal vowels, ăn (main, fin), ăhn (enfant), ŏhn (mon), ön (Verdun).

ñ represents a sound equivalent to the Spanish ñ (n+consonantal y), as in 'cañon.'

s as in 'see.'
sh as in 'shall.'
th as in 'thin.'
y as in 'yes.'
yh as ch in Ger. 'ich.'
z as in 'gaze.'
zh as z in 'azure.'

N. B. Accent-marks over vowels in Bohemian, Polish and Hungarian names never indicate stress of voice, but always a modification of the vowel-sound.

A'baco, Evaristo Felice dall', b. Verona, July 12, 1675; d. Munich, July 12, 1742, as leader of orch. to the Grand Duke of Bavaria. Comp.: Op. 1, 12 violin-sonatas w. continuo; Op. 2, 10 4-part concerti da chiesa; Op. 3, 6 church- and 6 chamber-sonatas a 3; Op. 4, 12 vln.-son. w. cont. (arr. by Chédeville f. musette, flute and oboe w. cont.); Op. 5, 6 7-p. concerti (4 vlns., vla., bassoon or 'cello, b. cont.); Op. 6, concerti f. vln. A. Sandberger publ. a biogr. sketch and a selection from op. 1–4 in vol. i of 'Denkmäler d. Tonk. in Bayern,' and a second selection in vol. ix, 1; Riemann has edited 3 Trio-Sonatas.—See Q.-Lex.

Abbà-Corna'glia, Pietro, b. Alessandria, Piedmont, Mar. 20, 1851; d. there May 2, 1894. Pupil of Milan Cons., 1868–71. Talented opera-comp. (Isabella Spinola, 1877; Maria di Warden, 1884; Una partita di scacchi, Pavia, 1892); also wrote good chamber- and sacred music (Requiem Mass).

Abbadi'a, Luigia, daughter of Natale A.; b. Genoa, 1821. Celebrated mezzo-soprano stage-singer; début Sassari, 1836. Rôles: Maria Padilla (written for her by Donizetti), Saffo, Vestale, Elvira (in Ernani). In 1870 she established a singing-school at Milan.

Abbadi'a, Natale, b. Genoa, Mar. 11, 1792; d. Milan, circa 1875. Chorus-master 1831–37 at Carlo Felice Th., Milan. Comp. the opera, Giannina di Pontieu, ovv. La villanella d'onore (Genoa, 1812), and the farce L'imbroglione ed il castigamatti (do.); also masses, motets, etc.

Abbati'ni, Antonio Maria, Roman composer; b. Tiferno (Città di Castello), 1595 (1605?); d. there 1677. Maestro di cappella at the Lateran, 1626–8, and thereafter successively at 4 other Roman churches. Comp. much church-music, most still in MS.; publ. 3 books of Masses, 4 of Psalms, various 24-part Antiphons (1630, '38, '77), 5 books of Motets (1635), and a dram. cantata, Il Pianto di Rodomonte (Orvieto, 1633). Co-worker with Kircher on the 'Musurgia.' Prod. 3 operas: Del male in bene (Rome, 1654; one of the earliest comic operas, and historically important as introd. the final ensemble; comp. Goldschmidt, Studien zur Geschichte d. Oper, vol. i), Ione (Vienna, 1666), and La comica del cielo, or La Baltasara (Rome, 1668).—See Q.-Lex.

Abbey, John, noted English organ-builder; b. Whilton, Northamptonshire, Dec. 22, 1785; d. Versailles, Feb. 19, 1859. On Séb. Erard's invitation he went to Paris in 1826, settled there, and built many organs for churches, cathedrals, chapels, etc., throughout France. His sons, E. and J. Abbey, carried on the business at Versailles.

Abbott, Emma, dramatic soprano, b. Chicago, Dec. 9, 1850; d. Salt Lake City, Jan. 5, 1891. After years of hard work as a natural singer and guitar-player, she came to New York abt. 1870, took lessons of Erani, sang in Dr. Chapin's church, and in 1872, aided by the congregation, went to Europe, studying with Sangiovanni at Milan and Delle Sedie at Paris. She sang with great success abroad and at home. Married, 1878, Mr. E. Wetherell of N. Y. (d. 1888).

Abd el Kadir (or Abdolkadir), Ben Isa, Arabian writer in the 14th century, author of 3 mus. treatises noticed by Kiesewetter ('Musik der Araber,' 1842, p. 33): The Collector of Melodies; The Aim of Melodies in the Composition of Tones and Measures; and The Treasure of Melodies in the Science of Musical Cycles.

Abeille, (Johann Christian) Ludwig, b. Bayreuth, Feb. 20, 1761; d. Stuttgart, Mar. 2, 1838. Leader of the Duke of Württemberg's private orch.; later court org. and mus. director. Fine pianist and organist; comp. the Singspiele Amor und Psyche (Stuttgart, 1801), and Peter und Ännchen (Stuttg., 1809); harpsichord- and chamber-music (concertos, trios, duets, etc.); and songs still sung in schools.—See Q.-Lex.

A'bel, (Leopold) August, b. 1717 at Köthen (where his father, Christian Ferdinand A., was a viola-da-gamba player); d. Ludwigslust, Aug. 25, 1794; fine violinist; played in court orchestras at Brunswick, Sondershausen, Berlin, and Schwerin; publ. some easy études.

A'bel, Clamor (Heinrich), b. Westphalia near middle of 17th century; d. (?). Publ. 3 sets of pieces for strings (Tanzsuiten, 1674, '76, '77). He was chamber-musician at the Hanoverian Court.

A'bel, Karl Friedrich, renowned player on the viola da gamba; b. Köthen, 1725; d. London, June 20, 1787. He received thorough training from his father, and from J. S. Bach at the Thomasschule, Leipzig; member of the Royal Polish Band at Dresden, 1748–58; visited Leipzig and other German towns, and went to London in 1759, where the Duke of York assisted him. In 1765, chamber-musician to Queen Charlotte. He was intimate with Joh. Chr. Bach. He comp. 2 operas: Love in a Village (London, 1760), and Berenice (1764); also popular symphonies, overtures, quartets, sonatas for harpsichord, concertos for harpsichord and strings, etc. (Eitner mentions some 60 different sets and single pieces still extant.) He revisited Germany 1783–5, returning to London via Paris. He was the last great virtuoso on the gamba.

A'bel, Ludwig, b. Eckartsberga, Thuringia, Jan. 14, 1834; d. Neu-Pasing, n. Munich, Aug. 13, 1895. Pupil of Ferd. David; member of Gewandhaus orch. at Leipzig, the Weimar court orch. (1853), leader of court orch. at Munich (1867), teacher in and (1878) Inspector of the Royal Music-School then managed by v. Bülow; 1880, royal Professor; retired on pension, 1894. Violin-virtuoso of high rank, and an excellent orch. conductor; wrote a good Violin Method; also studies, variations, etc.

A'bell, John, a celebrated alto singer (musico), and lutenist; b. London, c. 1660; d. Cambridge (?), c. 1724. In 1679, member of the Chapel Royal; fled to the Continent during the Revolution of 1688, and won fame and wealth by his singing. In Kassel he was made Intendant of Music (1698–9). About 1700 he returned to England. He was also a song-writer and collector (collections publ. in 1701, and 1740).

A'bendroth, Hermann, b. Frankfort, Jan. 19, 1883. Pupil of L. Thuille and A. Langenhan-Hirzel in Munich; 1903–04 conductor of the 'Orchesterverein' in Munich; 1905–11 in Lübeck as first cond. at the 'Stadttheater' and cond. of the 'Verein der Musikfreunde.' In 1911 he was called as municipal music director to Essen, and in 1914 he succeeded Fritz Steinbach in the direction of the 'Gürzenich' concerts in Cologne.

A'bendroth, Irene, coloratura soprano; b. Lemberg, July 14, 1872. Pupil of Frau Wilczek; member of Vienna court opera 1889, sang in Riga and Munich, and again in Vienna (1894–99); eng. 1899–1908 at the Royal Opera in Dresden.

A'benheim, Joseph, violinist; b. Worms, 1804; d. Stuttgart, Jan. 19, 1891. Member and (1854) musical director of the Stuttgart Cons. orch. Composed overtures, entr'acte music, etc.; some minor pf.-pieces and songs have been published.

A'bert, Hermann, b. Stuttgart, Mar. 25, 1871; pupil of the Cons. and his father, Joh. Jos. A. Dr. phil., Tübingen, 1897; Dozent for mus. science at Halle Univ., 1902; prof., 1909. Works: Die Lehre vom Ethos in der griechischen Musik (1902); biogr. of Schumann (1903, in Reimann's 'Ber. Mus.'); Die Musikanschauung des Mittelalters und ihre Grundlagen (Halle, 1905); Die dram. Musik am Hofe Herzog Karls von Württemberg (1905); N. Jommelli als Opernkomponist (Halle, 1908); Geschichte d. Rob. Franz Singakademie zu Halle (Halle, 1908); historical essays (IMS.); etc. He edited several older operas. Since 1914 he is editor of the 'Gluck Jahrbuch.'

A'bert, Johann Joseph, b. Kochowitz, Bohemia, Sept. 21, 1832; d. Stuttgart, Apr. 1, 1915. Choir-boy at Gastdorf and, from 8 to 15, at Leipa monastery, whence he fled to an uncle in Prague, who sent him (1848) to the Prague Cons. (Kittl, Tomaček). He first st. the double-bass; his études, concertos, etc., for this instr. are classics. He also wrote overtures, and graduated in 1852 with a symphony in C minor. Engaged as double-bass player in the court orch. at Stuttgart, he comp. 2 symphonies (G min. and A maj.), and an opera, Anna von Landskron (Stuttgart, 1859); in 1860 a second opera, Die Almohaden, was prod. Studied further in Paris and London; wrote opera König Enzio (1862) after returning to Germany, and a symphonic poem, Columbus, which made him famous. A 3-act romantic opera, Astorga (Stuttgart, 1866), followed; A. was then app. Musikdirektor and (1867) Kapellm. at the Stuttgart Court Th., succeeding Eckert; he retired in 1888. Other works are the 5-act opera Ekkehard (Berlin, 1878), probably his magnum opus; a 5th symphony in C min., and a 6th 'lyric' symphony in D min.; a mass f. mixed ch. w. org.-accomp.; overtures, string-quartets, pf.-pcs. and songs. A Abos (or Avos, d'Avossa), Girolamo, comp. for stage and church; b. Malta, c. 1708; d. Naples, 1786(?). Pupil of Leo and Durante at Naples; in 1756, maestro al cembalo at the Italian Th., London; in 1758, teacher in the Cons. della Pietà de' Turchini, Naples (Paisiello was his pupil). Wrote 14 operas for Naples, Rome and London, and, after 1758, much sacred music (7 masses, several litanies, etc.).—See Q.-Lex.

Abraham, John. See Braham.

Abraham, Dr. Max, b. Danzig, 1831; d. Leipzig, Dec. 8, 1900. He became a partner in C. F. Peters' 'Bureau de Musique' in 1863, and sole proprietor in 1888. On Jan. 1, 1894, his nephew, Heinrich Hinrichsen, of Hamburg, entered the firm, and is now its head. The famous 'Edition Peters' was inaugurated by Dr. A.

Ábrányi, Emil, b. Budapest, Sept. 22, 1882. Has comp. the Hungarian operas A ködkirály (King of the Mist; Budapest, 1903); Monna Vanna (ibid., 1907); Paolo and Francesca (ibid., 1912). In 1907, Kapellm. at the Royal Th., Hanover; since 1911 Kapellm. in Budapest.

Ábrányi, Kornel, b. Oct. 15, 1822, at Szent György Ábrányi, Hungary, of the noble Hungarian family Eördögh; d. at Budapest, Dec. 20, 1903. He founded the first Hungarian musical journal (1860), the Singers' Union (1867), and was one of the chief promoters of the National Mus. Acad. at Pest, of which he was a professor and the secretary (1875). His publ. comps. (songs, choruses, etc.) are in the national vein.

Abt, Franz, song-writer and conductor; b. Eilenburg, Dec. 22, 1819; d. Wiesbaden, Mar. 31, 1885. He was sent to the Leipzig Thomasschule to study theology, his father being a clergyman, and later obtained an excellent musical education both there and at the Univ. On his father's death he gave up theology, having already made several successful attempts at composition, and having conducted a students' philharmonic society. In 1841 he went to Bernburg as Kapellm. of the Court Th., but in the same year relinquished this post for a similar one at the Zurich Th. Here he remained till 1852, conducting several singing-societies and composing many vocal works, particularly for men's voices. He was then app. 2nd Kapellm. at Brunswick, 3 years later becoming 1st Kapellm., a position held up to 1882, when he retired on pension to Wiesbaden.—Abt wrote over 500 works, comprising more than 3,000 numbers; the largest are the 7 secular cantatas. His popularity as a song-writer is due chiefly to the flowing, easy and elegant style of his vocal melodies, many of which (Wenn die Schwalben heimwärts zieh'n, Gute Nacht, du mein herziges Kind, So viele tausend Blumen, etc.) have become true folk-songs; numerous part-songs are likewise deservedly prime favorites; in these and his choruses for men's and for women's voices, he rivals Mendelssohn in the hearts of his countrymen. On his vocal works rests his lasting fame; his pf.-compositions, of a light and popular character, are already forgotten.

Achsharumov [ăh-shăh-roo'mŏhv], Demetrius Vladimirovitch, b. Odessa, Sept. 20, 1864. Began the study of violin with Krassnokutski; went to Petrograd to L. Auer, and later to Vienna, where he studied comp. with R. Fuchs; at the same time continued his violin studies with J. Dont. From 1890–98 he made a number of successful concert tours; he then settled in Pultava as cond. of the Symphony concerts, and in the following year was appointed director of the newly established local branch of the Imp. Russ. Mus. Soc.

Ack'ermann, A. J., b. Rotterdam, Apr. 2, 1836. Studied at The Hague in the R. Music-School, under Lübeck, Nicolas and Wietz; app. teacher of pf. there in 1865; of org. and theory, 1867.—Works: Pf.-pieces for 2 and 4 hands; songs.

Ackté, Aïno (Mme. Ackté-Renvall), dramatic soprano; b. Helsingfors, Finland, Apr. 23, 1876. Entered the Paris Cons. in 1894; made her début in 1897 at the Grand Opéra as Marguerite (Faust). The success of her tour of Germany in 1902 led to her engagement at the M. O. H. in 1904–05. Her impersonation of Salome, in Strauss' opera, at Cov. G. Th. in 1913 was followed by an invitation from the composer to sing the part also at Dresden and Paris. Rôles: Marguerite, Juliette, Ophélie, Gilda, Nedda, Elisabeth, Elsa, Sieglinde, etc.

Acton, John, English singing-teacher and composer; b. Manchester (?), 1863. Pupil of Francesco Lamperti at Milan. Prof. of singing at the Manchester R. C. M. since its opening in 1893; since 1894, cond. of the St. Cecilia Choral Soc.—Works: 2 cantatas f. women's voices, Forest Bells, and The Rose and the Nightingale; a male chorus, For Home and Liberty, w. pf.-accomp. (prize from S. London Mus. Club, 1888); also duets, songs and pf.-pieces.

Adalid y Gurre'a, Marcel del, Spanish composer; b. La Coruña, Aug. 26, 1826; d. Longara, Oct. 16, 1881. Studied with Moscheles in London and Chopin in Paris. Published 3 collections of Galician Folk-songs; wrote an opera, Inese e Bianca (on an Italian text), and pf.-pieces.

Adam [ăh-dăhn'], Adolphe (-Charles), celebrated opera-composer, was b. Paris, July 24, 1803; d. there May 3, 1856. He entered the Cons. in 1817, but made little progress until taken in hand by Boieldieu in his class for composition. After publishing various pf.-pieces, he brought out the 1-act opera Pierre et Catherine (1829), the success of which encouraged him to produce 13 more similar works in quick succession, the Postillon de Longjumeau (1836) gaining European celebrity for its author, and still keeping his name in grateful memory. In all, he wrote 53 theatrical works, the most popular operas after the Postillon being Le Châlet (1834), Le fidèle Berger, Le Brasseur de Preston (1838), Le Roi d'Yvetot (1842), La Poupée de Nuremberg, Cagliostro, and Richard en Palestine (1844); also the ballets Giselle, Le Corsaire, Faust, etc. In 1847, on account of difficulties with the director of the Opéra-Comique, A. founded the Théâtre National, but was ruined financially by the revolution of 1848, and entered the Paris Cons. as prof. of comp.—A. does not rank with the foremost dramatic composers of France, his style being distinguished by taking rhythms and light elegance and grace, rather than forceful originality. His forte was comedy-opera, in which he was a worthy successor of Boieldieu.—His autobiographical Souvenirs d'un Musicien and Derniers Souvenirs d'un Musicien were publ. at Paris in 1857–59 [1871]. Life by A. Pougin (1876).

A'dam, Karl Ferdinand, b. Constappel, n. Meissen, Dec. 22, 1806; d. Leisnig, Dec. 23, 1868, as cantor and musical director there.—Works: Popular choruses and quartets for men's voices; songs; pf.-pieces.

Adam, Louis, b. Müttersholz, Alsatia, Dec. 3, 1758; d. Paris, Apr. 8, 1848. He went to Paris in 1775, and from 1797–1842 was prof. of pf. at the Paris Cons. He was a close student of the German classic masters, an admirable pianist, a comp. of numerous pf.-pieces much in vogue at the time (especially the variations on 'Le roi Dagobert'), and an eminent pedagogue, the teacher of Kalkbrenner, Hérold, Henri le Moine and F. Chaulieu, and author of two standard instruction-books for piano: Méthode ou principe générale du doigté pour le Forté-piano (Paris, Sieber, 1798), and Méthode nouvelle pour le Piano (5 editions, 1802–32), written expressly for pupils of the Cons.

Adam de la Hale (or Halle), called le Bossu d'Arras (Hunchback of Arras); b. Arras, circa 1240; d. Naples, 1287. A gifted Trouvère, many of whose works have been preserved (publ. 1872 by Coussemaker as Œuvres complètes du Trouvère Adam de la Hale); the most interesting is a dramatic pastoral entitled Le jeu de Robin et de Marion (1285), written for the Aragonese court at Naples, resembling an opéra comique in its plan. He was a master of the chanson, in the dual capacity of poet and composer; his works are of the utmost value as illustrating the music of the period.—Cf. E. Langlois, Le jeu de Robin et de Marion (Paris, 1896); H. Guy, Essai sur la vie et les œuvres littéraires d'Adam de la Hale (Paris, 1898).

A'dam von Fulda, noteworthy German theorist and composer; b. circa 1440; d. (?). His treatise on mus. theory is to be found in vol. iii of Gerbert's 'Scriptores ecclesiastici'; his compositions were highly prized in their day. Cf. H. Riemann in 'Kchm. J.' (1879) and W. Niemann, ibid. (1902).—See Q.-Lex.

A'damberger, Valentin (not Joseph), b. Munich, July 6, 1743; d. Vienna, Aug. 24, 1804. Dramatic tenor, pupil of Valesi 1755–61; eng. at Venice, 1762, as 1st tenor; sang with growing success in other Italian cities, and assumed the name of 'Adamonti.' He sang in London in 1777, and in 1780 was eng. at the Vienna Court Opera, in 1789 also as 'Hofkapellsänger.' Mozart wrote for him the part of Belmonte, and some concert-arias.

Ada'mi da Bolse'na (or da Volterra), Andrea, b. Venice, Oct., 1663; d. Rome, July 22, 1742. Famed as the author of Osservazioni per ben regolare il coro dei cantori della cappella Pontificia (Rome, 1711), a work of historical value. Cantor of the Pontifical Chapel, and music-teacher.

Adamon'ti. See ADAMBERGER.

Adamowski [-mŏhv'skē], Joseph, b. Warsaw, July 4, 1862. Pupil at Warsaw Cons. (1873–77) of Kontski and Goebelt ('cello); at Imp. Cons., Moscow (1877–83) of Fitzenhagen ('cello), Tchaikovsky (comp.), Pabst (pf.); studied at the University, receiving the degree of B. A. Began concert tours in Warsaw in 1883; played also in Germany; 1885–7 prof. of 'cello and ensemble classes in Cons. at Cracow; 1889 member of Bost. Symph. Orch.; member of Adamowski Quartet and Trio. Since 1903 he has been prof. of 'cello at New Engl. Cons. at Boston; is one of the founders and directors of the B. S. O. Pension Fund; married in 1896 the pianist Antoinette Szumowska (q. v.).

Adamow'ski, Timothée, born at Warsaw, Mar. 24, 1858. Violin-virtuoso; at first a pupil of A. Kontchi at Warsaw Cons.; 1876–9 of Massart in Paris Cons. In 1879 he went to America, and travelled as soloist with M. Strakosch, Clara Louise Kellogg, and finally with a company of his own, with which he played in Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Washington, Chicago, etc. From 1885–6 he taught in the New Engl. Cons., Boston; in 1888 he organized the Adamowski String-quartet (A., E. Fiedler, D. Kuntz, and G. Campanari; reorganized 1890 with A., A. Moldauer, Max Zach and Josef Adamoswki, the last a brother of T. A., and an excellent 'cellist). In 1887 A. appeared at London and Warsaw; in 1895, again in London and Paris, since which time he has spent the summer season regularly in these two cities. In 1898 he played at Warsaw with the Philharm. Orch. and the Mus. Society. His quartet gives about 30 concerts annually in the chief towns of the U. S. From 1890–4 he also cond. the six weeks' popular summer concerts of the Boston Symphony Orch.—He has publ. several songs, and has a Novellette f. vln. and pf. in MS.

Ad'ams, Charles R., fine dramatic tenor; b. Charlestown, Mass., circa 1848; d. West Harwich, Mass., July 3, 1900. Pupil in Vienna of Barbieri; was then eng. for 3 years at the Royal Opera, Berlin, and thereafter for 9 years at the Imp. Opera, Vienna; also sang at La Scala, Covent Garden, Madrid, various German towns, in the U. S., etc. Settled in Boston, 1879. He had a predilection for Wagner rôles, and was an excellent actor and teacher.

Ad'ams, Stephen. See MAYBRICK, M.

Ad'ams, Thomas, eminent organist and comp. for org.; b. London, Sept. 5, 1785; d. there Sept. 15, 1858. He was a pupil of Dr. Busby, and organist at several prominent London churches. His publ. organ-works include many fugues, voluntaries, 90 interludes, and several variations on popular airs; he also wrote variations for piano, and many anthems, hymns, and sacred songs. His skill in improvising was remarkable; for years he had charge of the performances on Flight and Robson's 'Apollonicon.'

Ad'cock, James, b. Eton, England, June 29, 1778; d. Cambridge, Apr. 30, 1860. Chorister, 1786, of St. George's chapel, Windsor, and lay-clerk in 1797; later a member of various church-choirs in Cambridge; and, finally, choir-master at King's College.—Works: Several 3- and 4-part glees; an evening service in B♭; anthems; and a book, The Rudiments of Singing.

Ad'dison, John, composer and double-bass player; b. London, circa 1765; d. there Jan. 30, 1844.—Works: 6 operettas, very popular at the period; a 'sacred drama,' Elijah; songs, glees, etc.; also Singing Practically Treated in a Series of Instructions (London, n. d. [1836]).

A'delburg, August, Ritter von; b. Constantinople, Nov. 1, 1830; d. insane at Vienna, Oct. 20, 1873. Fine violinist, pupil (1850–4) of Mayseder. His tone is said to have been well-nigh unmatchable in fullness; his numerous comps. were chiefly for violin (concertos, sonatas for pf. and vln., string-quartets), and some sacred pieces; also 3 operas: Zrinyi (Pest, 1868); Wallenstein; and Martinuzzi.

Agri'cola (Ackermann), Alexander, eminent composer, probably of German nationality and b. in Holland circa 1446; d. circa 1506 near Valladolid, Spain. He was chorister at Milan (till 1474) and Mantua (till 1491), then entering the service of Philip I (the Fair) of Burgundy, whom he followed from Brussels in 1505 to Spain. 31 of his songs and motets were printed by Petrucci (Venice, 1502–3), who also published (Venice, 1503) a vol. of 5 masses (Le Serviteur, Je ne demande, Malheur me bat, Primi toni, Secundi toni).—See Q.-Lex.

Agri'cola, Johann Friedrich, b. Dobitzschen, n. Altenburg, Jan. 4, 1720; d. Berlin, Nov. 12 (Forkel), Dec. 1 (Schneider), Dec. 6 (Voss. Ztg.), 1774. He entered the Univ. of Leipzig in 1738 as a law-student, but also studied music for three years with J. S. Bach, and later (1741) with Quantz in Berlin; was made court-composer (1751) and director of the Royal Chapel (1759), succeeding Graun. His compositions, which had no enduring success, were 8 operas (brought out 1750–72 at Berlin and Potsdam), and a variety of sacred music and arrangements of the King's compositions; except a psalm and some chorals, none was published. He was a good singing-teacher (transl. Tosi's Method of Singing), and was said to be the finest organist in Berlin. Under the pseudonym 'Olibrio' he printed some polemical pamphlets directed against Marpurg; was also a collaborator on Adlung's Musica mechanica organoedi.—See Q.-Lex.

Agri'cola, Martin, a very important mus. theorist and writer; b. Schwiebus (Brandenburg), Jan. 6, 1486; d. Magdeburg, June 10, 1556. His real name was Sore, but he adopted the Latin name because of his descent from peasants. He is an authority on the instruments of his time, and a valuable source for the history of notation. Mattheson says that he was the first to abandon the old tablature for modern notation. From 1510 he was a private music-teacher in Magdeburg; 1527, app. cantor at the first Lutheran church there. His friend and patron, Rhaw, of Wittenberg, printed several of his works, chief among which are Musica figuralis deudsch, Von den Proporcionibus (both without date or author's name, but reprinted together in 1532); Musica instrumentalis deudsch (chief work; 1528, '29, '32); Rudimenta musices (1539, '43; this 2nd ed. entitled Quaestiones vulgariores in musicam); Duo libri musices (1561, being the Rudimenta and De Proporcionibus in one vol.); Scholia in musicam planam Wenceslai Philomatis (1540); Virdung's Musica getutscht in verse, with the original illustrations; also a few collections of pieces: Ein kurtz deudsch musica (1528); Musica choralis deudsch (1533); Deudsche Musica und Gesangbüchlein (1540); Ein Sangbüchlein aller Sonntags-Evangelien (1541).—See Q.-Lex.

Albert, Prince of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, Prince Consort of Queen Victoria; b. Schloss Rosenau, Aug. 26, 1819; married Feb. 10, 1840; d. Dec. 14, 1861. A zealous promoter and patron of art, he himself comp. an opera, Hedwig von Linden (London, 1840), and numerous vocal works, of which were publ. L'invocazione all' Armonia, f. solos and chorus; morning service in C and A; anthem Out of the deep; 29 Lieder und Romanzen, in 5 collections; 3 canzonets; etc.

Albert, Heinrich, b. Lobenstein (Saxony), July 8, 1604; d. Königsberg, Oct. 6, 1651. In 1622 he went to Dresden to study music under his uncle, Heinrich Schütz, but his parents soon decided that he should study law, and sent him to Leipzig. Going to Königsberg (1626), he was attached to an embassy to Warsaw and taken prisoner by the Swedes; returning to K., he became organist of the Cathedral (1630), and resumed music study under Stobäus. He was a gifted composer, and a fine poet (of the 'Königsberg school'), writing the words for the majority of the songs he set to music. He published 8 famous books of arias [Arien] (1638–50), and the Kürbshütte, a cantata consisting of 12 terzets (1645); collections of chorales, arias and lieder, for one or several voices; many of his hymn-tunes are still sung in Prussia. A selection of his songs, with the music, has been issued in the 'Neudrucke deutscher Litteraturwerke' (Eitner: Halle, 1883–4); the arias in vols. xii and xiii in 'Dkm. deutscher Tonkunst.'—See Q.-Lex.

d'Albert [dähl-bär'], Eugène (Francis Charles), [writes his name in German style, Eugen,] pianist; b. Glasgow, Apr. 10, 1864. His father, Charles L. N. d'A. (b. Nienstetten, near Hamburg, Feb. 25, 1809; d. London, May 26, 1866), was a musician and dancing-master, and composed many popular dances; he was his son's first teacher.—Eugène was elected Newcastle scholar in the National Training School, London, in 1876, and was taught by Pauer (pf.), and Stainer, Prout and Sullivan (harm. and comp.); in 1881, he was elected Mendelssohn scholar, and studied under Richter (Vienna) and Liszt (Weimar); the latter dubbed him 'the young Tausig' on account of his remarkable technique. On Feb. 5, 1881, he played the Schumann concerto at the Crystal Palace, London, and, on Oct. 24, a concerto in A, of his own, at a Richter Concert. Since that time he has arrived at full pianistic maturity, one of his feats being the performance of 5 Beethoven sonatas (op. 31, 53, 90, 109, 110) at a Gewandhaus recital on Nov. 20, 1893, thus vying with Bülow's famous programs. Ever since his first appearance he has occupied a conspicuous place among the greatest of contemporary pianists. As a composer he has publ. 2 pf.-concertos, in B m. and E; 2 overtures (Hyperion and Esther); a symphony in F; a pf.-suite in 5 movements; a pf.-sonata in F♯ m.; 2 string-quartets (A m., E♭); minor pf.-pieces, and several songs; op. 14, Der Mensch u. das Leben (by O. Ludwig), for 6-p. ch. and orch.; op. 16, 4 pf.-pieces (Waltz, Scherzo, Intermezzo, Ballade). He wrote the operas Der Rubin [The Ruby] (Karlsruhe, Oct. 12, 1893), which had a favorable reception; text and music of the 3-act opera Ghismonda (Dresden, 1895, mod. success); opera Gernot (Mannheim, 1897; succ.); 1-act mus. comedy Die Abreise (Frankfort, 1898; succ.); Kain (Berlin, 1900); Der Improvisator (Berlin, 1900); Tiefland (Prague, 1903; v. succ.); Flauto solo (Prague, 1905); Tragaldabas (Der geborgte Ehemann; comedy-opera in 4 acts; Hamburg, 1907; succ.); Izeyl (Hamburg, 1909); Die verschenkte Frau (Vienna, 1912); Liebesketten (Vienna, 1912); Tote Augen (Dresden, 1916). He has also made piano transcriptions of several of Bach's organ works, edited the Well-Tempered Clavichord, and is one of the editors of the monumental Liszt edition brought out by Breitkopf & Härtel.—D'Albert married the celebrated pianist Teresa Carreño in 1892 (divorced 1895). From 1895–1910 he was married to the singer Hermine Finck; from 1910–12 to Ida Theumann. His winter residence is Vienna, his summer home is in Meina, Italy. 1895, app. 1st Kapellm. at Weimar, as Dr. Lassen's successor; but resigned speedily, being himself succeeded by Bernhard Stavenhagen.

Albertazzi [-täht'sē], Emma, née Howson, stage-contralto; b. London, May 1, 1814; d. there Sept. 25, 1847. Pupil of Sir M. Costa; début 1829, Argyle Rooms, London. Engaged at King's Th., 1830; at Piacenza, Italy, in 1831, where she married Sgr. Albertazzi. Sang in La Scala (1831), Madrid (1833), and Paris (Ital. Op., 1835), her most brilliant period. Reappeared in London, 1837. She had a fine voice, but no passion or animation in singing or acting.

Alber'ti, Domenico, b. Venice, circa 1717; d. Formio (or Rome), circa 1740, is still known to fame as the first to develop and extensively employ the style of broken-chord bass-accomp., in similar figures, named 'Alberti' or 'Albertinian' bass after him. He first attracted notice as an amateur singer, developing into a pianist and composer of easy popular piano-music, also 3 operas, Endimione, Galatea, Olimpiade. In 1737 he was attached to the suite of the Venetian ambassador at Rome, and was a much-admired singer and player.

Alber'ti, Giuseppe Matteo, b. Bologna, 1685; d. after 1746. Violinist and comp. of great merit; pupil of Manzolini and Minelli (vln.) and F. Arresti (cpt.); 'principe' of the B. Philh. Academy.—Publ. works: 10 Concerti (sextets); 12 vln.-sonatas with b. cont.; 12 Sinfonie for 2 vlns., vla., 'cello and org.

Alber'ti, Johann Friedrich, b. Tönning, Schleswig, Jan. 11, 1642; d. Merseburg, June 14, 1710. Pupil of Werner Fabricius, Leipzig, and Albrici, Dresden; org. at Merseburg cathedral till 1698. A learned contrapuntist, whose chorales, fugues, etc., were held in estimation.

Alberti'ni, Gioacchino, b. 1751; d. Warsaw, in April, 1812. About 1784, Royal Polish Kapellm. His Italian operas, Circe ed Ulisse (Hamburg, 1785) and Virginia (Rome, 1786), were extremely popular.

Alberti'ni, Michael (called Momoletto), famous soprano singer (musico) at Kassel early in the 18th century. His sister Giovanna, (called Romanina) was prima donna there.

Albino'ni, Tommaso, opera-composer and violinist; b. Venice, 1674; d. there 1745; wrote some 46 operas, chiefly for Venice; in Germany he was best known as a violinist and instrumental composer (symphonies, sonatas, concertos, etc., among them some valuable works). He was also an admired singer.—See Q.-Lex.

Albo'ni, Marietta, celebrated contralto, b. Cesena (Romagna), Mar. 10, 1823; d. Ville d'Avray, France, June 23, 1894. Studied under Mme. Bertolotti at Bologna (where she began her stage career in 1839), and later with Rossini, whose sole pupil she is said to have been. Her début as Orsini in Donizetti's Lucrezia Borgia, at La Scala (Milan, 1843), was a brilliant success; with her impresario, Merelli, she made an Italian tour, then proceeding to Vienna. She visited Petrograd, returned to Germany in 1845, sang at the Roman carnival in 1847, and appeared at Covent Garden in London the same spring, entering into not unsuccessful rivalry with Jenny Lind, then at the zenith of her fame. Engaged the following October in the Italian Opera at Paris, she was received with unbounded enthusiasm, and sang for several years alternately in these capitals. In 1853 she made a triumphal progress through the two Americas; married Count Pepoli in 1854, and at his death (1866) retired from the stage. In 1877 she married a French officer, Ziéger. Her voice was rich, sweet and powerful, with a compass of 2 octaves (g—g^2) and perfectly equalized. Cf. A. Pougin, M. A. (2nd ed. Paris, 1912).

Al'brecht, Eugen Maria, a fine violinist and musician; b. Petrograd, June 16, 1842; d. there Feb. 9, 1894. 1857–60, a pupil of David at Leipzig Cons.; 1860–77, leader of the orchestra at the Italian opera, Petrograd, and (1867–72) musical director of military schools; 1872, app. inspector of the Imperial orchestras; 1892, librarian of the Imperial Theatres. Also the founder (1872) of the Chamber-music Society, and violin-master to several of the Imp. princes.—His father, Karl A., b. Posen, Aug. 27, 1807; d. Gatchina, Feb. 24, 1863, was Kapellm. for 12 years of the Imp. Russian Opera, where, in 1842, he conducted the world's première of Glinka's Russlan and Ludmilla.

Al'brecht, Johann Lorenz, b. Görmar near Mühlhausen (Thuringia), Jan. 8, 1732; d. Mühlhausen, 1773. He studied at Leipzig, and in 1758 became cantor, music-director and teacher in the Gymnasium at M. Edited Adlung's Musica mechanica and Siebengestirn (Berlin, 1768), wrote an Abhandlung über die Frage: ob die Musik beim Gottesdienst zu dulden sei oder nicht (1764); Gründliche Einleitung in die Anfangslehren der Tonkunst (1761); and a treatise Vom Hasse der Musik (1765); contributed articles to Marpurg's 'Kritische Beiträge,' etc. Composed a Passion, some cantatas and harpsichord-lessons.

Al'brechtsberger, Johann Georg, famous theoretical writer, composer, and teacher; b. Klosterneuburg, near Vienna, Feb. 3, 1736; d. Vienna, Mar. 7, 1809. After holding positions as organist and music-master in smaller towns (especially 12 years in Mölk, where his fine playing attracted the Emperor Joseph's notice), in 1772 he was engaged in Vienna as 'Regens chori' to the Carmelites; app. court organist in the same year, and, in 1792, Kapellm. at St. Stephen's cathedral. His important theoretical writings (complete ed. publ. by I. v. Seyfried) are: Gründliche Anweisung zur Composition (1790 and 1818; French ed., 1814); Kurzgefasste Methode, den Generalbass zu erlernen (1792; also in French); Clavierschule für Anfänger (1808); and some lesser essays. Of his 244 compositions, only 27 have been printed (pf.-fugues; pf.-quartet; a Concerto léger for pf., 2 vlns., and bass; organ-preludes; and quartets, quintets, sextets and octets for strings); the MS. scores (in the possession of Prince Esterházy-Galantha) comprise 26 masses, 43 graduals, 34 offertories, 6 oratorios; 28 trios, 42 quartets, and 38 quintets, for strings; besides a great variety of church music. A selection from his instrumental works was publ. in 'Dkm. der Tonkunst in Österreich,' vol. xvi, 2. He was Beethoven's teacher in cpt., and expressed but a poor opinion of his pupil's talents.—See Q.-Lex.

Albrici [-brē-tchē], Vincenzo, b. Rome, June 26, 1631; d. Prague, Aug. 8, 1696. About 1650, Kapellm. to Queen Christina, at Stralsund, Sweden; 1654, do. to the Elector, at Dresden; 1680, organist of the Thomaskirche, Leipzig; afterwards, church-music director at Prague. Ama'ti, a renowned family of violin-makers at Cremona, Italy. (1) Andrea, b. 1530 (?), d. 1611 (?), was the first violin-maker of the family; his violins were usually of small pattern, but show a marked advance over the Brescia instrs.—His 2 sons, (2) Antonio, b. 1550, d. 1638, and (3) Geronimo, b, 1556; d. Nov. 2, 1630, worked for a time together, producing violins of nearly the same style as their father.—(4) Niccolò, b. Dec. 3, 1596; d. Apr. 12, 1684, the most celebrated of the Amatis, improved the model in several respects, and, though generally working with a small pattern, built some so-called 'grand Amatis'—large violins of more powerful tone, and in great request. The tone of his instrs. is clearer, purer, and more sonorous than in those of his predecessors. His label is 'Nicolaus Amati Cremonens. Hieronimi filius Antonii nepos. Fecit anno 16—.' In his workshop were trained both Andrea Guarneri and Antonio Stradivari.—(5) Niccolò's son, Geronimo, b. Feb. 26, 1649; d. Feb. 21, 1740, the last of the family, was far inferior to his father as a workman.

Ama'ti, Vincenzo (called Amatus), Dr. of theol., and m. di capp. at Palermo cathedral from circa 1665; b. Cimmina, Sicily, Jan. 6, 1629; d. there July 29, 1670. Publ. sacred comps., and the opera L'Isaura (Aquila, 1664.)

Created the rôles of King Hadraot (Armida), Carlo Worms (Germania), Jack Rance (Girl of the Golden West), Golaud (Pelléas et Mélisande). Principal rôles: Count Luna (Trovatore), Lord Ashton (Lucia), Mephistopheles (Faust), des Grieux (Manon), Escamillo (Carmen). Amato is regarded as one of the finest operatic baritones.

Am'bros, August Wilhelm, distinguished musical historiograph and critic; b. Mauth, n. Prague, Nov. 17, 1816; d. Vienna, June 28, 1876; divided his student-years at Prague Univ. between law and music; was app. Public Prosecutor at Prague in 1850, but continued his musical work and study, and in 1856 attracted general notice by his essay on Die Grenzen der Musik und Poesie (2nd ed. Leipzig, 1885; Engl. transl. N. Y., 1893), a study in musical æsthetics put forth in reply to Hanslick's Vom Musikalisch-Schönen, and a treatise of high and lasting value as a corrective to Hanslick's extreme views. This was followed by Culturhistorische Bilder aus dem Musikleben der Gegenwart (1860; 2nd ed. Leipzig, 1865), a collection of admirable essays; he was then (1860) engaged by Leuckart of Breslau (now in Leipzig) to write a History of Music, his principal work, and a life-task destined to render him famous. In 1869 he was app. prof. of music, Prague Univ., and prof. of mus. history at Prague Cons.; 1872, app. to a position in the Ministry of Justice, Vienna, and also prof. in the Cons. at Vienna. In gathering the materials necessary for the history, he spent years of labor in the libraries of Munich, Vienna, and several Italian cities, having leave of absence for this purpose, and likewise a grant of money from the Vienna Academy. Vol. iii, down to Palestrina, appeared 1868; A. died before completing the fourth, which was edited from his notes and materials by C. F. Becker and G. Nottebohm; a fifth vol. was published (1882) by O. Kade from further collected materials, and W. Langhans has written a sequel, in a more popular style (under the title, Geschichte der Musik des 17., 18. und 19. Jahrhunderts), bringing the work up to date (2 vols., 1882–6). A list of names and general index were also published by W. Bäumker in 1882. A 2nd ed. (Leuckart, Leipzig, 1880) of the original 4 vols. has been printed; contents: Vol. i, The Beginnings of Music, Mus. of the Antique World, of the Greeks, etc.; vol. ii, from the Christian era down to the First Flemish School; vol. iii, from the Netherlanders to Palestrina; vol. iv, Palestrina, his contemporaries and immediate successors. Vol. i has been rewritten, not wholly to its advantage, by B. Sokolovsky. Vols. ii and iii are of peculiar value. Vol. ii was republ. (1892) in a new revision by H. Reimann; likewise vol. iv (1909), by H. Leichtentritt; vol. v was revised and enlarged (1911) by O. Kade.—Two series of entertaining essays, Bunte Blätter (1872-74; 2nd ed. by E. Vogel, 1896), are interesting to either amateurs or professionals. Ambros was also an excellent practical musician, being a fine pianist, and the composer of an opera, Bretislaw a Jitka, overtures to Othello and the Magico prodigioso, several piano-pcs., numerous songs, and 2 masses, a Stabat Mater, etc.

Ambrose (Ambrosius), b. Trier (Trèves), A.D. 333; d. Milan, Apr. 4, 397; elected Bishop of Milan in 374; canonized after death. Celebrated for his regulation (384) and development of singing in the Western Churches, by the introduction and cultivation of ritual (antiphonal and congregational) song, as practised at the time in the Eastern Church, and by the consequent adoption of the 4 authentic church-modes; his indisputable authorship of many sacred songs has earned him the title of 'Father of Christian Hymnology.' It does not appear that St. Ambrose was acquainted with the use of the letters A-G as signs of notation; his reputed authorship of the 'Ambr. Chant,' Te Deum laudamus, is mythical.—Bibliography: Biraghi, Inni sinceri e carmi di S. Ambrogio (Milan, 1862); G. M. Dreves, Aurelius Ambrosius, der Vater des Kirchengesanges (Freiburg, 1893); A. Mocquereau, Notes sur l'influence de l'accent et du cursus tonique latins dans le chant ambrosien (Paris, 1897); A. Lisbon, Jan. 11, 1859; pupil of Miraglia and Ronconi; début San Remo, 1882, in Aida. Sings all leading baritone stage-rôles; is also a fine concert-singer, and has been heard all over Europe. In 1906 he was singing at Kroll's Th., Berlin.

André, Johann, father of a musical family; b. Offenbach, Mar. 28, 1741; d. there June 18, 1799. Founder of the well-known music-publ. house at Offenbach, est. Aug. 1, 1774. He was an accomplished pianist, a composer of some 30 operas and 'Singspiele' (Der Töpfer, Erwin und Elmire, Belmonte e Constanze [Berlin, 1781, a year before Mozart's], etc.), of many instrl. works and songs (Rheinweinlied, Bekränzt mit Laub), and was the creator of the durchkomponierte Ballade, the first being Die Weiber von Weinsberg (1783). For 7 years (1777–84) he was Kapellm. at Döbbelin's Theatre in Berlin. Up to his death his establishment had issued about 1,200 numbers.—See Q.-Lex.

André, (Johann) Anton, third son of Joh. A.; b. Offenbach, Oct. 6, 1775; d. there April 6, 1842. A precocious mus. talent, pupil of Vollweiler in Mannheim 1793–96; was a fine pianist, violinist and composer before entering the Univ. of Jena; after completing his studies he made extensive travels, and on his father's death took charge of the business, adding peculiar lustre to its good name by the purchase (1800) of Mozart's entire mus. remains. He publ. M.'s autograph thematic catalogue, and supplemented it by a list of the works so acquired. By accepting the application of the lithographic process to music-printing (1779), another long stride was taken towards placing this firm in the front rank. He was an excellent composer (2 operas, symphonies, songs, etc.), a successful teacher, and a noteworthy theorist (Lehrbuch d. Tonsetzkunst [unfinished], 2 vols. on Harmony, Cpt., Canon, and Fugue, 1832–43, new revised ed. 1875; and Anleitung zum Violinspiele).—See Q.-Lex.—His sons were: (1) Carl August, b. Andrée, Elfrida, b. Wisby, Sweden, Feb. 19, 1841. Pupil of Söhrling, Norman and Gade; 1861–66, org. in Stockholm; app. org. at Cathedral in Gothenburg, 1867. Wrote the choral work, Snöfrid; a symph. for orch.; 2 symphs. for org.; a str.-quartet; a pf.-quintet; a pf.-trio; 2 romanzas for vl.; pf.-pieces; songs.

Andre'oli, Carlo, pianist and organist, b. Mirandola, Jan. 8, 1840. Pupil, and from 1875 pf.-teacher, in Milan Cons. Gave successful concerts in London, 1858. Composed nocturnes, romances, etc.—His father, Evangelista A., organist and teacher at Mirandola, was b. 1810; d. June 16, 1875.—His brother, Andre'oli, Guglielmo, b. Mirandola, Apr. 22, 1835; d. Nice, Mar. 13, 1860. Pupil of Milan Cons.; excellent pianist; made extended and successful concert tours through Europe; wrote a piano-quartet, Preludio e minuetto, and an excellent Manuale d'armonia.

Andreoz'zi [-öht'sē], Gaetano, b. Naples, 1763; d. Paris, Dec. 21, 1826; a pupil of Jommelli; composed 45 operas, the first, at the age of 16, being La Morte di Cesare for the Teatro Argentina at Rome. Went to Russia in 1784; printed 6 string-quartets in Florence, 1786, and in 1790 became m. di c. there, and the following year at Madrid; finally settled in Naples, whence poverty drove him in 1825 to Paris. He also wrote 3 oratorios.

Andre'vi, Francesco, was a prominent Spanish composer and theorist, of Italian parentage; b. Sanayuba, near Lerida, Nov. 16, 1786; d. Barcelona, Nov. 23, 1853. He took holy orders; was music-director at the cathedrals of Valencia, Sevilla, and other Spanish cities, also at Bordeaux from 1832–42, during the Carlist wars. From 1845–9 he lived in Paris, and was then called to Barcelona as maestro of the church of Our Lady of Mercy. The best of his numerous and excellent compositions are an oratorio, The Last Judgment, a Requiem, and a Stabat Mater; only a Nunc dimittis and a Salve regina have been printed. A treatise on Harmony and Cpt. has been translated into French (Paris, 1848).

Andrien. See ADRIEN.

Andries [-drēs'], Jean, b. Ghent, Apr. 25, 1798; d. there Jan. 21, 1872; from 1851 Director, and after 1856 Hon. Dir., of the Ghent Cons., where he had been prof. of vln.- and ensemble-classes since 1835; also (till 1855) solo violinist at the theatre.—Wrote: Aperçu historique de tous les instrs. de musique actuellement en usage; Précis de l'histoire de la musique depuis les temps les plus reculés (1862); Instrs. à vent. La Flûte (1866); Remarques sur les cloches et les carillons (1868).

Ane'rio, Felice, b. Rome, 1560; d. there Sept. 28, 1614; st. under G. M. Nanini; was then app. maestro of the English College, and later (Apr. 3, 1594) Palestrina's successor as composer to the Papal Chapel. His eminence is best attested by the fact that several of his comps. were for a long time supposed to be Palestrina's own. Besides numerous MSS. in Roman libraries, many of A.'s works are extant in printed collections, between 1585–1622; several books of madrigals a 5 and 6, canzonets and madrigals a 3–4, concerti spirituali a 4, litanies a 4–8, and 2 books of hymns, cantica and motets; also separate motets, etc.—See Q.-Lex.

Ane'rio, Giovanni Francesco, younger brother of Felice, b. Rome, circa 1567; d. there 1620 (?); 1575–79, chorister at St. Peter's; circa 1609, m. di c. to King Sigismund III of Poland; 1610, m. di c. at Verona cathedral; 1611, Prefect of the Seminario romano; and 1613–20, m. di c. of the Jesuit church of S. Maria dei Monti at Rome, taking holy orders in 1616. A very prolific composer in all the forms of sacred music then in vogue, many of his works being printed by the leading Italian publishers; celebrated as the arranger of Palestrina's 6-part Missa Papæ Marcelli, for 4 parts (Rome, 1600).—See Q.-Lex.

Anet, Baptiste. See BAPTISTE.

Anfos'si, Pasquale, prolific composer of operas (76 in all); b. Taggia, near Naples, Apr. 25, 1727; d. Rome, Feb., 1797. Originally a violinist, he studied composition under Piccinni, and brought out 2 unsuccessful operas, but with his third venture, L'incognita perseguitata (Rome, 1773), won popular approval, being supported by a powerful clique hostile to Piccinni. In ungenerous rivalry with his old teacher and friend, he brought out a great number of operas; his works soon palled on the Roman palate, and he sought new fields,—in Paris (1779), London (1781–3, as director of the Italian Opera), and after that in Prague, Dresden, and Berlin. Returning to Italy in 1784, he was in 1791 made m. di c. at the Lateran, and turned his attention to sacred composition (12 oratorios, masses, psalms, etc.). His once lauded works are now forgotten.

Angelet [ăhnzh-lā'], Charles-François, excellent pianist, b. Ghent, Nov. 18, 1797; d. Brussels, Dec. 20, 1832; a pupil of Zimmerman at the Paris Cons.; established himself as a teacher at Brussels, studied composition there under Fétis, and publ. various piano-pcs., a trio, a symphony, etc. Appointed court-pianist to King William I of the Netherlands in 1829.

d'An'geli, Andrea, b. Padua, Nov. 9, 1868. While pursuing his academic studies at the Univ. of Padua (Ph.D. with the diss. La Musica nel Dramma Greco), he studied comp. at the Istituto Cesare Pollini; prof. of Italian literature at the Collegio in Calegari; now (1916) prof. of Ital. lit. at the Liceo Mamiani and prof. of æsthetics and history of music at the Liceo Rossini in Pesaro; also ed. 'La Cronaca Musicale'; was the first to introduce into Italy the (until then unknown) 'lecture-recital' as 'Concerti della Università popolari.' An opera, L'Innocente (text by himself), was successfully prod. at Novi Ligure (1896; Bologna, 1897); two other operas, Il Negromante and Al Ridotto di Venezia, have not yet been prod.; author of several libretti (Carbonieri's Edith, Gibellini's Ebles di Provenza, Alberti's Myrtilla, etc.); has written a Stabat Mater, some masses, chamber-music and romances (Serate d'inverno); contributed some valuable hist. essays to var. journals (Il teatro alla moda di Benedetto Marcello; Il Petrarca musicista; Gluck, Algarotti e Wagner, in 'Cronaca'; etc.).

Angeli'ni, Bontempi Giovanni Andrea, singer, composer, theorist; b. Perugia, circa 1624; d. near there, July 1, 1705. Maestro in Rome and Venice, later in the service of the Margrave of Brandenburg and the Elector of Saxony. His opera Paride, given in Dresden, Nov. 3, 1662, was the first Italian opera ever produced there. He returned to Italy in 1694. Wrote several works, among them an Historia musica (Perugia, 1695), interesting for the discussion about the ancients' ideas of harmony.

Angelo'ni, Luigi, b. Frosinone, Papal States, 1758; d. London, 1842. Wrote a valuable monograph, Sopra la vita, le opere ed il sapere di Guido d'Arezzo, restauratore della scienza dell' arte musica (Paris, 1811).

Angerer, Gottfried, b. Waldsee, Württ., Feb. 3, 1851; d. Zurich, Aug. 19, 1909. Studied in the Cons. at Stuttgart and Frankfort; Director of the Mus. Acad. at Zurich.—Works: Ballads for male chorus, Der letzte Skalde, Sigurds Brautfahrt, Königsfelden, Des Geigers Heimkehr, Germanenzug, Der Gottesdienst des Waldes, Gotentreue, Der Königsbote, etc.

d'Anglebert, Jean - Baptiste - Henri, a distinguished pupil of Champion, and court clavicembalist to Louis XIV; b. 1628 (?), d. Paris. Apr. 23, 1691. Publ. in 1689 Pièces de clavecin avec la manière de les jouer, among which are 22 variations on Folies d'Espagne (varied before him by Corelli and after him by Scarlatti). This work shows d'A. to have been a master of the quaint clavier-style then prevailing; it is also valuable for its explanation of several old-fashioned graces.

Animuccia [-moo'tchăh], Giovanni, the distinguished predecessor of Palestrina at the Vatican; b. Florence, circa 1500; d. Rome, March, 1571. From the circumstance that he wrote the first Lauді spirituali for the lectures held by Neri in the oratory of S. Filippo, he has been styled the 'Father of Oratorio.' These Laudi were contrapuntal songs in several parts, interspersed with occasional strophes or lines sung by a solo voice for variety's sake; the first book of the Laudi was printed by Dorici (1563), the second by Blado (Rome, 1570). Other publ. works are a book of masses (1567), 2 of magnificats, a 4-part Credo, 4 books of madrigals. Modern reprints of a mass (2 movem.) and a 5-part madrigal are in Torchi's 'L'Arte mus. in Italia,' vol. i. His compositions show a gradual emancipation from the involved formalism of the Flemish school, and prove him to have been a worthy forerunner of Palestrina. He was app. maestro at St. Peter's in 1555.—See Q.-Lex.

Animuc'cia, Paolo, brother of Giovanni; noteworthy contrapuntist; was m. di c. at the Lateran, 1550–52, and died in 1563 in Rome. Only a few of his comps., found in collections of the time, are still extant.

d'Ankerts. See DANKERS, GHISELIN.

Anniba'le, called Il Padova'no (or Patavi'nus) from his birthplace, Padua; b. 1527; d. March, 1575; contrapuntist; from 1552–66, organist of 2nd organ at San Marco, Venice.—Publ. 1 book of Ricercari a 4 (1556), 1 book of madrigals a 5 (1564), 1 book of motets a 5–6 (1567), 1 book of masses a 5 (1573), 1 book of Toccate e Ricercari for org. (1604). Two Ricercari for organ are reprinted in vol. iii of Torchi's 'L'Arte mus. in Italia.'—See Q.-Lex.

An'schütz, Johann Andreas, b. Koblenz, Mar. 19, 1772; d. there Dec. 26, 1856. Founder, in 1808, of a mus. society, also a school for vocal and instr. music, at Koblenz. He was a lawyer by profession, but also a good pianist and conductor, and composed pf.-variations and numerous well-received vocal works (songs; 2 arias for alto; some sacred music, etc.).—His son, An'schütz, Karl, b. Koblenz, Feb., 1815; d. New York, Dec. 30, 1870. Pupil of Friedr. Schneider; in 1844 he assumed the directorship of the music-school founded by his father, but went in 1848 to London (where he conducted the Wednesday Concerts for a time), and in 1857 to N. Y. as conductor of Strakosch & Ullmann's opera-troupe. In September, 1862, he opened a season of German opera on his own account, which deserved the success it failed to obtain. From 1860–2 he conducted the Arion singing-society. He was a gifted conductor and cultivated musician; his publ. comps. consist of a few piano-pieces.

An'sorge, Konrad (Eduard Reinhold), pianist; b. Buchwald, near Liebau, Silesia, Oct. 15, 1862; 1880–2, pupil of Leipzig Cons.; 1885, of Liszt; after long concert-tours in Germany, Russia, Austria, and America, he settled in Berlin as a successful concert-player; 1898–1903, teacher in the Klindworth-Scharwenka Cons.—Works: 3 sonatas, Ballade, Traumbilder, Polish Dances, for pf.; songs; orchl. and chamber-music; string-sextet; 2 string-quartets; Requiem for m. ch. and orch.

Antegnati [-tān-yah'tē], Costanzo, celebrated organ-builder; b. Brescia, circa 1557; d. there circa 1620. Organist at Br. cathedral. Wrote sacred comps. (masses, motets, psalms, and canzoni), publ. Venice, 1619–21, and pieces in organ-tablature; also an interesting and rare treatise, L'Arte organica (Brescia, 1608).—3 Ricercari for organ are reprinted in vol. iii of Torchi's 'L'Arte mus. in Italia.'

Anti'co, Andrea. See ANTIQUUS, ANDREAS.

Antipov', Constantin, b. Russia, Jan. 18, 1859.—Compositions for piano: Op. 1, 3 Études; op. 2, 3 Valses; op. 3, Vars. on an original Russian theme; op. 5, 5 pieces (the Romance is fine); op. 6, 4 pieces (Nocturne); op. 8, 2 Preludes; op. 9, 3 Miniatures (Valse); op. 10, Prelude; op. 11, Valse and Étude; op. 12, Nocturne; op. 13, Impromptu and Valse;—op. 7, Allegro symphonique for orchestra.

Anti'quis, Johannes [Giovanni] de, maestro di c. in the ch. of San Niccolo at Bari (Naples). Publ. Villanelle alla Napolitana (1574), which contains a few pieces by him; a coll. of Canzonette a 2 (1584); and the first book of his 4-p. madrigals (Venice, 1585).

Anti'quus, Andreas (also A. de Antiquiis Vene'tus, or Andrea Anti'co), b. Montona (Istria), latter half of the 15th century. Music-printer in Rome and (1520) Venice, probably the first of his trade after Petrucci, who publ. many of A.'s Frottole (Venice, 1504–8).

Antoine, Paul. Pen-name of ERNEST CLOSSON.

Anto'ny, Franz Joseph, b. Münster, Westphalia, Feb. 1, 1790; d. there Jan. 7, 1837. 1819, music-director at the cathedral; 1832, organist, succeeding his father (Joseph A., b. Jan. 12, 1758; d. 1836). Publ. Archäologisch-liturgisches Gesangbuch des Gregorianischen Kirchengesangs (1829), and Geschichtliche Darstellung der Entstehung und Vervollkommnung der Orgel (1832). Composed church-music.

A'pel, Johann August, b. Leipzig, Sept. 17, 1771; d. there Aug. 9, 1816. Dr. juris; author of a series of articles on rhythm ('Allg. musikal. Zeitung,' 1807–8), and a large work, Metrik (1814–16, 2 vols.). His Gespensterbuch (1810–14) suggested to Weber the subject of Der Freischütz.

Apell', (Johann) David von, b. Kassel, Feb. 23, 1754; d. there 1833. Theatre-Intendant, and Dir. of Kassel Singing-Society; member of several foreign mus. societies. Prolific composer: 4 operas, several ballets and cantatas, 3 symphonies, 3 quartets, etc.

Ap'pel, Karl, violinist, b. Dessau, Mar. 14, 1812; d. there Dec. 9, 1895. Pupil of Linden and Schneider; leader of the ducal orchestra; composed an opera, Die Räuberbraut (Dessau, 1840), and very popular humorous male quartets.

Appunn, Georg (August Ignaz), b. Hanau (Kassel), Sept. 1, 1816; d. there Jan. 14, 1885; a musician of versatile talent, a player on almost all mus. instrs., and up to 1860 a teacher of theory, instrl. playing, and singing in Hanau and Frankfort; then occupied himself exclusively with acoustical experiments and the construction of acoustical apparatus, notably an harmonium of 53 degrees within an octave.—His son Anton (b. June 20, 1839; d. Jan. 13, 1900), student in Leipzig Cons., continued his father's researches.

Apri'le, Giuseppe, one of the finest contralti of his time; b. Bisceglia (Apulia), Oct. 29, 1738; d. Martina, 1814; a pupil of Avos, and the teacher of Cimarosa. From 1763 he sang in the principal theatres of Italy and Germany, then settling in Naples as a singing-master, as which he was famous. His vocal method, The Italian Method of Singing, with 36 Solfeggî, first publ. by Broderip (London), has been reprinted in many editions and several languages; he also wrote vocal music, solfeggi, etc.—See Q.-Lex.

Ap'thorp, William Foster, b. Boston, Mass., Oct. 24, 1848; d. Vevey (Switzerland), Feb. 19, 1913. Writer and critic. A student at Harvard, where he graduated in 1869, he st. pf., harm., and cpt. under J. K. Paine from 1863–7; then pf. under B. J. Lang. Taught pf. at Boston 'National Coll. of Music' (1872–3); then, until 1886, taught successively pf., harm., cpt., fugue, and general theory at the N. E. Cons.; also, for some years, æsthetics and mus. hist. in the Coll. of Mus. of Boston Univ. He began his career as music critic on the 'Atlantic Monthly' (from 1872–7); was eng. as mus. critic on the 'Evening Transcript' from 1881, also dram. critic after 1882; contributed many articles on music and drama to leading periodicals; edited the 'Program-books' of the Boston Symph. Orch. from 1892–1901; and publ. the following works: Hector Berlioz. Selections from his Letters and . . . Writings (N. Y., 1879); Musicians and Music-lovers, and Other Essays (N. Y., 1894); Jacques Damour, and Other Stories, Englished from Zola (Boston, 1895); and By the Way—About Music and Musicians (Boston, 1899). Critical editor of Scribner's 'Cyclopedia of Music and Musicians' (N. Y., 1888).

Aptom'mas, John and Thomas, two brothers, b. at Bridgend, England, in 1826 and 1829 respectively; remarkable harp-players; both lived in London as teachers; the younger was from 1851–6 in New York. Compositions elegant, though hardly equal to Parish-Alvars'; they also wrote a History of the Harp (London, 1859).

Ara, Ugo, b. Venice, July 19, 1876. Pupil of P. A. Tirindelli (vl.) at the Cons. Benedetto Marcello in Venice; 1889, at age of 13, member of orch. at Th. 'La Fenice.' In 1894 he continued his vl. studies with César Thomson at the cons. of Liège. After a few months, however, owing to violinist's cramp, he was obliged to give up playing altogether. The next seven years (1894–1901) he spent in Vienna, studying comp. with R. Fuchs at the Cons. In 1902 he was able to resume his playing, and at the suggestion of Pochon, a fellow-student under Thomson, he devoted himself to the viola in order to join the Flonzaley Quartet, which was established in 1903, and has since won worldwide recognition.

Ara'ja, Francesco, opera-composer; b. Naples, circa 1700; d. Bologna, circa 1770. His first opera, Lo matremmonejo pè mennetta (Naples, 1729), made his name; in 1735 he went to Petrograd with an Italian opera-troupe, and wrote many successful operas in Italian and Russian, his La Clemenza di Tito (1751) being the first opera written in the Russian language. Returned to Italy in 1759. He wrote 22 operas; also church-music, and a Christmas oratorio, La Natività di Gesù.

Ara'uxo (or Araujo) [ăh-rah'ŏŏ-hoh], Francisco Correa de, Dominican monk and eminent Spanish musician, b. circa 1581; Bishop of Segovia, where he died Jan. 13, 1663. Wrote the important treatise Libro de tientos y discursos de música . . . intitulado: Facultad orgánica . . . (1626); two others, Casos morales de la música, and De Versos, are in MS.

Arban [-băñn'], Joseph-Jean-Baptiste-Laurent, b. Lyons, Feb. 28, 1825; d. Paris, Apr. 9, 1889. Virtuoso on the cornet; teacher at Paris Cons., cond. of the music of the Opéra balls, inventor of several wind-instrs. Publ. a Method for Cornet and Sax-horn; also many transcrs. for orchestra.

Arbeau [ar-boh'], Toinot, pen-name of Jean Tabourot; b. Dijon, 1519; d. Langres, 1595 (?). In his curious Orchésographie (1589, 1596), dancing, and playing on the drum and fife, are taught catechetically, aided by a kind of tablature; the work is historically valuable.

Arbos, (Enrique) Fernández, b. Madrid, Dec. 25, 1863. Vl.-pupil of Monasterio in Madrid, of Vieuxtemps in Brussels, and of Joachim in Berlin; while in Brussels st. also comp. with Gevaert. Orch., and made a successful tour of the continent; taught vl. for a short time at the Hamburg Cons.; returned to Madrid at the invitation of the Queen of Spain, and was head of the vl. dept. of the cons. there; came to England in 1889 as concert-master of the Glasgow Symph. Orch. A series of successful concerts given in London in 1890 led to his appointment as vl. prof. at the R. C. M., a position which he still holds; has appeared also with considerable success as conductor in London, Liverpool, Petrograd and Moscow. Since 1902, he has spent three months every year in Spain, touring that country at the head of the Madrid Symph. Orch.—Works: A comic opera, El Centro de la Tierra (Madrid, 1895); 3 pf.-trios; numerous pieces for violin.

Ar'buckle, Matthew, famous American cornet-player and bandmaster; b. 1828; d. New York, May 23, 1883. Wrote Complete Cornet Method (Boston, no date).

Ar'buthnot, John, British physician; b. Arbuthnot, Scotland, 1667; d. London, Feb. 27, 1735; app. physician in ordinary to Queen Anne in 1709. He was one of the founders of the Scriblerus Club (1714), and was friendly to Handel during the composer's wrangles with his opera-company; his 'Miscellaneous Works' throw sharp side-lights on various persons of interest; also wrote anthems.

Ar'cadelt, Jacob (or Jachet Arkadelt, Archadet, Arcadet, Harcadelt), distinguished Flemish composer and teacher; b. circa 1514; d. Paris, after 1557. 'Maestro dei putti' to the Papal Chapel (1539), 1540 singer in the same, in 1544 holding the office of 'Camerlingo'; went in 1555 with the Duc de Guise to Paris, where he is mentioned in 1557 as 'Regis musicus.' His Roman period was devoted to secular, his Paris period to sacred composition. Of his numerous extant works, 6 books of 5-part madrigals (Venice, 1538–56, his finest and most characteristic comps.), and 3 books of masses in 3–7 parts (Paris, 1557), are chief among those preserved in print. Modern reprints include the 4-part 'Madrigale parlando' Il ciel che rado (Riemann; 'Hdbch. d. M.-G., Part II), the 4-part madrigal Il bianco e dolce cigno (Moskwa coll.); others in Eitner, vol. xxiii, and Maldeghem's 'Trésor.' —See Q.-Lex.

d'Archambeau [dar-shähn-boh'], Ivan, b. near Liège, Sept. 28, 1879. He received his earliest mus. instruction from his father, an excellent musician. In 1895 he began the study of the violoncello with A. Massau. As soon as the boy was able to take part in quartet-playing his father, solely for the purpose of artistic recreation, formed a family quartet, consisting of himself and his three sons, Ivan being the 'cellist. In 1899 d'A. won the gold medal at the Cons. of Verviers, and then went to Édouard Jacobs at Brussels. Having completed his studies under Hugo Becker at Frankfort, he made, in 1903, a successful tour of Germany, Belgium and Scotland. Pochon then persuaded him to abandon the virtuoso career to become a member of the Flonzaley Quartet.

d'Archambeau, Jean-Michel, composer; b. Herve, Belgium, Mar. 3, 1823; d. Verviers, August, 1899. In 1838, teacher of music at Herve College; 1848, organist at Petit-Rechain.—Works: 1 operetta, 2 masses for 3 men's voices, 12 litanies, 7 motets; also several Romances sans paroles for pf.

Archangel'sky, Alexander, b. in the Russian province of Pensa, Oct. 23, 1846. Cond. church-choirs from his 16th year, and in 1880 organized a chorus of his own with which he toured Europe. He was the first to substitute women for boys in the vocal music of the Russian Church—an experiment widely copied. He has publ. 2 masses, a Mass for the Dead, and numerous a cappella choruses.

Archer, Frederick, organist; b. Oxford, England, June 16, 1838; d. Pittsburgh, Oct. 22, 1901. Taught by his father; also studied in London and Leipzig. Organist, conductor, and opera-director in London; went to New York in 1881, and became org. of Plymouth church, Brooklyn, later of the Ch. of the Incarnation, N. Y. In 1885, founded the mus. weekly, 'The Key-Note,' of which he was the editor; 1887, conductor of Boston Oratorio Society. From 1895–98, conductor of the Pittsburgh (Pa.) Orchestra; succeeded by Victor Herbert.—Works: Publ. a cantata, King Witlaf's Drinking-horn; pieces for organ and pf.; songs, part-songs, etc. Wrote The Organ, theoretical text-book; and The College Organist.

Ardi'ti, Luigi, b. Crescentino, Piedmont, July 16 [acc. to his autobiography], 1822; d. Hove, near Brighton, England, May 1, 1903. Pupil of Milan Cons. till 1842, his opera, I Briganti, being a student-production. Began his career as a violinist; became director of opera, and honorary member of the Accademia Filarmonica at Vercelli in 1843, going thence to Milan, Turin, and Havana as an opera-conductor. In 1847, '48, '50, etc., he visited New York with the Havana opera-company; conducted the performance at the opening of the N. Y. Acad. of Music in 1854. Finally left America in 1856, going to Constantinople, and thence to London, where he settled in 1858, as conductor of Her M.'s Theatre, and resided there as a well-liked teacher and composer. He also led a campaign of Italian opera in Germany, at Petrograd (1871 and '73), and (for some years) annually at Vienna, from 1870. He acted as conductor in various London theatres up to 1895. His operas, I Briganti, Il Corsaro, La Spia (first prod. New York, 1856), had fair success; but his best and most popular comps. are his numerous songs, especially the vocal waltzes (Il Bacio, L'Arditi, Le Tortorelle, etc.). Wrote My Reminiscences (London, 1896). He was a virtuoso on the piano.

Ardi'ti, Michele, Marchese; b. Presicca, Naples, Sept. 29, 1745; d. Naples, Apr. 23, 1838. Archæologist and amateur composer, pupil of Jommelli; wrote 1 opera, Olimpiade; also sacred and secular cantatas, motets, symphonies, overtures, arias w. orch., pf.-sonatas, etc.

Arens, Franz Xavier, b. Neef (Rhenish Prussia), Oct. 28, 1856. Came to America in early youth; pupil of his father and Singenberger of Milwaukee; also st. in Germany w. Rheinberger, Wüllner, Abel, Janssen, and Kirchner; conductor of Cleveland 'Gesangverein' and Philh. Orch. (1885–8); 1890–92 in Europe, giving American composers concerts. In 1900 he establ. the People's Symph. Concerts in N. Y. to furnish good music at a nominal price to the poorer classes. The success of these orch. concerts, conducted by A. personally, gradually led to the inclusion of chamber-music concerts by the Kneisel Quartet, etc., and the movement has been extended to several of the larger Eastern cities.

Aren'sky, Anton Stepanovitch, Russian comp. and pianist; b. Novgorod, July 31, 1861; d. in a sanatorium at Tarioki, Finland, Feb. 26, 1906, after a long illness.

From 1879–82, pupil of Johanssen and Rimsky-Korsakov at Petrograd Cons.; in 1882 he was app. prof. of harm. and comp. at the Imp. Cons., Moscow, and in 1895 succeeded Balakirev as conductor of the Imp. Court Choir at Petrograd, resigning 1901. Arensky's muse was lyrical rather than dramatic; some smaller pf.-pieces are peculiarly delightful. 'In his tendency as a comp. he more nearly approaches Tchaikovsky than the radical young Russian school.' [RIEMANN].—Works: 3 operas: A Dream on the Volga (op. 16; Moscow, 1892), Raphael (op. 37; Moscow, '94), Nal and Damajanti (op. 47; Petrograd, '99); music to Pushkin's poem The Fountain of Bakhtchissarai, for solo, ch. and orch. (op. 46); ballet Nuit d'Égypte (op. 50; Petrograd, 1900); The Diver, ballade for solo, ch. and orch. (op. 61); ballade The Wolves, for bass voice with orch. (op. 59); festival Coronation Cantata (op. 25); 2 symphonies (op. 4, in B min.; op. 22, in A); Marche solennelle for orch. (op. 18); Intermezzo for string-orch. (op. 13); vln.-concerto in A min. (op. 54); pf.-concerto (op. 2); Fantaisie on epic Russian songs, for pf. with orch. (op. 49); 4 Suites for 2 pfs. 4 hands (op. 15, 23, 33, 62; also orchestrated by the comp.); pf.-quintet in D (op. 51); 2 string-quartets (op. 11, in G; op. 35, in A min., the latter for vln., vla. and 2 'celli); a pf.-trio in D min. (op. 32); pieces for 'cello and pf. (op. 12, 56), and for vln. and pf. (op. 30); many pieces for solo pf. (op. 1, 6 canons; op. 5, 6 pieces; op. 19, 3 pieces; op. 20, Bigarrures; op. 24, 3 Esquisses; op. 25, 4 Morceaux; op. 28, Essais sur des rythmes oubliés; op. 34, Pièces enfantines [orig. for pf. 4 hands]; op. 36, 24 Morceaux; op. 41, 4 Études; op. 42, 3 pieces; op. 43, 6 Caprices; op. 52, 6 pieces, Près de la mer; op. 63, 12 Preludes for pf. 4 hands; op. 65, Children's Suite; op. 66, 12 pieces); pieces for vocal ensemble; numerous songs.—Also publ. a Manual of Harmony (transl. into German), and a Handbook of Musical Forms.

A'ria, Cesare, b. Bologna, Sept. 21, 1820; d. there Jan. 30, 1894. St. piano and theory with Gius. Pilotti; later in Bol. Cons. under P. Mattei. A favorite of Rossini. Lived for some years in France and England as teacher of singing, pf., and comp.; 1840, music-director of the Teatro Comunale, Bologna; 1850, President of the Accademia Filarmonica. Composed fine church-music (a Dies irae is particularly noteworthy).

Ari'bo Scholas'ticus, probably a native of the Low Countries; d. circa 1078. Wrote a valuable treatise, Musica [printed in Gerbert's 'Scriptores,' vol. ii], containing a commentary on Guido d'Arezzo's writings.

d'Arien'zo, Nicola, dramatic comp.; b. Naples, Dec. 23, 1842; pupil of Labriola (pf.), Fioravanti and Moretti (cpt.), and Mercadante (comp.); 1879, director of the R. Cons., Naples, in which he was prof. of cpt. and comp. from 1877 (pupils, van Westerhout, Leoncavallo).—First operas (in Neapol. dialect), Monzù Gnazio o La Fidanzata del Parrucchiere (Naples, 1860), and I due Mariti (Naples, 1866), were succ.; others are Le Rose (1868), Il Cacciatore delle Alpi (1870), Il Cuoco (1873), I Viaggî (Milan, 1875), La Figlia del Diavolo (Naples, 1879; severely criticised for a straining after realistic and original effect), I tre Coscritti (Naples, 1880), La Fiera (1887), Pita di Lister (MS.), etc. Also wrote an oratorio, Il Cristo sulla croce, a Pensiero sinfonico, overtures, some vocal music (4 Nocturnes), and pf.-pieces; and a manual, L'invenzione del sistema tetracordo e la moderna musica (1879), favoring pure intonation instead of equal temperament, and discriminating a 3rd mode (of the Minor Second) besides the usually accepted Major and Minor modes; also, Scuola di composizione musicale (1899), and several important histor. treatises: Un predecessore di Aless. Scarlatti (1891; on Gesualdo [di Venosa]); Dell' opera comica dalle origini a G. B. Pergolesi (1887: Ger. transl. by F. Lugscheider, 1902); Il melodramma dalle origini al secolo XVIII (1900); La musica in Napoli (1900); Die moderne Oper (1902, in 'Deutsche Thalia').

Arios'ti, Attilio, b. Bologna, Nov. 5, 1666; d. circa 1740; composer of 25 operas, the first of which, Dafne, was given at Venice (1686); 1697–1703 court Kapellm. at Berlin, and for a short time the teacher of Handel; 1715–16 in London, and again 1720–27, as a rival of Bononcini, both being for a while competitors with Handel for public favor, and both defeated by his genius; in 1720 these three composed the opera Muzio Scevola in company, each taking one act. In 1727 Ariosti returned to Italy, and died in obscurity. He also wrote an oratorio, a volume of cantatas, and some 'lessons' for the viola d'amore, on which he was an accomplished performer.—See Q.-Lex.

Aristi'des Quintilia'nus, a Greek writer on music circa A.D. 160; a teacher of music at Smyrna, and celebrated from his work De Musica libri VII [printed in Meibom's 'Antiquæ Musicæ Auctores Septem' (1652)]; reprinted by Jahn (1882).

Aristo'teles (Ar'istotle), (1) b. Stagyra (Macedonia), 384 B.C.; d. 322 B.C.; a Greek philosopher, pupil of Plato. The 19th section of his Problems affords valuable information concerning the Greek system of music; further remarks are found in Book viii of the Politica and in the Poetica.—(2) Pseudonym of a writer on mensurable music of the 12th–13th centuries.

Aristox'enos, b. Tarentum, circa 354 B.C.; one of the earliest Greek writers on music. His Harmonic Elements (complete) and Rhythmical Elements (fragmentary) are the most important treatises on Greek music that are left us, excepting certain essays by Plato and Aristotle. Publ. (1868) by P. Marquand, text German and Greek, with commentaries. Also cf. Oscar Paul, Boethius u. die griechische Harmonik, and Absol. Harm. der Griechen; C. F. A. Williams, The Aristoxenian Theory of Musical Rhythm (Cambridge, 1911).

Arkwright, Godfrey Edward Pellew, musicologist; b. Apr. 10, 1864. Editor of 'The Old English Edition' (25 vols., 1889–1902; containing masques, ballets, motets, madrigals, etc., by Engl. composers of the 17th and 18th centuries); also edited some of Purcell's works in the ed. publ. by the Purcell Society (1889–1902); editor of 'The Musical Antiquary' from 1909–13.

Arm'brust, Karl F., fine organist; b. Hamburg, March 30, 1849; d. Hanover, July 7, 1896. St. Stuttgart Cons. (Faiszt); 1869, org. of St. Peter's ch., Hamburg. Teacher of org. and pf. at H. Cons. Musical critic (H. 'Fremdenblatt').

Arm'bruster, Karl, b. Andernach-on-Rhine, July 13, 1846; pupil of Hompesch at Cologne. Precocious pianist; settled in London, 1863. An influential admirer of Wagner, he has done much to spread the Wagner cult in England by means of numerous lectures; was Hans Richter's asst.-cond. at the Wagner Concerts of 1882–4; then cond. at the Royal Court Th., later at the Haymarket and Drury Lane; cond. Tristan und Isolde in 1892 at Covent Garden; 1884–94, one of the conds. at Bayreuth. 1901–13, musical adviser to the London County Council.

Armes, Philip, b. Norwich, Engl., Aug. 15, 1836; d. Durham, Feb. 10, 1908. Chorister at Norwich and Rochester cathedrals; articled at the latter to Dr. Hopkins in 1850, and asst.-organist till 1856; org. of Chichester cath. in 1861; in 1862, of Durham cath.; in 1897, Queen Victoria Lecturer at Trinity Coll., London, and prof. of music at Durham Univ. Arnaud [-noh'], Abbé François, theoretical writer; b. Aubignon, near Carpentras, July 27, 1721; d. Paris, Dec. 2, 1784; wrote many essays on miscellaneous mus. subjects (Collected Writings, Paris, 1808, 3 vols.). In the Mémoires pour servir à l'histoire de la révolution opérée dans la musique par M. le Chevalier Gluck, he warmly espouses the great reformer's principles. Cf. E. de Bricqueville, Fr. A. (Paris, 1833).

Arne, Michael, natural son of Dr. Arne, b. London, 1741; d. there Jan. 14, 1786 [not 1806]; a clever dramatic composer (9 operas, the best being Cymon, 1767); writer of a number of songs, and a skilful player on the harpsichord. In 1779, music-director at Dublin Theatre; from 1784 onward he conducted some of the Lenten oratorios at London theatres. A curious episode in his career was his search for the philosopher's stone (c. 1768), during which he neglected his profession and ruined himself pecuniarily.

Arne, Thomas Augustine, one of the foremost of English composers; b. London, March 12, 1710; d. there March 5, 1778. By dint of stolen nightly practice he became a fine player on the spinet and violin, in despite of his father's wishes that he should study law; the latter finally yielded to the inevitable, and Arne, free to pursue his mus. work, set to music various texts—Addison's Rosamond and Field's Tragedy of Tragedies (1733); a masque, Dido and Æneas (1734); and Zara (1736). In 1736 he married Cecilia Young, a fine singer and a prime favorite of Handel's. In 1738, as composer to the Drury Lane Th., he set Dalton's adaptation of Comus to music, a composition which firmly established his reputation. The music to the masque of Alfred (1740) contains, among other fine songs, the celebrated Rule, Britannia. While residing in Dublin (1742–4) he brought out 2 new operas, Britannia and Eliza, and the musical farce Thomas and Sally. He became comp. to Vauxhall Gardens, London, in 1745. Further dramatic works were Congreve's masque, The Judgment of Paris (1740), Colin and Phœbe (1745), Artaxerxes (1762), Olympiad (1765), and the music to Mason's Caractacus (1776); also settings for songs in As You Like it and 'Where the Bee Sucks' in The Tempest; etc. His 2 oratorios are Abel (1755) and Judith (1761). Dr. A. was the first to introduce female voices into oratorio-choruses (Judith). Besides the above, he composed numerous minor texts, and wrote orch. overtures, vln.-sonatas, organ-music, harpsich.-sonatas, many songs, glees, catches, canons, and the like. With the exception of 2 years in Dublin, A. lived continuously in London as a composer and concert-giver; he was created Mus. Doc. (Oxon.) in 1759. The London 'Musical Times' for Nov. and Dec., 1901, contains a sketch of his life and a fairly complete list of his compositions.—See Q.-Lex.

d'Arne'iro, (José Augusto) Ferreira Veiga, Viscount, distinguished Portuguese composer, b. Macao, China, Nov. 22, 1838; d. San Remo, July, 1903; pupil (1859) of Botelho (harm.), Schira (cpt. and fugue), and Soares (pf.), at Lisbon. Wrote the ballet Ginn (1866); 2 operas, L'Elisire di giovinezza (Lisbon, 1876) and La Derelitta (ib., 1885); and a Te Deum (his chief work), performed Lisbon, 1871, and later in Paris under the modern and much-affected title of Symphonie-Cantate.

Arnold, Johann Gottfried, violoncellist and composer; b. Niedernhall, n. Öhringen, Feb. 15, 1773; d. Frankfort, July 26, 1806. Pupil of Romberg and Willmann; after concert-tours in Germany and Switzerland, he was app. 1st 'cellist at Frankfort Th.—Works: Symphonia concertante f. 2 flutes w. orch.; 5 'cello-concertos; 6 sets of vars. f. 'cello (op. 9); pieces f. guitar; etc.

Arnold, Karl, b. Neukirchen, n. Mergentheim, Württemberg, March 6, 1794; d. Christiania, Nov. 11, 1873. Pupil of A. Schmitt, J. A. André, and Karl Vollweiler, at Frankfort; fine pianist; lived successively at Petrograd (1819), Berlin (1824), Münster (1835), and Christiania (1849), where he conducted the Philh. Soc.. and was org. of the principal church.—Works: an opera, Irene (Berlin, 1832); pf.-sextet, and sonatas, variations, fantasias, etc., for pf.

Arnold(-Strothotte), Maurice, b. St. Louis, Jan. 19, 1865. He received his first instruction from his mother, and then attended the Cincinnati Coll. of Mus. (1880–3); st. in Berlin with Vierling and Urban, at Cologne Cons. with Wüllner, Neitzel and G. Jensen, and finally in Breslau with Max Bruch; returned to St. Louis, where he estab. himself as teacher, vlst. and cond. of light opera. In 1894 a perf. of his American Plantation Dances f. orch. in New York aroused the interest of Dvořák (at that time dir. of the Nat. Cons.) in the possibilities of negro-melodies, and he offered A. a position as instr. of comp. at the Cons.; since then A. has been living in New York, with the exception of one season, when he was cond. at the Princess Th., London, and of another season, touring Germany; since 1905 dir. of 'Progressive Stage Soc.,' N. Y.—Works: The Wild Chase, cantata; a symphony in F min.; Dramatic Overture; Danse de la Midway Plaisance and Turkish March, for orch.; sonata for vl. and pf. in E min.; Minstrel Serenade for vl. and pf.; a fugue for pf. (8 hands); numerous pcs. for pf. (Caprice espagnol, Banjoënne, etc.); songs. A comic opera, The Merry Benedicts, was prod. in Brooklyn (1896); has in MS. another comic opera and a grand opera, Cleopatra.

Arnold, Richard, excellent violinist; b. Eilenberg, Prussia, Jan. 10, 1845. Went to the United States in 1853; returned to Europe in 1864 to study under Ferd. David at Leipzig; from 1869–76, first violin in Theodore Thomas's orch.; 1878–91, leader and solo violin in the N. Y. Philharm. Club; elected member of the Philharm. Soc. in 1877; concert-master, 1880–1909; vice-president in 1896. Organized the R. Arnold String Sextet in 1897. Living in New York as a concert-violinist and teacher. A. d. 1918

Arnold, Samuel, b. London, Aug. 10, 1740; d. there Oct. 22, 1802; educated by Gates and Nares as a chorister of the Chapel Royal, he early showed a gift for composition, and in 1763 was commissioned to write an opera for Covent Garden—The Maid of the Mill—successfully produced in 1765. This was followed, up to 1802, by 49 stage-pieces (operas, mus. after-pieces, and pantomimes). His first oratorio, The Cure of Saul, came out in 1767; Abimelech, The Resurrection, The Prodigal Son, and Elijah, followed in the order given. He took the degree of Mus. Doc. (Oxon.) in 1773, and in 1783 succeeded Dr. Nares as organist and composer to the Chapel Royal, for which he composed several services and anthems. In 1789 he was app. conductor of the Acad. of Ancient Music; in 1793, organist of Westminster Abbey. His edition of Handel's works, begun in 1786, embraces 36 vols., but is incomplete and not free from errors. His principal work, 'Cathedral Music' (1790, 4 vols.), is a collection in score of the finest cathedral services by English masters of 2 centuries, forming a sequel to Boyce's work of like name; republ. by Rimbault (1847).—See Q.-Lex.

Arnold, Yourij von, b. Petrograd, Nov. 13, 1811; d. Karakash, n. Simferopol, Crimea, July 20, 1898; a student and soldier, who in 1838 devoted himself wholly to music; Fuchs (harm.) and Gunke (cpt.) were his teachers. He comp. a grand opera, The Last Days of Pompeii; an operetta; a prize cantata Swätlana; and 2 overtures. After 1840 he wrote for various newspapers; lived in Leipzig 1863–70 on the staff of the 'Neue Zeitschrift f. Musik,' also publ. (1867–8) a 'Neue allg. Zeitschrift f. Theater u. Musik.' Resided 1870–94 in Moscow, where he opened a music-school, and lectured on mus. history at the Univ. in 1888; from 1894 in Petrograd, as singing-teacher.—Chief writings: Die alten Kirchenmodi, historisch u. akustisch entwickelt (Leipzig, 1878); Theory of the Old-Russian Church- and Folk-Song (Russian, in Moscow); Harmonization of Old-Russian Church-Song (Russian; Moscow, 1886); various treatises on the Neumes; etc.—Publ. 3 vols. of Memoirs (Moscow, 1892).

d'Astorga, Emanuele (Gioachino Cesare Rincón), b. Augusta, Sicily, Mar. 20, 1680; d. circa 1750 in Spain. He came of a noble Spanish family, who, at the beginning of the 17th century, had settled in Augusta. A. was a baron in his own right from his estate Ogliastro, near Augusta. He received an excellent education, at first in Augusta, and later in Palermo, where his father had been a resident for some years when he died there in 1712. During the revolution of 1708 in Palermo A. was an officer in the municipal guard. In 1712 he was in Vienna; in 1713 in Znaim; 1714–15 in London; 1717–18 senator in Palermo. After that he lived in Spain in the service of the king; 1744 he sold his Sicilian estate. He had practised music from childhood, but never took it up as a profession. To his contemporaries he was known as a man versed in the sciences, a fine singer, cembalist and composer. His reputation was won through his only opera Dafni (Genoa, 1709; other known productions at Barcelona, 1709, and Breslau, 1726), and numerous chamber-cantatas, of which he himself publ. a volume (containing 12) in 1726 at Lisbon. The earliest known performance of his most famous work, a Stabat Mater for 4 voices, took place in London in 1752. In 1878 R. Franz publ. a new ed. The current romantic account of A.'s life, first publ. by Fr. Rochlitz in vol. ii of 'Für Freunde der Tonkunst' (1825), has been proved to be pure invention.—In his book Emanuel d'Astorga (Leipzig, 1911) Hans Volkmann gives an authentic account based upon the evidence of original documents. A second vol., dealing with the works of A., is to follow shortly.

He was, successively, organist of St. George the Martyr, London, and a member of the Prince's private band; teacher of the Duchess of York (1791), and of the Princess of Wales (1795); org. of St. Paul's (1796); composer to the King's Chapel Royal, succeeding Dupuis (1796); org. of the King's private chapel at Brighton (1821), and org. of the Chapel Royal (1836).—Works: 21 operas; anthems, services, glees, songs, pf.-sonatas, etc. He occupied a high place among English composers, and was a warm friend of Mendelssohn.—See Q.-Lex.

Auber [oh-bär'], Daniel-François-Esprit, a prolific composer of French operas, was born at Caen in Normandy, Jan. 29, 1782; d. Paris, May 14, 1871. His father, an art-dealer and print-seller in Paris, wished his son to devote himself to business, and sent him to London to acquire a knowledge of the trade. Auber's irresistible inclination for music, however, manifested itself, and in 1804 he returned to Paris, following thenceforward his natural bent. His first opera, Julie, a resetting of an old libretto, was produced by amateurs at Paris in 1811, with an orchestra of six stringed instruments. Cherubini happened to be among the auditors; he, recognizing Auber's talent, supervised his further instruction, and while with him, A. wrote a mass for 4 voices. Auber's first public productions, Le Séjour militaire (1813), and Le Testament et les Billets-doux (1819), were indifferently received; but his next opera, La Bergère châtelaine (1820), was a success. From that date until 1869, scarcely a year passed without the production of one or several operas, in all over forty. One of these, Masaniello, ou la Muette de Portici, produced in 1828, was considered a masterpiece by Wagner, and with Meyerbeer's Robert le Diable and Rossini's Guillaume Tell, laid the foundations of French grand opera. Its portrayal of popular fury is so graphic, that the Brussels riots followed its performance in that city on August 25, 1830. It seems to have been inspired by the revolutionary spirit prevalent at that time in Paris; it differs wholly from Auber's other operas, which are comedy-operas, the best of them composed to libretti by Scribe. In this genre Auber is foremost among French composers; and although it has been written of him that "in his early essays, he displayed an original style, but afterwards became an imitator of Rossini, and disfigured his melodies with false decorations and strivings for effect," his music is sparkling and has the true Parisian 'chic' and polish. La Muette de Portici, Le Maçon, Fra Diavolo, Les Diamants de la couronne, and a few of his other operas, are still stock-pieces in France and Germany. In 1835, A. succeeded to Gossec's chair in the Academy; in 1842, he was appointed Director of the Conservatory of Music in Paris, as Cherubini's successor; in 1857, Napoleon III made him imperial 'maître de chapelle.' The virility of his personality was evinced by his last opera, Rêves d'amour, a title suggestive of youthful feeling, produced when he was 87 years of age. Auber was a thorough Parisian, and during the latter years of his life was said not to have set foot outside the city boundaries. He remained there even during its siege by the Germans.—Cf. A. Pougin, Auber (Paris, 1873); A. Kohut, Auber (Leipzig, 1895); Ch. Malherbe, Auber (Paris, 1911).

Operas: Julie (1811), Jean de Couvin (1812), Le Séjour militaire (1813), Le Testament et les Billets-doux (1819), La Bergère châtelaine (1820), Emma, ou la Promesse imprudente (1821), Leicester (1822), La Neige, ou le nouvel Éginhard (1823), Vendôme en Espagne (1823, with Hérold), Les Trois Genres (1824, with Boieldieu), Le Concert à la Cour (1824), Léocadie (1824), Le Maçon (1825), Le Timide (1826), Fiorella (1826), La Muette de Portici (1828), La Fiancée (1829), Fra Diavolo (1830), Le Dieu et la Bayadère (1830), La Marquise de Brinvilliers (1831, together with eight other composers), Le Philtre (1831), Le Serment, ou les Faux-Monnayeurs (1832), Gustave III (Le Bal masqué, 1833), Lestocq (1834), Le Cheval de bronze (1835; extended into a grand ballet in 1857), Actéon, Les Chaperons blancs, l'Ambassadrice (1836), Le Domino noir (1837), Le Lac des Fées (1839), Zanetta (1840), Les Diamants de la couronne (1841), Carlo Broschi (1842), Le Duc d'Olonne (1842), La Part du Diable (1843), La Sirène (1844), La Barcarolle (1845), Haydée (1847), l'Enfant prodigue (1850), Zerline, ou la Corbeille d'oranges (1851), Marco Spada (1852, extended to a grand ballet in 1857), Jenny Bell (1855), Manon Lescaut (1856), Magenta (1859), La Circassienne (1861), La Fiancée du Roi de Garbe (1864), Le premier jour de bonheur (1868), Rêves d'amour (1869).

Audran [oh-drähn'], Edmond, son of Marius; b. Lyons, April 11, 1842; d. Tierceville, n. Gesors, France, Aug. 17, 1901. Pupil of the École Niedermeyer, Paris; 1861, maître de ch. at church of St.-Joseph at Marseilles. His début as a composer was at Marseilles, 1862, with the opera l'Ours et le Pacha; he successfully produced about 40 other operas, operettas, etc., chiefly of a light character, in minor Parisian theatres; also wrote a mass, a funeral march f. Meyerbeer's death, etc. From 1877 he lived in Paris.—He produced the operetta La Fiancée des Verts-Poteaux (Paris, 1887; v. succ.); operetta Olivette (given Berlin, 1895, as Capitain Caricciolo; succ.); opera Sainte-Freya (Paris, 1892; succ.); operetta La Mascotte (1880; given 1700 times up to Aug. 29, '97); operetta Miss Helyett (Paris, 1890; succ.); operetta Madame Suzette (Paris, 1893; succ.); operetta Mon Prince! (Paris, 1893; succ.); 3-act lyric comedy Photis (Geneva, 1896; succ.); 3-act com. opera La Duchesse de Ferrare (Paris, 1895; mod. succ.); 4-act comic opera La Poupée (Paris, '96; mod. succ.); comic operetta Monsieur Lohengrin (Paris, 1896; v. succ.); Les petites femmes (1897); and others.

Audran, Marius-Pierre, operatic tenor and song-composer; b. Aix, Provence, Sept. 26, 1816; d. Marseilles, Jan. 9, 1887. Pupil of E. Arnaud. After successful appearances at Marseilles, Brussels, Bordeaux, and Lyons, he became first tenor at the Opéra-Comique, Paris, soloist at the Cons. Concerts, and member of the Cons. Jury. After travelling (1852–61), he settled in Marseilles, becoming (1863) Director of the Cons. there, and prof. of singing.

Au'er, Carl. See FROTZLER.

Au'er, Leopold, distinguished violinist; b. Veszprém, Hungary, June 7, 1845. Pupil of the Conservatories at Pest (Ridley Kohnetòl) and Vienna (Dont, 1857–8); finally, of Joachim. From 1863–5, leader in Düsseldorf, and 1866 in Hamburg; since 1868, soloist to the Tsar and of the Imp. orch. at Petrograd, and violin-prof. at the Cons. 1887–92, cond. of the concerts of the Imp. Russ. Mus. Soc.; 1895, elevated to the rank of the hereditary Russian nobility; 1903, State Councillor. He is equally famous as a virtuoso and a teacher. Among his pupils are Elman, Zimbalist, Parlow, Heifetz, etc.

Au'gener & Co., London firm of musicsellers and publishers, founded 1853 by George A. They began the publication of the famous 'Augener's Edition' in 1867; publishers, since 1871, of 'The Monthly Musical Record.'

Au'gustine (Augusti'nus), Aure'lius, better known as St. Augustine; b. Tagaste, Numidia, 354; d. as bishop at Hippo, Algeria, 430. Renowned father of the Latin Church, educated at Madaura and Carthage. His writings contain valuable information concerning Ambrosian song; that entitled 'De Musica' treats only of metre.—Cf. De musicis scriptoribus Romanis by K. Schmidt (1899).

Aulin, Tor, violinist and composer; b. Stockholm, Sept. 10, 1866; d. there March 1, 1914. St. in Berlin with E. Sauret (vln.) and Ph. Scharwenka (comp.). In 1887 he established the A. Quartet, which soon became famous also in Russia and Germany; from 1889–1902 concert-master at the royal Opera in Stockholm, with frequent leave for extended concert tours, which established his reputation as the greatest Scandinavian violin virtuoso since Ole Bull; after 1902, cond. of the Stockholm Philh. Soc.—Works: An orch. suite, Meister Oluf, op. 22; 3 concertos for vln.; several vln. solos.

Aurelia'nus Reomen'sis, monk at Réomé in the 9th century; wrote a treatise, Musica disciplina, published by Gerbert in 'Scriptores,' vol. i. It contains the earliest information regarding the character of the church-modes. Cf. H. Riemann, Handbuch der Musikgeschichte, I, 2, p. 56.

Aus der Ohe, Adele, pianist; b. circa 1865 in Germany. From the age of 7, taught by Kullak in Berlin; three years later made her début there with orch. When 12 years old she went to Liszt, with whom she remained seven years. Her tours of Europe and the U. S. were successful, more because of the dazzling brilliancy of her technic than because of depth of feeling. Her publ. works are 2 pf.-suites, op. 2, 8; Concert-étude, op. 3; 3 pcs. for pf., op. 4; songs, op. 5, 6, 7.

Austin, Florence, concert-violinist; b. Galesburg, Mich., March 11, 1884. Pupil of H. Schradieck in New York, 1895–8; then, until 1901, of O. Musin at Liège Cons., winning first prizè (first time carried off by an American); made a succ. début in New York with the Paganini concerto (Dec., 1901), and has since appeared with several of the larger symph. orchs. in the U. S. and Canada, as well as in recital; soloist at the Maine Fest., 1914; since 1912, head of violin department, Musin Virtuoso School, Newark, N. J.

Austin, Frederick, baritone and comp.; b. London, Mar. 30, 1872. Pupil of his uncle, Dr. Hunt (pf., comp.) and H. Grimshaw (org.) at Birkenhead. He occupied several positions as org. in Liverpool, and, until 1906, taught theory at the Coll. of Mus. there. At the same time he studied singing with Ch. Lunn; made his début as concert singer in 1902 in London, meeting with more than ordinary success, so that he is in great demand for the various Engl. festivals; made his operatic début as Gunther in London (1908); has since sung the baritone parts in Wagner at Covent Garden, His Majesty's Th., with Beecham's company, and with Denhof (in Engl.). Also noteworthy as composer.—Works: Overture, Richard III; rhaps. for orch., Spring; symph. poem, Isabella; Festival Prelude for string-orch. and org.; a pf.-trio; org.-pieces; pf.-pieces; church-music. —His brother, Ernest, b. London, Dec. 31, 1874, abandoned a mercantile career, and appeared in 1907 as a composer of extreme tendencies.

Aute'ri-Manzocchi [-tsŏh'kē], Salvatore, composer of operas and songs; b. Palermo, Dec. 25, 1846; pupil of Platania at Palermo, 1867–9, and Mabellini at Florence, 1870–3. His countrymen hold his works in high esteem.—Operas: Dolores (Florence, 1875; very succ.); Il Negriero (Milan, 1878); Stella (Piacenza, 1880; v. succ.); Il Conte di Gleichen (Milan, 1887); the 3-act opera seria Graziella (Milan, '90; mod. succ.); and Severo Torelli (Bologna, 1903). His first opera, Marcellina, was never performed.

d'Auvergne [doh-värñ'], Antoine, b. Moulins (Clermont-Ferrand), Oct. 4, 1713; d. Lyons, Feb. 11, 1797. Violinist, pupil of his father. He went to Paris in 1739, played next year in the 'Concerts Spirituels,' joined the King's band in 1741, and the Opéra orch. in 1742. He conducted the latter 1751–5; was Director until 1790, and retired at the outbreak of the Revolution to Lyons. His first stage-work was a ballet, Les Amours de Tempé (1752); in 1753 he made a sensation with Les Troqueurs, the first genuine 'opéra comique'; it resembled the Italian 'intermezzi' with spoken dialogue instead of recitative, and soon superseded the 'comédie à ariette' (vaudeville with incidental music). He produced 9 other stage-pieces, and left 3 more in MS. Cf. Du Roure de Paulin, La vie et les œuvres d'A. d'A. (Paris, 1911).

Aventi'nus, Johannes (real name Turmair), b. Abensberg (whence Aventinus), July 4, 1477; d. Jan. 9, 1534. Author of Annales Boiorum (1554), containing considerable information, not wholly trustworthy, about musical matters; editor of Nicolaus Faber's Musica rudimenta admodum brevia, etc. (1516).

Averkamp, Anton, b. Willige Langerak, Holland, Feb. 18, 1861. Pupil of De Lange in Amsterdam, Kiel in Berlin, and Rheinberger in Munich (comp.); also of Schimon, Hasselbeck and Messchaert (voice). Founded in 1890 the 'Amsterdamsch A Cappella Coor,' which soon became famous for its splendid interpretation of early music; won golden opinions on frequent tours of Holland and Belgium; also visited Berlin (1906) and Paris (1909). A. has contributed numerous articles to Dutch papers; is knight of the order of Orange-Nassau; a dir. of the 'Vereeniging voor nederlandsche muziekgeschiedenis' and 'Maatschappij tot bevordering van toonkunst.'—Works: Elaine und Lancelot, symph. poem; 2 ch. works w. orch., Decora Lux and Die versunkene Burg; 2 a capp. choruses, Adstant angelorum chori and Te Deum; a sonata for pf. and vln. in D; songs. An opera, De Heidebloem, has not yet been produced.

Av'ison, Charles, English composer, organist and writer; b. Newcastle-on-Tyne, 1710; d. there May 9, 1770. St. in Italy; then under Geminiani in London. Organist in Newcastle.—Publ. works: 26 concertos a 7 (4 violins, vla., 'cello, bass), 12 pf.-concertos w. string-quartet, 18 quatuors f. pf. w. 2 vlns. and 'cello, and 3 vols. of sonatas f. harpsich. w. 2 vlns.; also An Essay on Mus. Expression (London, 1752, '53, '75); also publ., with J. Garth, Marcello's Psalm-Paraphrases (1757), with Engl. words, and biogr. of Marcello.

Ayers, Frederic, composer, b. Binghamton, N. Y., Mar. 17, 1876. Pupil of Edgar Stillman Kelley (1897–1901) and Arthur

Foote (1899).—Works: Overture, From the Plains; a sonata for pf. and vln.; a string-quartet; a pf.-trio; several fugues; songs.

Ayrton, Edmund, English composer and org.; b. Ripon, Yorkshire, 1734; d. Westminster, May 22, 1808. Pupil of Nares. From 1780–1805, Master of Children of the Chapel Royal. Wrote 2 full services; also anthems.

Ayrton, William, son of preceding; b. London, Feb. 24, 1777; d. there Mar. 8, 1858. Received a thorough liberal and musical education; one of the founders and a director of the London Philh. Soc. As conductor of the King's Theatre he introduced several of Mozart's operas to English audiences. 1813–26, critic of 'Morning Chronicle'; 1837–51, of 'Examiner'; 1823–33, editor of the 'Harmonicon.' Also edited Knight's Musical Library (1834–7), and Sacred Minstrelsy (1835).

Azvedo [ăhth-vā-′], Alexis-Jacob, French writer and critic; b. Bordeaux, March 18, 1813; d. Paris, Dec. 21, 1875. Author of several valuable monographs, particularly G. Rossini, sa vie et ses œuvres (Paris, 1865); also of Félicien David (1868); contributor to 'La France musicale,' 'Le Siècle,' 'La Presse,' 'Le Ménestrel,' and (1859–70) correspondent to 'L'Opinion nationale.' He was a zealous partisan of the Italian school, and many of his criticisms are biased.

Bab'bi, Christoph (Cristoforo), violinist; b. Cesena, 1748; d. Dresden, 1814. From 1781, leader in the Electoral orch.—Works: Symphonies, vln.-concertos, and quartets and duets for flute.

Babbi'ni, Matteo, celebrated tenor; b. Bologna, Feb. 19, 1754; d. there Sept. 22, 1816. Pupil of Cortoni; début 1780. His great success brought him engagements in London, Petrograd, Vienna (1785), and Berlin. Settled in Paris, a court favorite, till the Revolution drove him back to Italy; in 1792 he was again in Berlin; 1796, in Trieste. He died wealthy.—Brighenti published an 'Elogio' of B. (Bologna, 1822).

Bac'chius (Senior), Greek theorist (circa 350 A.D.), two treatises by whom are still extant, published in Greek, Latin and French by Mersenne, Meibom, Morel, and Bellermann.

Bacfart (or Bacfarc, Bacfarre, Bekwark), Valentin, a celebrated lutenist whose real name was Graew or Greff, b. Kronstadt, 1507; d. Padua, Aug. 13, 1576. Supposedly a pupil of Antonio Rotta; lived 1549–67 at the court of Sigismund Augustus of Poland, from 1566–68 at the Imperial court in Vienna, afterwards in Italy. Publ. various works in tablature: Intablatura (Lyons, Part I, 1552), Tablature de Luth (Paris, 1564), and Harmoniæ musicæ (two parts, Cracow, 1565–8).—Cf. monograph (in Polish) by H. v. Opienski, 'Bekwark, the Master-Lutenist' (1906).—See Q.-Lex.

Bach is the name of the illustrious family which, during two centuries, supplied the world with a number of musicians and composers of distinction. History possesses few records of such remarkable examples of hereditary art, which culminated in Johann Sebastian.

The genealogy of the family is traced to Hans Bach, born circa 1561 at Wechmar, a little town near Gotha. Veit Bach, d. Mar. 8, 1619, the presumed son of this Hans, and Caspar Bach, are the first of the family concerning whose musical tendencies we have any information. Veit was by trade a baker, and emigrated to Hungary; returning to Wechmar, he settled there as a miller and baker. His chief relaxation consisted in playing on the zither. His son, Hans, b. c. 1580, d. Dec. 26, 1626, was known as 'der Spielmann,' (i. e., 'the player'), although he followed the supplementary occupation of carpet-weaver. He received instruction from the town-musician of Gotha, the above-mentioned Caspar, thought to have been his uncle. As a travelling violinist, to be found at all the principal festivals, he was popular throughout Thuringia, and his three sons, Johann, Christoph, and Heinrich, inherited his ability. The Bach genealogy mentions a second son of Veit, presumably Lips Bach (d. Oct. 10, 1620), who also had three sons, who were sent to Italy, to study music, by the Count of Schwarzburg-Arnstadt. From Hans and Lips, the two sons of Veit, sprang the main branches of the Bach family, whose male members filled so many positions as organists, cantors and Kapellmeister throughout Thuringia, that, in some instances, even after there had ceased to be any member of the family among them, the town-musicians were known as 'the Bachs.' When the families became numerous and widely dispersed, they agreed to assemble on a fixed date each year. Erfurt, Arnstadt, Steinach, and Meiningen were the places chosen for these meetings, which continued until the middle of the 18th century, as many as 120 persons of the name of Bach then assembling. The hours, interspersed with music, were devoted to the narration of their experiences, mutual criticism, encouragement and advice, and the examination of the compositions of each member, which eventually formed a collection known as the Bach Archives. A part of this interesting collection was in the possession of Karl Ph. E. Bach at the end of the 18th century.

The principal members of the Bach family are enumerated below, in alphabetical order, with their chronological list-numbers.

1. Bach, Johann (eldest son of Hans), b. Nov. 26, 1604; d. 1673. Org. at Schweinfurt, then at Suhl. In 1635, dir. of the 'Raths-Musikanten'; 1647, org. of the church at Erfurt. Left MS. comps. of considerable merit.

2. Bach, Christoph (2nd son of Hans, and grandfather of Johann Sebastian), b. Apr. 19, 1613; d. Sept. 14, 1661. Court and town-musician of Eisenach. Distinguished organist; left several organ-pieces (in the B. Archives).

3. Bach, Heinrich (3rd son of Hans), b. Wechmar, Sept. 16, 1615; d. Arnstadt, July 10, 1692. From 1641, organist of Arnstadt church for 51 years. Left MS. organ-pieces and hymn-tunes.

4. Bach, Johann Egidius (2nd son of Johann [1]), b. 1645; d. 1717. Succeeded his father as municipal mus.-dir. and organist of the church at Erfurt. Left church-comps., among others the motet a 9 for double choir, Unser Leben ist ein Schatten (1696).

5. Bach, Georg Christoph (eldest son of Christoph [2]), b. Eisenach, Sept. 6, 1641; d. April 24, 1697. Cantor and composer at Schweinfurt. His motet, Siehe, wie fein und lieblich, for two tenors and bass with acc. of vln., 3 'celli, and bass, is in the B. Archives.

6. Bach, Johann Christoph (eldest son of Heinrich [3]), organist and composer (instrumental and vocal) of the highest rank among the earlier Bachs; b. Arnstadt, Dec. 6, 1642; d. Eisenach, Mar. 31, 1703. From 1665 to 1703, court and town-organist of Eisenach. Works in the B. archives: Wedding hymn f. 12 voices, Es erhub sich ein Streit, a comp. of great beauty; motet f. 22 voices, for the festival of St. Michael; alto solo, w. accomp. of vln., 'cello, and bass; and 2 motets a 4. In MS. in the Berlin Royal Library: Motet a 8 f. double choir, Lieber Herr Gott, wecke uns auf (1672); motet a 4, Ich lasse dich nicht; motet a 8, Unseres Herzens Freude hat ein Ende; motet a 8, Herr, nun lässest Du deinen Diener; Sarabande for clavecin w. 12 variations; etc.—See Q.-Lex.

7. Bach, Johann Michael, brother of preceding, and as org. and composer almost his equal in merit; b. Arnstadt, Aug. 9, 1648; d. Gehren, May, 1694. Org. and town-clerk of Gehren from 1673; also maker of harpsichords, vlns., etc. Composed motets, preludes, and fugues.

8. Bach, Johann Ambrosius (2nd son of Christoph [2]), distinguished org.; b. Erfurt, Feb. 22, 1645; d. Eisenach, 1695. He was the father of J. Sebastian. His twin-brother:

9. Bach, Johann Christoph, d. Arnstadt, Aug. 25, 1694, was court violinist and 'Stadtpfeifer' at Arnstadt from 1671. There was such a remarkable resemblance between the brothers, in every particular, voice, gestures, moods, and style of music, that even their respective wives could distinguish them only by the color of their clothes.—Church-comp. a 4, Nun ist alles überwunden.

10. Bach, Johann Bernhard (son of Johann Egidius [4]), org. and comp. f. organ, one of the best of his generation; b. Erfurt, Nov. 23, 1676; d. Eisenach, June 11, 1749. Organist at Erfurt, Magdeburg, and the successor of Johann Christoph [6], at Eisenach in 1703. Also cembalist in the Duke of Saxe-Eisenach's orch.—Works: Harpsich.-pieces, several chorale-arrangements f. org., and 4 orchestral suites, these latter now in the Berlin Royal Library.

11. Bach, Johann Nikolaus (eldest son of Johann Christoph [6]), b. Eisenach, Oct. 10, 1669; d. there 1753. In 1695, app. org. at Jena, where he estab. a harpsichord-factory, made many improvements in the instrs., and directed his efforts to establishing equal temperament in pf. and org.-tuning.—Works: Suites f. org. and harpsich.; motets, and other sacred comps.; also a comic operetta, Der Jenaische Wein- und Bier-Rufer, a scene from Jena college-life.

12. Bach, Johann Ludwig (son of Johann Michael [7]), b. Steinbach, 1677; d. 1741. Court Kapellm. at Saxe-Meiningen. MS.: Requiem f. 2 choirs, w. instrl. accomp., in Berlin Royal Library.

13. Bach, Johann Ernst (only son of Johann Bernhard [10]), b. Eisenach, Sept. 1, 1722; d. there Jan. 28, 1777 (1781?). St. law at Leipzig for 6 years, returning to Eisenach and practising as advocate. In 1748 was app. asst. to his father, org. of St. George's ch.; 1756, app. hon. Kapellm. at Weimar, w. pension. Publ. comps., Sonatas f. clavecin w. vln., etc.; many others in MS.

14. Bach, Johann Christoph (brother of Johann Sebastian, and eldest son of Johann Ambrosius [8]), b. Erfurt, June 16, 1671; d. Ohrdruf, Feb. 22, 1721. He was organist at Ohrdruf, and his distinguished brother's teacher on the clavichord.

15. Bach, Johann Sebastian, the most famous of the family, and one of the great masters of music; b. Eisenach, Mar. 21 (bapt. Mar. 23), 1685; d. Leipzig, July 28, 1750. He first learned the violin from his father (Joh. Ambrosius [8]). His mother, Elizabeth, née Lämmerhirt, was a native of Erfurt. Both his parents dying in his tenth year, he went to live with his brother, Johann Christoph [14], at Ohrdruf, who taught him the clavichord; but the boy's genius soon outstripped his brother's skill, and led to somewhat harsh treatment by the latter. Unable to obtain the loan of a MS. vol. of works by composers of the day, Sebastian secretly obtained possession of the work, and, by the light of the moon, painfully and laboriously copied the whole, within six months, only to have it taken from him, when his brother accidentally found him practising from it. He recovered it when his brother's death occurred shortly after. Left to his own resources, J. S. went to Lüneburg with a fellow-student named Erdmann, and both were admitted as choristers at St. Michaels ch., also receiving gratituous scholastic education. The fame of the family had preceded Sebastian, for in the choice collection of printed and MS. music of the ch. were to be found the comps. of Heinrich and J. Christoph B. [6]. A fellow-Thuringian, George Böhm, was the org. of St. John's ch., and Bach attentively studied his compositions. He also often went on foot to Hamburg, to hear the famous old Dutch organist Reinken, and to Celle, where French music was exclusively used in the services of the Royal Chapel. With indefatigable industry he developed his technical skill on the violin, clavichord, and organ, and perfected himself in the art of composition; often working and studying the whole night through. In 1703 he became violinist in the Weimar court orch., but the following year quitted this post for the more congenial one of org. of the new church at Arnstadt. Some of his comps. of this early period, for clavichord and organ, are of importance. In 1705 he obtained leave of absence, and walked to Lübeck, to make the acquaintance of the famous organist Dietrich Buxtehude. He was so impressed with this master's style, that he trebled his leave of absence, and returned only after a peremptory summons from the church-consistory of Arnstadt. He received favorable offers from different places, and June 29, 1707, accepted the app. as org. at Mühlhausen. On Oct. 17 he married his cousin, Maria Barbara Bach, daughter of Johann Michael [7]. The following year he went to Weimar, played before the reigning duke, and was at once offered the post of court organist. In 1714 he was made 'Concertmeister.' All this time he was writing much church- and organ-music. In his autumn vacations he made professional clavichord- and organ-tours. In 1713 he visited Kassel and Halle, Leipzig in 1714 (where he furnished all the organ-music for a service cond. in the Thomaskirche, and prod. a cantata), Halle again in 1716, and Dresden in 1717. In this town his challenge to Marchand, a French organist of high reputation, was evaded by the latter's failure to appear. In 1717 B. was app. Kapellm. and director of chamber-music to Prince Leopold of Anhalt, at Köthen, and this period is especially rich in the production of orchestral and chamber-music. In 1719 he revisited Halle, hoping to meet Handel; but the latter had just left for England. In 1720, during his absence at Carlsbad, his wife died suddenly. In the autumn of the same year he applied, though (owing to bribery) without success, for the organistship of the Jacobikirche, Hamburg. Here he again met the aged Reinken, whose admiration he excited by his brilliant playing. In 1721 he married his second wife, Anna Magdalene Wülken, a daughter of the court-trumpeter at Weissenfels. Thirteen children were born to them. Of highly-cultured musical taste, she participated in his labors, and wrote out the parts of many of his cantatas. B. prepared 2 books of music especially for her. In May, 1723, he succ. Johann Kuhnau as cantor at the Thomasschule, Leipzig, becoming also org. and dir. of music at the two principal churches, the Thomaskirche and the Nicolaikirche, and continuing in the service of Prince Leopold of Anhalt as 'Kapellm. von Haus aus.' He further received the app. of hon. Kapellm. to the Duke of Weissenfels, and, in 1736, that of court composer to the King of Poland, Elector of Saxony. He remained in his post at Leipzig for 27 years, and there composed most of his religious music. He often visited Dresden, where his eldest son, Wilhelm Friedemann, was app. in 1733 organist of the Sophienkirche. On these occasions he frequently attended the Italian opera, then cond. by Hasse. His second son, Karl Philipp Emanuel, was app. in 1740 chamber-musician to Frederick II of Prussia. He communicated to his father the king's oft-expressed wish to see and hear him; and on May 7, 1747, with his son Wilhelm Friedemann, B. arrived at Potsdam. Here, at the king's request, he tried, and improvised upon, the various Silbermann pianos in the different rooms of the palace, to the admiration of his royal host, and of the musicians who followed them from room to room. The next day B. tried, in a similar manner, the principal organs in Potsdam, finally improvising a 6-part fugue on a theme proposed by the king. On his return to Leipzig he wrote a 3-part fugue on this theme, a Ricercare in 6 parts, several canons inscribed Thematis regii elaborationes canonicæ, and a Trio for flute, violin and bass; dedicating the whole to Frederick as a Musikalisches Opfer. — Bach was nearsighted from childhood, and later his eyes showed symptoms of weakness, probably due to the strain of his youthful night-labors; in 1749 an unsuccessful operation resulted in total blindness, and his hitherto robust health also declined. His sight was suddenly restored on July 10, 1750; but ten days later, stricken by apoplexy, he died. He worked to the end, dictating the chorale Vor deinen Thron tret' ich hiermit, his last composition, a few days before his death.

Clearness and acuteness of intellect, strength of will, irresistible persistency, a love of order, and a high sense of duty, were his leading characteristics. His home-life was of the happiest description. Among the long list of his distinguished pupils were Johann Ludwig Krebs, Gottfried August Homilius, Johann Friedrich Agricola, Philipp Kirnberger, Johann Theophilus Goldberg, Marpurg, Joh. Kaspar Vogler; also his own sons Wilhelm Friedemann, Karl Philipp Emanuel, and Johann Christoph Friedrich, for whose instruction he wrote the Clavierbüchlein and the Kunst der Fuge. He engraved several of his own works on copper; invented the 'viola pomposa' (an instrument between viola and 'cello), and a 'Lauten-Clavicembalum' (a clavichord with catgut strings); he promoted the adoption of the tempered system of tuning keyboard stringed instrs.; and introduced the style of fingering which, with comparatively few modifications, is still in use.

Bach's compositions mark an epoch. They are a fusion of two eras—the polyphonic contrapuntal (thematic development by strict and free imitation) and the harmonic tonal (chord-combinations founded on the modern system of major and minor keys). His originality and fecundity of thematic invention are astounding; moulded with his consummate contrapuntal art, and the freedom born of full mastery, polyphonic structures were reared which will be the admiration of ages. His style is elevated, and of sustained individuality in melody, rhythm, and harmony; the momentum of his grand fugues is inexorable as the march of Fate. As an inexhaustible mine for study, the complete critical edition published 1851–1900 in 60 volumes by the 'Bach-Gesellschaft,' a society founded in 1850 by Schumann, Otto Jahn, Hauptmann, K. F. Becker, and the publisher Härtel, demands special recognition. The Schirmer Complete Edition of Bach's Organ Works, in 8 volumes, ably edited by Charles-Marie Widor and Dr. Albert Schweitzer (5 vols. publ. up to 1916; the others delayed by the European war), with voluminous Notes and directions for playing, is unique. The Peters' edition of B.'s works is also valuable. Few of them were publ. during his lifetime; Mizler's 'Musikalische Bibliothek' (1754) contains an almost complete catalogue. Bach's importance was but meagerly appreciated by his contemporaries, and for half a century after his death he was practically ignored. Some few works were then occasionally performed, or even published; but Mendelssohn, by a performance of the St. Matthew Passion at Berlin, in 1829, first drew general attention to the great value of Bach's comps. The centenary of his death (1850) was marked by the formation, at Leipzig, of the 'Bach-Gesellschaft.' 'Bach-Vereine,' societies for the cultivation and production of B.'s music, exist at Leipzig, Berlin, London, and in many other European cities.

Works: Vocal: The 5 sets of sacred Cantatas for every Sunday and feast-day, already mentioned, besides several special ones, e. g., Gottes Zeit ist die beste Zeit, and the Trauerode on the death of the Electress of Saxony; 5 Passions, including the gigantic St. Matthew, the St. John, and the doubtful St. Luke; a Christmas Oratorio, in 5 parts; Grand Mass in B m., and 4 smaller do.; motets; 2 Magnificats; 5 Sanctus; many secular cantatas, including two comic ones.—Instrumental: Very numerous pieces f. pf. (i. e., clavichord):— Inventions in 2 and 3 parts; 6 'small' French suites; 6 'large' English suites; Preludes and Fugues, including the Wohltemperirtes Clavier in 2 parts with its 48 Preludes and Fugues in all keys (cf. art. Busoni); pf.-sonatas w. one or more instrs., among them the famous 6 sonatas for pf. and vln.; solo sonatas f. violin and 'cello; solos, trios, etc., etc., for different instrs. in various combinations; concertos for 1 to 4 pfs.; violin and other instrl. concertos with orchl. overtures and suites; and many organ comps. (fantasias, toccatas, preludes, fugues, and chorale-arrangements).

16. Bach, Wilhelm Friedemann (Bach of Halle), eldest son of J. Sebastian; b. Weimar, Nov. 22, 1710; d. Berlin, July 1, 1784. Pupil of his father (pf.), and, at 15 years of age, of Graun at Merseburg (vln.). Also st. at the Thomasschule, and at the Univ. of Leipzig, where he distinguished himself in mathematics. Org. of the Sophienkirche, Dresden, 1733–47; of the Marienkirche, Halle, 1747–64. Of superior gifts, grand organist, dexterous fugue-player, and, after his father, the most clever musician in Germany, he unfortunately gave way to dissipation, was removed from his offices, and died in misery. MS. works in the Berlin Royal Library; many have been printed. Cf. M. Falck, W. F. Bach. Sein Leben u. seine Werke, m. themat. Verzeichniss seiner Kompositionen (Leipzig, 1913).—See also Q.-Lex.

17. Bach, Karl Philipp Emanuel (the Berlin or Hamburg Bach), 3rd [and 2nd surviving] son of J. Sebastian; b. Weimar, Mar. 8, 1714; d. Hamburg, Dec. 14, 1788. He studied philosophy and law at Leipzig and Frankfort-on-the-Oder; but the inherited passion for music, and completeness of musical study under his father, decided his profession. He conducted a singing-society at Frankfort, for which he also composed. In 1738 he went to Berlin, and was app. chamber-musician and clavecinist to Frederick the Great. In 1767 he went to Hamburg, succ. Telemann as 'Musikdirector' of the principal church there, a position he held until death. He was one of the most brilliant performers of his time, and his compositional style was light, pleasing, and elegant, rather than of great profundity. He may be looked upon as the father of the modern school of pf.-playing, originator of the sonata- and symphony-forms, later perfected by Haydn, Mozart and Beethoven, and a promoter of orchestra development. His important theoretical work, Versuch über die wahre Art, das Clavier zu spielen (2 parts, 1753–62), clumsily reëdited by Schelling in 1857; new ed. by W. Niemann, 1906), contains detailed explanations concerning the embellishments in clavichord-playing. His compositions are also voluminous (thematic list by A. Wotquenne, 1905); for clavier they number 210 solo pieces; 52 concertos w. orch.; quartets, trios, duets, sonatas (v. Bülow edited 6 for the Peters' Ed.; C. F. Baumgart edited the entire Sonatensammlung für Kenner und Liebhaber, in 6 books, for Leuckart), sonatinas, minuets, polonaises, solfeggi, fugues, marches, etc. Also 18 orchl. symphs.; 34 miscellaneous pcs., f. wind-instrs.; trios f. fl., vln., and bass; do. f. vln. and bass; flute-, 'cello-, and oboe-concertos; soli f. fl., viola di gamba, oboe, 'cello, and harp; duets f. fl. and vln.; f. 2 vlns.; f. 2 clarinets.—Vocal: 2 oratorios, Die Israeliten in der Wüste, and Die Auferstehung und Himmelfahrt Jesu; 22 Passions; cantatas; etc.—Cf. K. H. Bitter, K. Ph. E. Bach und W. Friedemann Bach und deren Brüder (2 vols., Berlin, 1868); M. Flueler, Die norddeutsche Symphonie zur Zeit Friedrichs des Grossen, und besonders die Werke Ph. E. Bachs (Berlin, 1909).—See Q.-Lex.

18. Bach, Johann Christoph Friedrich (the Bückeburg Bach), 9th son of J. Sebastian; b. Leipzig, June 21, 1732; d. Bückeburg, Jan. 26, 1795. Also st. law at Leipzig, but adopted the profession of music, and was app. Kapellm. at Bückeburg, with a salary of 1,000 thalers. MS. works in Berlin Royal Library: Sacred cantatas w. instrl. accomp.; oratorio, the Resurrection of Lazarus, for 4 voices and orch.; instrl. symphs.; concertos, quartets, trios, vln.-quartets, sonatas, and miscellaneous pieces. Theatrical cantata, Pygmalion. Opera, Die Amerikanerin.—See Q.-Lex.

19. Bach, Johann Christian (the Milan or English Bach), 11th and youngest surviving son of J. Sebastian; b. Leipzig [bapt. Sept. 7], 1735; d. London, Jan. 1, 1782. In his 14th year, on the death of his father, he went to Berlin, to study with his brother K. Ph. Emanuel. In 1754 he became org. of Milan cath. His technical talents, and vocal comps. in popular style, won him great favor. In 1759 he accepted an app. as concert-director in London, and was also app. mus.-master to the Queen and Royal Family. In 1763 he prod. his opera Orione, ossia Diana vendicata; followed by several others, with brilliant temporary success. Cf. M. Schwarz, J. Chr. B., in 'Sbd. Int. M.-G.,' II, 3.—See Q.-Lex.

20. Bach, Wilhelm Friedrich Ernst (son of Johann Christoph Friedrich [18], and grandson and last male descendant of J. Sebastian), b. Bückeburg, May 27, 1759; d. Berlin, Dec. 25, 1845. St. with his father, and with his uncle Johann Christian, in London, and there became esteemed as a teacher, pianist and organist. On his uncle's death, he went to Paris and gave concerts. In 1789, produced a cantata at Minden before Friedrich Wilhelm II, who app. him Kapellm.; he was afterwards app. pianist to Queen Louise, and music-master to the royal princes. On the Queen's death, he was pensioned.—Comps.: Cantatas, songs, pf.-music and instrl. works; a few have been publ.

Bach, Albert Bernhard [real family-name Bak], was born in B. Gyula, Hungary, Mar. 24, 1844; d. Edinburgh, Nov. 19, 1912. St. under Marchesi at the Vienna Cons. 1869–70; also with Cunio, Weiss and Gänsbacher. In 1871 he gave his first concerts, as a bass-baritone singer, at Vienna; from 1876–7 he studied at Milan for Italian opera under Lamperti, Ronconi, and Varesi; was eng. at La Scala 1877–8, and in 1879 at the Court Opera, Pest (reëngaged in 1885); after 1886 sang in oratorio and concert (Great Britain, also Germany). As a concert-singer his specialty was Loewe (he was a member of the Berlin Loewe-Verein). Publ. lectures on Raphael, Mozart and the Renaissance (1883); Sound, Light and Color (1899). Edited 3 vols. of Loewe Ballades w. Engl. transl., Preface, etc.

Bach, August Wilhelm, b. Berlin, Oct. 4, 1796; d. there Apr. 15, 1869. Organ-virtuoso; 1822, teacher at the R. Inst. for Church-music; 1832, followed Zelter as Director; in 1858, 'Professor.' Member of the Berlin Acad. Composed the oratorio Bonifacius, and the 'sacred drama' Iphigenia in Delphi. Mendelssohn was his pupil in organ-playing.

Bach, Leonhard Emil, pianist and composer; b. Posen, March 11, 1849; d. London, Feb. 15, 1902. Pupil of Th. Kullak (pf.) and of Wüerst and Kiel (theory). 1869, teacher in Kullak's Academy, Berlin; 1874, court pianist to Prince George of Prussia. From 1882, teacher in the Guildhall Sch. of Music in London.—Works: A 1-act opera, Irmengard (London, 1892; v. succ.); 1-act opera, The Lady of Longford (London, 1894; succ.); 2-act comic opera, Des Königs Garde (Cologne, 1895; succ.); a comic opera, Das Tabakskollegium (MS.); and many salon pieces for pf.

Bach, (Dr.) Otto, b. Vienna, Feb. 9, 1833; d. Unter-Waltersdorf, July 3, 1893. Pupil of Sechter, then of Marx (Berlin) and Hauptmann (Leipzig). Kapellm. at several German theatres; 1868, artistic director of the Mozarteum, Salzburg, and Kapellm. at the cathedral; since April 1, 1880, Kapellm. at the new Votivkirche at Vienna.—Works: 5 operas, Sardanapal (1860[?]); Die Liebesprobe [Der Löwe von Salamanka] (Augsburg, 1867); Die Argonauten (1870); Lenore (Gotha, 1874); Medea (?); Der Blumen Rache, ballad f. ch. and orch.; 4 symphonies; overture Elektra; Requiem, masses, choruses, and chamber-mus.

Bachaus, Wilhelm. See BACKHAUS.

Bache [bātch], Constance, b. Edgbaston, March 11, 1846; d. Montreux, June 28, 1903. The sister of F. E. and Walter Bache, she studied at the Munich Cons., and subsequently under Klindworth and Frits Hartvigson; an accident to her hand cut short her pianistic career, and in 1883 she settled in London as a teacher and musico-literary worker. Her interesting volume, Brother Musicians, portrays her brothers' lives; she translated the books of Liszt's St. Elizabeth, Schumann's The Rose's Pilgrimage and Faust Scenes, Mozart's Bastien et Bastienne, and Humperdinck's Hänsel und Gretel; also Liszt's Letters (2 vols., 1894), Hans von Bülow's Letters and Literary Remains (1896), Heintz's analyses of Tristan und Isolde, Die Meistersinger, and Parsifal, and other works; also composed the songs To my love and The rain is falling.

Bache, Francis Edward, b. Birmingham, Sept. 14, 1833; d. there of consumption, Aug. 24, 1858. Pupil of Mellon (vln.), and Bennett (theory); 1853–5 at Leipzig Cons. (Plaidy and Hauptmann). A gifted composer. —Works: 2 operas, Which is which? (1851), and Rübezahl (1853); concerto for pf. and orch., in E; a pf.-trio; solo pieces for pf.; songs, etc.

Bache, Walter, excellent pianist, brother of preceding; b. Birmingham, June 19, 1842; d. London, March 26, 1888. Pupil of J. Stimpson (org. of Birm. Town Hall), and (1858–61) of Plaidy, Moscheles, Hauptmann and Richter at Leipzig. 1862–5, studied with Liszt at Rome; also began his career as a concert-giver and teacher. 1865, returned to London. He was an ardent disciple of Liszt, and did much to introduce his works to the British public. It was mainly through his efforts that the Liszt scholarship was founded at the R. A. M., where he was prof. of pf. for several years.

Bachmann, Alberto Abraham, b. Geneva, Switzerland, March 20, 1875. Studied vln. at the Cons. of Lille, winning first prize in 1884; then pupil of Ysaye (1885–8), Thomson (1888–9), Hubay (1890–1), Brodsky (1891), Petri (1891–4); has made extended tours of Europe; in U. S., 1916; recipient of many orders of France, Spain, Portugal, Denmark, Turkey and Persia. Has publ. a vln.-sonata in D m.; 2 vln.-concertos (G m., A m.); about 250 pieces for vln. and an equal number of transcriptions for vln. Author of Les grands violinistes du passé (Paris, 1913; an authoritative work); Le Violon (1906); Gymnastique à l'usage des violinistes (1914). At present (1916) he is engaged on a large Encyclopédie du Violon.

Bachmann, Anton, court-musician and instrument-maker at Berlin, inventor of the machine-head method of tuning 'celli and double-basses; b. 1716; d. Mar. 8, 1800.— Karl Ludwig B., his son and successor, b. 1743, d. 1809, was a good viola-player, belonging to the royal orch.; his wife, Charlotte Karoline Wilhelmine B., née Stöwe, b. Ba'i [bah'ē] (or Baj), Tommaso, b. Crevalcuore, n. Bologna, c. 1660; d. Rome, Dec. 22, 1714. Tenor singer at the Vatican; m. di c. in 1713. A disciple of Palestrina, his posthumous fame rests on his 5-part Miserere, sung during Holy Week, alternately with those by Allegri and Baini, in the Papal Chapel. This work is publ. (Choron, Burney, Peters) in various collections of music of the Papal Chapel.

Baïf, Jean-Antoine de, b. Venice, 1532; d. Paris, Sept. 19, 1589. Gave concerts at Paris; publ. 2 works in lute-tablature, 12 sacred songs, and 2 books of 4-part secular chansons (all lost). Of greater importance were his attempts to imitate antique poetic metres in French poems of his own, many of which were set to music (by Jacques Maudit, 26 Chansonettes mesurées a 4 [1586], and by Claude Le Jeune, Le Printemps [1603, 39 numbers]). Both of these collections, edited by Henri Expert, have been reprinted in 'Maîtres Musiciens' as Books x and xii–xiv, respectively (1899–1901).

Bailey, Marie Louise, concert-pianist, b. Nashville, Oct. 24, 1876; st. from 1889 in Leipzig Cons. with C. Reinecke, winning a scholarship, and later with Leschetizky, Vienna. Début Feb. 28, 1893, at Gewandhaus, Leipzig, after which she played by request before King Albert of Saxony, and received the title of 'Kgl. Sächs. Kammervirtuosin.' Returning to America, she first appeared in Carnegie Hall, N. Y., with the Damrosch Orchestra; then made a long and successful tour of the U. S. and Canada. Miss B. has publ. a Menuet de concert for pf., and a Fantaisie on American national airs.

Baillot [bah-yoh'], Pierre-Marie-François de Sales, one of the most celebrated of French violinists; b. Passy, Oct. 1, 1771; d. Paris, Sept. 15, 1842. His first teachers were Polidori of Florence, at Passy, and (1780) Sainte-Marie, at Paris. From 1783–91 he st. under Pollani, at Rome; then returned to Paris, where Viotti procured him the position of leader in the Th. Feydeau. Still doubtful, apparently, as to earning a living as a musician, he obtained a minor appointment in the Ministry of Finance, and held it until 1795, when, on the strength of his continually growing reputation as a concert-violinist, he was app. prof. of vln. at the Cons. He made up for lost time by diligent study under Cherubini, Reicha, and Catel. His first foreign tour, to Russia, was undertaken 1805–8, and followed by others through Belgium, Holland and England (1815–16), Switzerland and Italy (1833), etc. In 1821 he was made leader at the Grand Opéra, and in 1825 solo violinist in the royal orch.—His chief work is the admirable text-book, L'Art du Violon (1834). With Rode and Kreutzer he wrote a Méthode du Violon, adopted by Paris Cons., and republished in countless editions and many languages; he also edited the Méthode de Violoncelle by Levasseur, Catel and Baudiot, and wrote essays: Notice sur Grétry (1814); Notice sur Viotti (1825); and others.—His principal compositions are 10 vln.-concertos; 3 string-quartets; 15 trios for 2 vlns. and bass, 6 duos for 2 vlns.; 30 sets of airs variés; 24 preludes in all keys; a symphonie concertante for 2 vlns. with orch.; a sonata for pf. and vln., etc.; mostly difficult, and not much played nowadays. He had several distinguished pupils—Habeneck aîné, Mazas, the two Danclas, etc.

Baillot, René-Paul, son of preceding; b. Paris, Oct. 23, 1813; d. there Mar. 28, 1889; prof. of ensemble-playing at Paris Cons.

Bai'ni, Abbate Giuseppe, a composer, writer, and critic of ultra-conservative tendency; b. Rome, Oct. 21, 1775; d. there May 21, 1844. Pupil of his uncle, Lorenzo B.; later of Jannaconi, the maestro of St. Peter's, who had him app. singer in the Pontifical choir, and whom he succeeded in 1817. B.'s life-work was the monograph Memorie storico-critiche della vita e delle opere di Giovanni Pierluigi da Palestrina (Rome, 1828; German transl. by Kandler, w. notes by Kiesewetter, 1834). He likewise wrote a Saggio sopra l'identità de' ritmi musicali e poetici (1820). His most celebrated comp. is a 10-part Miserere (1821), given alternately, during his lifetime, with those of Allegri and Bai at the Sistine Chapel, during Holy Week. Others are Psalms and Hymns a 4; Hymns a 8; masses, motets, church-concertos, a Te Deum, etc.—Haberl publ. an essay on B. in the 'Kchm. J.' (1894).—See Q.-Lex.

Baj, Tommaso. See Bai.

Bajet'ti, Giovanni, stage-composer; b. Brescia, Italy, circa 1815; d. Milan, April 28, 1876. For many years leader of orch., in La Scala, Milan, where he produced Gonzalvo (opera, 1841), L'Assedio di Brescia (1844), Caterina o la figlia del bandito (1847), Faust (ballet, 1848), Uberto da Brescia (1866), and Il genio d'Italia (Piacenza, 1843); all with success.

Baker, Benjamin Franklin, b. Wenham, Mass., July 10, 1811; sang in churches in Salem, Boston, and Portland; in 1837, took charge of the music in Dr. Channing's church at Boston, and in 1841 succeeded Lowell Mason as teacher of music in the public schools; was also vice-pres. of the Handel and Haydn Society for 6 years, frequently singing solos at their concerts. Est. the Boston Music School (1851–68). Editor of the Boston 'Musical Journal.' Retired in 1868.—Works: 3 cantatas, The Storm-King, The Burning Ship, and Camillus, the Roman Conqueror; various vocal quartets, songs, etc. Author of a text-book, Thorough-bass and Harmony; compiled several volumes of glees and anthems.

Baker, George, b. Exeter, Engl., in 1773; d. Rugeley, Feb. 19, 1847. Organ-pupil of Hugh Bond and William Jackson (Exeter); st. the violin with Ward, and pf. with Dussek and Cramer at London. Org. at Stafford (1795), Derby (1810), Rugeley (1824); Mus. Bac. Oxon., 1797.—Works: The Caffres, 'musical entertainment' (London, 1802; unsucc.); 4-, 5-, and 6-part anthems; glees for 3 and 4 voices; songs; organ-voluntaries; pf.-sonatas.

Bala'kirev, Mily Alexeievitch, b. Nishni Novgorod, Russia, Jan. 2, 1837; d. Petrograd, May 28, 1910. St. at Kazan Univ.; self-taught, as a musician. Pianistic début at Petrograd, 1855, was very successful. With Lomakin, in 1862, he founded the 'Free Music School,' the concerts of which (excepting the period 1874–81) he directed until his death; 1866, app. opera-conductor at Prague; 1867–70, conducted concerts of the Imp. Music Society at Petrograd and introduced compositions of Berlioz and Liszt to the Russian public. From 1883–95 he was cond. of the Court-chapel. A passionate admirer of Glinka and Dargomÿzhsky, he gathered about him a number of younger musicians, chief among whom were Cui, Mussorgsky, Rimsky-Korsakov and Borodin, inspired them with his own enthusiasm, and thus became the founder and head of a new national Russian school. His own works are 2 symphonic poems, Russia and Tamara; 2 symphonies (C, 1897; D m., 1909); music to King Lear; overtures with Russian, Czechish and Spanish themes; an Oriental Fantasia, Islamei, for pf.; pieces and arrangements for pf.; etc. He published (1866) a fine collection of Russian folk-songs.

Balart', Gabriel, comp. of 'zarzuelas' (Spanish operettas); b. Barcelona, June 8, 1824; d. there July 5, 1893. He finished his mus. studies in Paris, returned to Spain in 1852, was operá-cond. in various Spanish theatres, and, finally, Dir. of the Barcelona Cons.

Balat'ka, Hans, b. Hoffnungsthal, Moravia, March 5, 1827; d. Chicago, April 17, 1899. Baldwin, Samuel Atkinson.

See Appendix.

Balfe [balf], Michael William, very popular British composer; b. Dublin, May 15, 1808; d. Rowney Abbey, Hertfordshire, Oct. 20, 1870. Taught in Ireland by O'Rourke, and in London by C. F. Horn; in 1824 he was a violinist in the Drury Lane orch., and also sang in London and the provinces. His patron, Count Mazzara, took him to Italy in 1825; he studied comp. with Federici at Rome, and singing with F. Galli at Milan, where his first dramatic piece, the ballet La Pérouse, was produced (1826). After brief instruction by Bordogni, he sang as first baritone at the Italian Opera, Paris (1828) and in Italian theatres until 1835, also producing several Italian operas; and married Lina Roser, an Hungarian vocalist [d. London, June 8, 1888, aged 80]. Returning to England in 1835, his brilliant career as a composer of English operas began with The Siege of Rochelle (Drury Lane). Failing as manager of an opera-troupe, B. went to Paris for a few years, but returned in 1843 with The Bohemian Girl, his most popular opera, which made the round of the chief continental stages, and was produced, extended to 5 acts, as La Bohémienne at Paris in 1856, with overwhelming applause. Excepting visits to Vienna (1846), Berlin (1848), and Petrograd and Trieste (1852–6), he stayed in England; and retired to his country-seat, Rowney Abbey, in 1864. In 1857, his daughter, Victoire, made her début at the Lyceum theatre in Italian opera.—Operas: I Rivali di se stessi (Palermo, 1829); Un Avvertimento ai gelosi (Pavia, 1830); Enrico IV al Passo del Marna (Milan, 1831); The Siege of Rochelle London, 1835); The Maid of Artois (ib., 1836); Catherine Grey, Joan of Arc (ib., 1837); Diadeste (ib., 1838); Falstaff (H. M. Th., 1838); Keolanthe (Lyceum, 1840); Le Puits d'amour (Paris, Op.-Com., 1843); Les quatre fils d'Aymon (ib., 1844); The Bohemian Girl (London, Drury Lane, 1843); Daughter of St. Mark (ib., 1844); The Enchantress (ib., 1845); l'Étoile de Séville (Paris, 1845); The Bondman (London, Drury Lane, 1846); The Maid of Honour (ib., 1847); The Sicilian Bride (ib., 1852); The Devil's in it (Surrey Th., 1852); Pittore e Duca (Trieste, 1856; revived as The Painter of Antwerp, London, 1881); The Rose of Castile (Lyceum, 1857); La Zingara [The Bohemian Girl in Italian] (H. M. Th., 1858); Satanella (Lyceum, 1858); Bianca (1860); The Puritan's Daughter (1861); The Armourer of Nantes; Blanche de Nevers (1863); The Sleeping Queen [operetta] (London, 1863); The Knight of the Leopard, given in Italian as Il Talismano (Drury Lane, June 11, 1874).—Also, Mazeppa, a cantata, and two other cantatas; ballads, glees, part-songs, etc.—Bibliographical: A Memoir of M. W. B., by Charles Lamb Kenney (London, 1875); Balfe: His Life and Works, by W. A. Barrett (London, 1882).

Ballard [băh-lahr'], a family of French music-printers using movable types; founded by Robert B., whose patent of 1552, from Henri II, made him 'Seul imprimeur de la musique de la chambre, chapelle, et menus plaisirs du roy.' This patent was renewed to various members of the family until 1776, when it expired.—See Q.-Lex.

Baltzell, Winton James, editor, b. Shiremanstown, Pa., Dec. 18, 1864. Educated at Lebanon College (A. B., 1884); Univ. of Pa. (Mus. Bac., 1896); N. E. Cons. (1888–9). Pupil in London (1890) of Sir Frederick J. Bridge (comp.) and Wm. Shakespeare (singing). Private teacher in Reading, Pa. In 1887, asst. editor of 'The Etude,' Philadelphia; reader for Theo. Presser, music-publisher (1899–1900); prof. of history of music and theory, Wesleyan Univ. (1900–1907); since 1907 ed. of 'The Musician,' Boston.—Works: A Complete History of Music for Schools (1905); Dictionary of Musicians (1912); many songs, and anthems.

Banchie'ri [-kyā-], Don Adriano, born Bologna, 1567 (?); d. there 1634. Poet, theorist, church-composer; organist at Imola and Bologna. Wrote masses, psalms, motets, madrigals, church-concerti, etc.; and (among others) the treatises Cartella musicale del canto figurato, fermo e contrappunto (Venice, 1614); Direttorio monastico di canto fermo (Bologna, 1615); Lettere armoniche (Bologna, 1628); and L'organo suonarino (Venice, 1605). He named the 7th scale-degree ba, being an opponent of the hexachordal system. As a composer he is historically important for his dramatic pieces in madrigal style, which are among the earliest operas: La Pazzia senile (1598); Il Zabajone (1604); La barca di Venezia per Padova (1605); La Prudenza giovanile (1607); Tirsi, Filli e Clori (1614); Trattenimenti in villa (1630).—See Q.-Lex.

Bandi'ni, Primo, b. Parma, Nov. 29, 1857; 1869–75, pupil of the R. School of Music there; has written the operas Eufemio di Messina (Parma, 1878), and Fausta (Milan, 1886), both fairly successful, and the 4-act opera Janko (Turin, 1897, succ.).

Ban'ister, Henry Charles (son of H. J. B.), b. London, June 13, 1831; d. Streatham, near London, Nov. 20, 1897; pupil of his father and of C. Potter in the R. A. M., at which he twice gained the King's scholarship (1846–48); 1851, asst.-prof., 1853, full prof. of harm. and comp. at R. A. M.; was also (since 1880) prof. of harm. at Guildhall School, and (since 1881), at the R. Normal College for the Blind. A fine concert-pianist; composed 4 symphonies and 5 overtures for orch., besides chamber-music, cantatas, pf.-music, chants, songs, etc. Printed a Text-book of Music (London, 1872, and 15 editions since); Some Musical Ethics and Analogies (1884); Lectures on Musical Analysis (1887); Musical Art and Study (1888); a life of George Alexander Macfarren (1891); Helpful Papers for Harmony Students (1895); The Harmonising of Melodies (1897); The Art of Modulating (1901). Macpherson edited a collection of his lectures, Interludes (1898).

Ban'ister, Henry Joshua, b. London, 1803; d. there 1847. Excellent 'cellist, son of Chas. Wm. B. [1768–1831; a composer who publ. a Coll. of Vocal Music; London, 1803]; author of several good instruction-books for 'cello.

Ban'ister, John, b. London, 1630; d. there Oct. 3, 1679. Violinist, sent for study to France by Charles II, and later a member of the latter's band, from which an outspoken preference for English over the French musicians belonging to it, caused his expulsion. Director of a music-school, and concert-giver. He wrote music for Davenant's Circe and Shakespeare's Tempest (both 1676); New Ayres and Dialogues for voices and viols of 2, 3 and 4 parts (London, 1678); songs.

Ban'ister, John (Jr.), d. London, 1735; violinist, son of preceding; member of the private band under Charles II, James II, and Anne; leader at Italian Opera, London.

Bannelier [-l'yā'], Charles, b. Paris, Mar. 15, 1840; d. there Oct. 5, 1899. Pupil of the Conservatoire; contributor to and later (till 1880) editor of the 'Revue et Gazette Musicale.' Translator, into French, of Hanslick's Vom Musikalisch-Schönen (1877), and the text of Bach's Matthäus-Passion; arranged Berlioz's Symphonie fantastique as a pf.-duet.

Ban'ti-Gior'gi, Brigida, b. Crema, Lombardy, in 1759; d. Bologna, Feb. 18, 1806; a celebrated dramatic soprano, 'discovered' as a chanteuse in a Paris café by de Vismes, Director of the Académie; she was engaged at the Grand Opéra, and her career in Paris, London (1779–1802) and various Italian, German and Austrian cities, was a series of triumphs due solely to her beautiful voice (which was of extraordinary range and perfectly even throughout) and wonderful natural talents; for she was the despair of successive teachers, and never learned even to read music well at sight, but trusted wholly to memory and inspiration.—Her husband was the dancer Zaccaria Banti.

Bantock, Granville, b. London, Aug. 7, 1868; pupil of F. Corder at the R. A. M., 1889–92; first holder of the Macfarren Scholarship. At the Academy concerts were given an overture, The Fire-Worshippers; an Egyptian Suite de ballet from Rameses II; Wulstan; and the 1-act opera Cædmar (in concert-form; prod. same year at the Crystal Palace). From 1893–6 he edited 'The New Quarterly Mus. Review,' also cond. mus. comedies, etc., and made the tour of the world with one of the Edwardes companies in 1894–5, also a provincial tour as cond. of Shamus O'Brien in 1895. From 1897–1901, mus. director of the Tower, New Brighton; in 1898 he founded the N. B. Choral Soc. and was app. cond. of the Runcorn Philh. Soc.; in 1900, Princ. of the Birm. and Midland School of Music; in 1902, succ. Wood as cond. of the Wolverhampton Fest. Choral Soc., and Birm. Amateur Orch. Soc.; in 1908 app. prof. of music at Univ. of Birmingham. At all times he has done much to encourage rising British musical talent, and has cond. 2 concerts of British music at Antwerp (1900–1901). B. himself occupies a foremost position among modern British composers. Absolute music seems to have little attraction for him, for all his works are inspired by some poetic idea and belong to the category of program music. His orchestration is always brilliant and effective, but his form is vague and his thematic invention scarcely compelling.—Works: 2 1-act operas, Cædmar (London, 1892) and The Pearl of Iran (ib., 1896); the tone-poems Thalaba the Destroyer (1900), Dante, Hudibras, The Witch of Atlas (all 1902), Lalla Rookh, The Great God Pan (1903), The Pierrot of the Minute (1908), Dante and Beatrice (1911), Fifine at the Fair (1912), Hebridean Symphony (1916); the choral symphonies Atalanta in Calydon (1912), The Vanity of Vanities (1914); a festival symphony, Christus, in 10 parts (only the first part, The Wilderness, produced 1903); The Fire-Worshippers, dram. cantata (1892); Wulstan, scena for bar. and orch. (1892); The Time-Spirit, rhapsody for ch. and orch. (1904); Thorvenda's Dream, recitation w. orch. (1903); Omar Khayyam (2 parts, 1906–7); Sea-Wanderers (1907); the overtures Saul, Cain, Belshazzar, Eugene Aram (to an unfin. opera, 1895); Overture to a Greek Tragedy (1911); 2 suites for orch., Russian Scenes (1899) and English Scenes (1900); 2 oriental scenes, Processional (1894) and Jaga Naut (1897); orch. variations, Helena (1900); 2 ballets, Egypt (1892) and The Enchanted Garden (1916); Elegiac Poem for vcl. and orch.; string-quartet in C m.; Serenade in F for 4 horns; Mass in B♭ for male ch. a capp.; incidental music to Rameses II (5-act drama by B.); 6 song albums w. orch., Ghazels of Hafiz, Songs of the East, Ferishta's Fancies, Sappho, Jester Songs, Songs of the Seraglio; pf.-pieces and choruses.—Cf. H. O. Anderton, G. B. (London, 1915).

Baptie, David, b. Edinburgh, Nov. 30, 1822; d. Glasgow, March 26, 1906. He composed many anthems, glees, part-songs, etc.; compiled a number of song-books (among them 'Moody & Sankey's Hymn-Book,' 1881), and publ. A Hand-Book of Mus. Biography (1883; 2d ed., 1887, pp. 260), and Musicians of All Times (London, 1889), containing 12,000 'skeleton' biographical sketches. From 1846–98 he compiled a Descriptive Catalogue of upwards of 23,000 part-songs, glees, madrigals, trios, quartets, etc.; the manuscript was acquired by the British Museum, and is there available for reference.

Baptiste [băh-tēst'] (properly Baptiste Anet), violinist, a pupil of Corelli; came c. 1700 to Paris, where he made a profound and lasting impression by introducing his master's works and style of playing; d. at Lunéville, 1755, as m. de ch. to Stanislas Leczinski, the exiled king of Poland. He publ. 3 sets of vln.-sonatas; 2 suites de pièces f. 2 musettes (op. 2); and 6 duos for 2 musettes (op. 3).

Baralla, Raffaello, b. Camigliano, near Lucca, June 25, 1862. Pupil of the seminary at Lucca; devotes himself to the investigation of the Gregorian Chant; 1893, instr. Gregorian Chant at the 'Istituto musicale' at Lucca; since 1910, teacher of Greg. Palæography at the school for church music in Rome. Wrote Due parole sui melismi gregoriani (Lucca, 1901); Di un nuovo 'telum imbelle sine ictu' contro il canto gregoriano (Pisa, 1902); Ab initio non fuit sic (Lucca, 1902); La zuppa nel paniere (Lucca, 1903); since 1905, several essays in 'Rassegna Gregoriana.'

Beecham, Sir Thomas, b. n. Liverpool, April 29, 1879. While a student at Rossall School he had some lessons in comp. from Dr. Sweeting, and later, at Oxford Univ., from Dr. V. Roberts. In 1899 he founded, chiefly for his own pleasure, an amateur orch. at Huyton; in 1902 he was cond. of K. Truman's travelling opera company, gaining valuable practical experience; at the conclusion of the tour he devoted an entire year to further serious study. In 1905 he gave his first symph. concert in London with the Queen's Hall Orch.; the next year he estab. the New Symph. Orch., which he conducted till 1908, when he resigned and formed the Beecham Symph. Orch. By this time his reputation as a forceful and magnetic cond. was securely established. In 1910 he appeared in a new rôle, that of operatic impresario. With a company of splendid artists, his own well-trained orch., and himself as conductor, he gave a season of grand opera during Feb. and March (22 perfs.) that created a sensation, not so much because of the excellence of the ensemble, but because of the variety of the répertoire; not less than three novelties were produced: R. Strauss' Elektra, Delius' Romeo and Juliet in the Village, E. Smythe's The Wreckers—besides a revival of Sullivan's Ivanhoe. The success of this new venture was so pronounced, that in May and June of the same year B. gave a season of 'opéra comique' in English, when Strauss' Feuersnot and Stanford's Shamus O'Brien had their first performance in Engl. Before the year was out a third season, beginning in October, was given, in which the novelties were d'Albert's Tiefland, Leroux's Le Chemineau, and Strauss' Salome. In 1913 he gave a season devoted chiefly to Wagner; the important novelties were Strauss' Der Rosenkavalier and Ariadne auf Naxos; the season of 1914 brought forth Strauss' Josef-legende, Rimsky-Korsakov's Le Coq d'Or and Holbrooke's Dylan; the season of 1915 was devoted entirely to opera in English, and in deference to popular demand had to be extended by six weeks, lasting into 1916; novelties, Liza Lehmann's Everyman and Stanford's The Critic.—In 1915 B. was elected conductor of the London Philh. Soc.; on Jan. 1, 1916, he was knighted.—Cf. 'M. T.', Oct., 1910.

Bee'cke, Ignaz von, b. Wimpfen, Oct. 28, 1733; d. Wallerstein, Jan. 2, 1803. Captain of dragoons, later 'Musikintendant' to the Prince of Ötting-Wallerstein. Highly accomplished harpsichordist, a friend of Jommelli, Gluck and Mozart. Wrote 7 operas; an oratorio, Die Auferstehung Jesu; a cantata, symphonies, quartets, 4 harpsichord-trios, 6 harpsichord-sonatas, many songs, etc.—Cf. L. Schiedermair in 'Sbd. Int. M.-G.', ix, p. 107.

Beellaerts, Jean. See BELLÈRE.

Beer [bār], Jacob Liebmann. Original name of GIACOMO MEYERBEER.

Beer, Josef, b. Grünwald, Bohemia, May 18, 1744; d. Potsdam, 1811, as Royal Prussian chamber-musician. Skilful clarinettist, who invented the improvement of a fifth key, and wrote concertos, duets, variations, etc., f. clar.

Beer, Jules, Meyerbeer's nephew (son of Michael Beer, 1800–33), b. c. 1833, lived in Paris as an amateur dramatic composer (5 comic operas, and other works).

Beer, Max Josef, b. Vienna, Aug. 25, 1851; d. there Nov. 25, 1908. Pupil of Dessoff; pianist and composer.—Works: The operas Otto der Schütz and Der Pfeiferkönig (both not perf.), Friedel mit der leeren Tasche (Prague, 1892), Der Streik der Schmiede (1 act, Augsburg, 1897; succ.); operetta Das Stelldichein auf der Pfahlbrücke; cantata Der wilde Jäger, for soli, ch. and orch.; several lyrical pf.-pieces (Abendfeier, Eichendorffiana, Haidebilder, Spielmannsweisen, Was sich der Wald erzählt, etc.); a pf.-suite; various books of songs, etc.

Beer-Walbrunn, Anton, b. Kohlberg, Bavaria, June 29, 1864. Pupil of Rheinberger, Bussmeyer and Abel at the Akademie der Tonkunst in Munich; since 1901 instructor there of pf. and comp.; made Prof. in 1908.—Works: The operas Sühne (Lübeck, 1894), Don Quixote (Munich, 1908), Das Ungeheuer (fin. 1916, not yet prod.); op. 1, choruses for mixed voices; op. 3, a fantasy for vl.; op. 8, pf.-quartet; op. 12, 13, songs; op. 14, string-quartet; op. 15, sonata for 'cello and pf.; op. 20, Ode for 'cello and pf.; op. 21, Reisebilder for pf.; op. 22, Deutsche Suite for orch. (also arr. for pf. 4 hands); op. 27, songs; op. 30, sonata for pf. and vl.; op. 31, Der Polenflüchtling for bar. with orch.; op. 32, sonata for organ; op. 35, 48, choruses for male and mixed voices; op. 36, symphony in E; op. 40, Burlesken for orch.; op. 43, incidental music to Hamlet; also a choral work with orch., Mahomets Gesang; 10 sonnets of Shakespeare for 1 voice and pf.; etc. —Interesting monograph by O. G. Sonneck in his "Suum cuique: Essays in Music" (Schirmer; N. Y., 1916). A Beeth [bāt], Lola, b. Cracow, 1864; dramatic soprano, pupil of Frau Dustmann, and later of Mme. Viardot-Garcia and Désirée Artôt. Début 1882 at Berlin Court Opera as Elsa (Lohengrin); eng. there 1882–88; then eng. at Vienna Court Th. 1888–95. Then sang 3 months at Grand Opéra, Paris (Elsa, Elisabeth, etc.); later at New York, Monte Carlo and Pest; again at Vienna 1897–1902; since then only as star. Living now as 'Kgl. Kammersängerin' at Berlin.

Beet'hoven [bāt'hoh-ven], Ludwig van, the composer who represents the fullest maturity (in emotional scope, in formal construction, and in instrumental treatment) of the allied classic forms of the pf.-sonata, pf.-concerto, string-quartet, and orchestral symphony, was born at Bonn-on-Rhine, Dec. 16 (baptized Dec. 17), 1770 [Beethoven himself said Dec. 16, 1772]; he died in Vienna, March 26, 1827. His grandfather, Ludwig van B., a native of Maestricht, was bass singer, opera-composer, and Kapellm. at Bonn to the Elector Clemens August. B.'s father, Johann van B., was a tenor singer in the Electoral choir, and married Maria Magdalena Laym (née Keverich), the widow of the chief cook at Ehrenbreitstein; Ludwig was the second child born to them.—B. attended the public schools at Bonn till his 14th year. His musical education was taken in hand in his fourth year by his father, a strict and stern master, who taught him till 1779. At eight he played the violin well; at eleven he could play Bach's 'Wohltemperirtes Clavier' fluently and skilfully. His next instructors were Pfeiffer, a music-director and oboist; Van den Eeden, the court organist; and the latter's successor, Neefe. He was already a notable improviser on the piano; and in 1781 ('82?) appeared his first published composition, 3 pf.-sonatas. In 1782, during Neefe's absence, B. was formally installed as his deputy at the organ; in 1783, he was app. cembalist for the rehearsals of the opera-orch.—for the present, to be sure, without emolument. In 1784 the new Elector, Max Franz, app. B. asst.-organist at a salary of 150 florins (about $63); this place he held till 1792; from 1788 he also played 2nd viola in the orch. of the theatre and church, Reicha being the conductor. On a visit of a few months to Vienna, in 1787, B. awakened great interest by his extraordinary ability as an extempore pianist; eliciting from Mozart the exclamation: 'He will give the world something worth listening to.' In July his mother died; his father gave way to intemperance, gradually losing his voice; and B.'s home-life became wretched. He found consolation in the family of Frau von Breuning, the widow of a court councillor, to whose daughter and youngest son B. gave music-lessons. In their refined society his taste for German and English literature was quickened. About this time he made the acquaintance of the young Count Waldstein, his life-long friend, admirer, and benefactor. In his leisure hours he gave other lessons, took long walks, and occupied himself with composition. Despite his remarkable faculty for improvisation, the display of known works for the first ten years (1782–92) is comparatively meagre: half a dozen songs; a rondo, a minuet, and 3 preludes f. pf.; 3 pf.-quartets; a pf.-trio; a string-trio, op. 3; 4 sets of pf.-variations; a rondino f. wind; the Ritter-Ballet with orch. [publ. 1872]; the Bagatelles, op. 33; 2 violin-rondos, op. 51; the Serenade Trio, op. 8;—to which add the lost cantata praised by Haydn, a lost trio for pf., flute and bassoon, and an Allegro and Minuet for 2 flutes (all unpubl.). [Recent investigations, however, have established almost with certainty the fact that when B. arrived in Vienna in 1792 he brought with him a considerable number of compositions in MS. Some of these he revised and publ. later (e. g., the violin-rondos, op. 51; which accounts for the high opus-number); others were lost. In 1910 Fritz Stein found in Jena the score and parts of a symphony in C, which unquestionably antedates the one known as the 'First Symphony.' It was publ. by Breitkopf & Härtel in 1911.] In point of fact, B. never possessed the fatal facility of invention which rejoices in rapidity rather than solidity of production. His way of working is exhibited in the 'sketch-books' of this early period, which contain rough draughts, as it were, of motives, themes, ideas; fragments jotted down in moods of inspiration, frequently reappearing in modified forms, and in many cases recognizable as the germs of later compositions. This method of tentative notation and careful and oft-repeated working-over, was his through life.

The year 1792 marks a turning-point. Haydn, passing through Bonn, warmly praised a cantata of B.'s composition; the Elector, probably influenced by the master's opinion and the representations of the friendly Waldstein, made up his mind to send B. to Vienna, then the centre of musical Europe. Here, a member of the highest circles of artists and art-lovers, to which his native genius and letters from the Elector procured speedy admission, B. found himself in a most congenial atmosphere. Besides his salary from the Elector (discontinued in 1794), and an annual stipend of 600 florins from Prince Lichnowsky, one of his truest friends and warmest admirers, his income was derived from the increasing sale of his works. He applied to Haydn for further instruction; but, dissatisfied with his loose methods of teaching, and angered at his lack of appreciation of compositions submitted to him for approval, B. surreptitiously took lessons of Schenk, carrying his exercises, after correction by Schenk, to Haydn. This peculiar arrangement continued for a little more than a year, terminating at Haydn's departure (Jan., 1794) for England. During 1794 he had quite regular lessons in counterpoint with Albrechtsberger, whose verdict: 'He has learned nothing, and will never do anything properly,' can hardly be called prophetic; Salieri gave him many valuable hints on vocal style; and Aloys Förster contributed good counsel on the art of quartet-writing. B.'s contrapuntal exercises under Albrechtsberger (publ. Paris, 1832; revised ed. by Nottebohm, in vol. i of his 'Beethoven-Studien', 1873) curiously exhibit the irrepressible conflict between B.'s imagination and the dry course of study prescribed.

Welcome at all soirées and private musicales of the aristocracy, B. did not play in public in Vienna until Mar. 29, 1795, when he performed his C major pf.-concerto at a concert in the Burgtheater. In 1796 he visited Nuremberg, Prague and Berlin, and played before King Friedrich Wilhelm II. The publication of the E♭ pf.-sonata (op. 7) in 1797, a work of strongly individual type, is noteworthy. Two public concerts given at Prague in 1798 are chronicled as making a profound impression. In the same year he met two famed piano-virtuosi: Steibelt, whose challenge to B. as an extemporizer and composer resulted in his own overwhelming discomfiture; and Wölffl, a worthier opponent, with whom B. associated and made music on a friendly footing (W. inscribed 3 sonatas to him). To 1799 belong the 3 sonatas for pf. and violin (op. 12), the Grande sonate pathétique (op. 13), the second pf.-concerto (in B♭), and several lesser publications. With 1800 closes what is called (after the generally-accepted classification by W. von Lenz in his Beethoven et ses trois styles [Petrograd, 1852]) Beethoven's 'first period' of composition; the 'second period' extends to 1815; the 'third', to the master's decease in 1827. The works of this first period include op. 1–18 (6 pf.-trios, 4 string-trios, the first 3 string-quartets, 9 pf.-sonatas and various sets of variations, the grand aria Ah perfido, etc.). [For a detailed discussion of this point, see v. Lenz, Grove, Thayer, et al.] At this time, too (1800–1801), a malady, which later resulted in total deafness, began to make alarming progress, and caused B. acute mental suffering. From his entrance into Viennese society he was known as an 'original'; even his genuine, sturdy independence and self-sufficiency, due at bottom to a native love of freedom and honesty, a detestation of shams, and just self-appreciation, appeared highly eccentric when contrasted with the courtier-like subservience of great musicians like Haydn and Mozart; and there is no doubt that he purposely exaggerated this eccentricity (he himself remarked that 'it is good to mingle with aristocrats, but one must know how to impress them'). His genius and geniality as an artist, and his noble generosity, won the hearts of music-lovers, and caused them to condone his freaks. With increasing deafness, however, his character altered; he gradually grew taciturn, morose, and suspicious (traits aggravated by the sordid meanness of his brothers Karl and Johann, who had also settled in Vienna), and treated his best friends outrageously. From about 1820, deafness was total, or nearly so; as early as 1816 he had to use an ear-trumpet. Besides this, when his brother Karl died, in 1815, leaving a son to B.'s guardianship, the latter undertook the boy's bringing up as a sacred trust; the ingratitude of this graceless scamp of a nephew forms one of the saddest chapters in the great man's life, and still further darkened his declining years.

B.'s freest and most joyous creative period was his second. It was the period of the fullest flow of ideas (see 'sketch-books'), not as yet overcast by the gloom of his keenest anguish.—It should be noted, that von Lenz's classification is not chronological, either in dates of composition, final completion, or publication; but is, in part, a somewhat arbitrary arrangement according to the 'style' of the several works. E. g., he classes the second symphony (written 1802, performed 1803, published 1804, as op. 36) among works of the 'first period.'—The chief works comprised in the 'second period' are the six symphonies from III to VIII inclusive; his one opera, Fidelio; the music to Egmont; the ballet Prometheus; the mass in C, op. 86; the oratorio Christus am Oelberg (1803); the Coriolanus overture; the pf.-concertos in G and E♭; his violin-concerto; the quartets in F min., E♭, and those inscribed to Razumovsky; 4 pf.-trios (op. 38; op. 70, Nos. 1 and 2; op. 97); and 14 pf.-sonatas (among them the two quasi fantasia, op. 27; the pastorale, op. 28; op. 31, No. 2, in D min.; the Waldstein, op. 53; the appassionata, op. 57; and Les Adieux, l'absence, et le retour, op. 81); also the Liederkreis, etc.

The 'third period' includes the five pf.-sonatas op. 101, 106, 109, 110, 111; also (acc. to date publ.) op. 102, Nos. 1 and 2; the Missa solemnis in D, op. 123; the Ninth Symphony, op. 125; the Ruins of Athens overture, op. 113, and march with chorus, op. 114; the orchestral overtures op. 115 and 124; the grand fugue for string-quartet, op. 133; and the great string-quartets op. 127 (E♭), op. 130 (B♭), op. 131 (C♯ min.), op. 132 (A min.), and op. 135 (F).

Fidelio probably cost B. more pains and exasperation than any other one work. As early as 1803 he arranged with Schikaneder, manager of the Theater an der Wien, to write an opera; it was produced Nov. 20, 1805, amid the commotion and gloom incident to the entrance, just a week before, of the French army into Vienna. Originally in three acts, it was withdrawn after three consecutive performances; pruned, rearranged, and revised time and again, and brought out March 29, 1806, with better success, but withdrawn by the author after only two performances. Once more sweepingly revised, it was revived in 1814, and was this time very successful. The opera was at first named Leonore, after the heroine; and its overture, twice rewritten, forms an interesting study in evolution; the present Fidelio overture is quite different. B.'s sketch-book for this opera contains 300 large pages of 16 staves each, crammed with heterogeneous notes.—The Eroica symphony (No. 3) also has a history. At first entitled the Sinfonia grande Napoleon Bonaparte, in honor of the supposed champion of 'liberty, equality and fraternity,' B. tore up the dedication in a transport of rage on hearing of Napoleon's proclamation as emperor (May 18, 1804); the title was altered to Sinfonia eroica composta per festeggiare il sovvenire d'un grand' uomo [Heroic symphony, composed to celebrate the memory of a great man].—With the Ninth Symphony B. touches the limit of expression in symphonic form; the choral finale, where orchestral and vocal music blend in an outburst of ecstasy (the words are from Schiller's 'Hymn to Joy'), is the apotheosis of musical art. Yet what said Fétis, the French critic and historiographer, to this finale? 'Nevertheless, this melody [the theme of the Hymn] which caused him [B.] these transports of joy, is quite vulgar; but he regarded it less from a musical point of view than from that of the sentiment which he wished to express [!!]. In his preoccupation in this respect there was more of German dreaminess than of æsthetic conception.' Such a criticism reminds one of what von Lenz said concerning the Parisian conception of Liszt: 'They called him "Litz"—that was as far as they ever got with Liszt in Paris!'

Up to 1815, B.'s material welfare had increased, though hardly in proportion to his social and artistic triumphs. An honored and frequent guest at the houses of art-lovers like the princes Lichnowsky, Lobkowitz and Kinsky, the counts Moritz Lichnowsky, Razumovsky and Franz von Brunswick, and Baron von Gleichenstein, his bearing towards his hosts was that of an equal to equals; at the time of the Vienna Congress, as a guest of Archduke Rudolf, he met the various reigning monarchs as their peer, and even (as he said himself) let them pay court to him. A curious incident is the invitation extended to B. in 1809, by the de facto 'King of Westphalia,' Jérôme Bonaparte, to assume the post of maître de chapelle at Kassel at a salary of 600 ducats (about $1,500). There is no proof that B. seriously entertained the proposition; he really wanted to become Imperial Kapellmeister at Vienna; but the bare possibility of losing the great composer so dismayed his Viennese admirers, that Archduke Rudolf, and Princes Lobkowitz and Kinsky, settled on B. an annuity of 4,000 florins (nominally $2,000, but in depreciated paper of fluctuating value). After 1815, his growing deafness, and the sore trials incidental to the care of his nephew, caused him so much mental distress that he often thought himself on the verge of ruin, though he never really suffered want.—In December, 1826, he caught a violent cold, which resulted in an attack of pneumonia; dropsy then supervened, and after several unsuccessful operations he succumbed to the disease on March 26, 1827. His funeral was attended by 20,000 persons, and titled personages vied with each other in the expression of homage and regret.

While Beethoven, in choosing a recognized (conventional) form—the sonata-form—as a vehicle for the expression of his thought (in 81 works, i. e., about one-third of all), still belongs to the school called 'classic,' his methods of moulding this form were eminently unconventional; so much so, indeed, that even at the beginning of his 'second period' the progressive 'Allgemeine musikalische Zeitung' of Leipzig, though not belittling his importance, reprehends his 'daring harmonies and venturesome rhythms.' As for his last period, no general appreciation of the latest string-quartets and pf.-sonatas was found, even among musicians, until half a century after his death. His innovations on the formal key-scheme of his predecessors; his original elaboration of connecting-links both in thematic development and between separate movements; his fertility in incidental modulation, and the inexhaustible freshness of his rhythms, render the structure of his compositions thoroughly characteristic—typical. But his loftiest originality, and that whence the differences in formal construction naturally flowed, is the intensity and fervor of subjective emotion which pervades his works. It is this mood of profound subjectivity, of individual, powerful soul-expression, which most of all differentiates B.'s music from that of Bach, or Haydn, or Mozart, and which opens the era of 'romantic' composition. Technically, his art of orchestration reaches a perfection in detail, and a grandeur of effect, before unknown; and his diversified development of the motive (melodic, harmonic, rhythmic) surpasses anything previous to Wagner. As specimens of what can be done in thematic treatment, his pf.-variations on given themes are a ne plus ultra of musical ingenuity. It is noteworthy that, according to contemporary accounts, his 'free improvisations' at the piano, which held his auditors spellbound, were developments of a kindred nature; not mere rhapsodies, but the spontaneous elaborations of a teeming invention. He is still reverenced as the greatest instrumental composer of all times; and even in vocal music, his Fidelio and the Missa solemnis are creations of unique power.

Monuments have been erected to B. in 1845 at Bonn (by Hähnel), and in 1880 at Vienna (by Zumbusch).

B.'s works comprise 138 opus-numbers, and about 70 unnumbered compositions. His published works are noted below.

INSTRUMENTAL WORKS.

Nine Symphonies: No. 1, op. 21, in C; 2, op. 36, in D; 3, op. 55, in E♭ (the 'Eroica'); 4, op. 60, in B♭; 5, op. 67, in C min.; 6, op. 68, in F (Pastoral); 7, op. 92, in A; 8, op. 93, in F; 9, op. 125, in D min. (Choral).

The Battle of Vittoria (op. 91); music to the ballet Prometheus (op. 43), and to Goethe's Egmont (op. 84), both with overtures.

Nine further overtures: Coriolanus; Leonore (Nos. 1, 2 and 3); Fidelio; King Stephen; Ruins of Athens; Namensfeier, op. 115; Weihe des Hauses (op. 124).

Berlin, 1907); Th. von Frimmel, Neue Beethoveniana (Vienna, 1888); id., B.-Studien (2 vols., Munich, 1905–6).—The standard and most complete biogr. is the monumental work of Alex. W. Thayer, Ludwig van Beethovens Leben (5 vols., 1866–1908). The English original was never published. The first three vols. appeared in a German translation by H. Deiters (Berlin, 1866, '72, '77, resp.). After the author's death Deiters completed vols. iv and v from Thayer's material, but died also before their publication. He had also revised and enlarged vol. i (Leipzig, 1901). D.'s MS. was revised and edited by H. Riemann (vol. iv, Leipzig, 1907; vol. v, ib., 1908). Vols ii and iii were then revised and enlarged by R. along the lines followed by D. in the revision of vol. i (Leipzig, 1910 and '11, resp.). For some years H. E. Krehbiel has been at work preparing an Engl. ed.

B. Correspondence: The several partial collections of letters ed. by Nohl, Köchel, etc., have been superseded by the following complete editions: A. C. Kalischer, B.'s sämmtliche Briefe (5 vols., 1906–8; English transl. by J. S. Shedlock, London, 1909); F. Prelinger, L. van B.'s sämmtliche Briefe u. Aufzeichnungen (5 vols., Vienna, 1907-10); E. Kastner, L. van B.'s sämmtliche Briefe (1 vol., Leipzig, 1910).

C. Sketch-books: I. von Seyfried, L. van B.'s Studien im Generalbass, Kontrapunkt, u. in der Kompositionslehre (Vienna, 1832; new ed. by Nottebohm, Leipzig, 1873; also by L. Köhler, ib., 1880); G. Nesieht, Das goldene Zeitalter der Klaviersonate (Cologne, 1910); H. Schenker, B.'s Neunte Symphonie (Vienna, 1912).

E. Catalogues, Year-books, etc.: The first catalogue, rev. by B. personally, and completed by A. Gräffer (Vienna, 1828), as well as several publ. subsequently, leaves much to be desired. The first valuable thematic cat. was issued by Breitkopf & Härtel (Leipzig, 1851). It was thoroughly revised and enlarged by G. Nottebohm, and publ. as Thematisches Verzeichniss der im Druck erschienenen Werke von L. van B. (Leipzig, 1868). New ed., together with Bibliotheca Beethoveniana, by E. Kastner, giving a complete list of all books (and important articles written in periodicals) about B. from 1829–1913 (Leipzig, 1913). As a precursor to his great biography A. W. Thayer published a Chronologisches Verzeichniss der Werke L. van B.'s (Berlin, 1865), which includes also unpublished works.—In 1908 Th. von Frimmel began the publication of a 'B.-Jahrbuch,' which since 1911 is publ. as 'B.-Forschung' (Vienna).—Of value and interest also are G. Adler, Verzeichnis der musikalischen Autographe von L. van B. (Vienna, 1890), and A. C. Kalischer, Die B.-Autographe der Kgl. Bibliothek zu Berlin, in 'Monatshefte für Musikgeschichte,' Oct., 1895.

Beffara, Louis-François, b. Nonancourt, Eure, Aug. 23, 1751; d. Paris, Feb. 2, 1838. 'Commissaire de Police' 1792–1816, at Paris. Antiquary and writer.—Works: Dict. de l'Académie royale de Musique (7 vols.), and 7 vols. of rules and regulations of the 'Académie' (Grand Opéra); Dict. alphab. des acteurs, etc. (3 vols.); Tableau chronologique des représentations journalières, etc. (from 1671); Dict. alphab. des tragédies lyriques . . . non représentés à l'Académie, etc. (5 vols.); Dramaturgie lyrique étrangère (17 vols.). He left his rare collection of books and MSS. to the city of Paris; all were burned during the Commune, in 1871.

Beffroy de Reigny [bef-frwăh' dŭ rā-ñē'], ('Cousin Jacques'), Louis-Abel, b. Laon, Nov. 6, 1757; d. Paris, Dec. 18, 1811. The author of several whimsical stage-pieces, for which he wrote both text and music, and all of which are forgotten. Fétis says that he had neither literary nor musical talent; but Nicodème dans la lune (1790, given 191 times in 13 mos.) and Nicodème aux enfers (1791, prohibited after 7 representations, on acct. of exciting the democrats), were certainly successful in their way.—See Q.-Lex.

Behaim, Michel, a Meistersinger; b. 1416; d. 1474. Interesting as an early representative of his school; closely allied to the Minnesänger. Monograph by Kühn, Rhythmik u. Melodik Michel Behaims (Bonn, 1907).

Behm [bām], Eduard, b. Stettin, April 8, 1862. Studied in Leipzig (Cons.) and Berlin (Kiel, Raif, Härtel), was for a time teacher in the Erfurt Academy of Music, and then Director of the Schwantzer Cons. at Berlin until 1901. He won the Mendelssohn prize with a symphony, and the Bösendorf prize with a pf.-concerto; has also written the operas Der Schelm von Bergen (Dresden, 1890), Marienkind (1902), Das Gelöbnis (1914); a string-sextet (with the Stelzner violotta); a pf.-trio; 2 vln.-sonatas; a vln.-concerto; Frühlingsidylle, a suite for violin and orchestra; male chs., etc.

Behn'ke [bān'kĕh], Emil, b. Stettin, 1836; d. Ostende, Sept. 17, 1892. Lived chiefly in London as an authority on voice-training, and teacher of voice-production for singers and speakers. Lecturer on physiology of voice. Wrote The Mechanism of the Human Voice (London, 1880); Voice, Song, and Speech [in coöp. with Lennox Browne] (1883); Voice-training Exercises (1884), and The Child's Voice (1885), the last two in coöp. with Dr. C. W. Pearce.

Behr, Franz, comp. for pf.; b. Lübthèen, Mecklenburg, July 22, 1837; d. Dresden, Feb. 15, 1898. Publ. a great number of light and popular salon-pieces and instructive pieces, some under the pseudonyms of 'William Cooper,' 'Charles Morley,' and 'Francesco d'Orso.'

Behrend, William, b. Copenhagen, May 16, 1861. Having completed his regular academic education and passed the state examination in 1885, he followed the profession of law, accepting a government position; now (1916) chief of the 'Bureau for the Welfare of the Young' in Copenhagen. His love for music showed itself early, and he received thorough instruction on the violin from Amberg and Axel Gade, while G. Matthisson-Hansen was his teacher in theory. For many years he was mus. critic of 'Politiken' and 'Illustrirte Zeitung'; now on the staff of 'Tilskueren'; contributor to 'Die Musik' and 'Signale' (Berlin) and 'Musikalisches Wochenblatt' (Leipzig); one of the founders of the Danish Richard Wagner-Verein (at present its vice-pres.). Years of intimate association with Niels Gade stimulated him to write about music; married in 1900 Gudda Horneman, a writer of some reputation; created 'Knight of Danebrog' in 1914. Wrote a biography of J. P. E. Hartmann (1895), vol. ii of Illustreret Musikhistorie (1905; from Gluck to modern times; 2d ed. in prep.), the biographies of musicians for Salmonsen's 'Konversationslexikon' (18 vols.); numerous articles in German and Danish journals; is engaged on an exhaustive biogr. of Gade—a brief essay appeared in 1887 in 'Tilskueren'—to be publ. in the year of G.'s centenary (1917).

Behrens, Cécile Matullath, concert-pianist; b. Pittsburgh, Pa., June 25, 1879. Pupil in San Francisco of Ernest Hartmann; début there in 1886; then st. in N. Y. with Wm. Mason, whose asst. she became later; subsequently also with V. Safonov. Resides in N. Y. as teacher; specially valued as an ensemble player (w. Kneisel Quar., etc.).

Beier, (Dr.) Franz, b. Berlin, Apr. 18, 1857; d. Kassel, July 25, 1914. In 1894, Kapellm. in the Royal Theatre at Kassel.—Opera-parody Der Posaunist von Speikingen (Kassel, 1889: succ.); comic operetta Der Gaunerkönig (Kassel, 1890; succ.). Prod. a revision of Spohr's Die Kreuzfahrer (Kassel, 1899).

Bekker, Paul, b. Berlin, Sept. 11, 1882. Pupil of F. Rehfeld (vl.), A. Sormann (pf.), and B. Horwitz (theory); began his career as violinist in the Philh. Orch. in Berlin; for a short time cond. at Aschaffenburg and Görlitz; returned to Berlin in 1906 as mus. critic of the 'Neueste Nachrichten,' writing also the program-books for the concerts of the Philh. Soc.; 1909, critic for the 'Berliner Allgem. Zeitung'; removed to Frankfort in 1911, and has since then been critic for the 'Frankfurter Zeitung.' Publ. biographies of Oskar Fried (1907) and Jacques Offenbach (1909); also Das Musikdrama der Gegenwart (1909) and Beethoven (1911).

Bel'cke, Christian Gottlieb, b. Lucka, July 17, 1796; d. there July 8, 1875; a brilliant flutist, 1819–32 in Gewandhaus Orch., Leipzig; 1834–41 at Altenburg. Wrote concertos, fantasias, etc., for flute.—His brother, Bel'cke, Friedrich August, b. Lucka, Altenburg, May 27, 1795; d. there Dec. 10, 1874. Celebrated trombone-player; 1815, in Gewandhaus Orch., Leipzig; chamber-musician at Berlin, 1816–58. He was the first concert-virtuoso on the trombone, for which he wrote concertos and études.

Belia'iev [Beljajew], Mitrofan Petrovitch, the noted music-publisher; b. Petrograd, Feb. 22, 1836; d. there Jan. 10, 1904. On finishing his regular schooling, he entered the business of his father, a lumber-dealer, but still maintained, as a musical amateur, his intimacy with leaders of the neo-Russian school of music. On his father's death (1888) the income from the business was employed to found a music-publishing establishment solely for works by young Russian composers; some 3,000 numbers have been issued (chiefly opera-scores, piano-arrangements, concert-pieces, symphonies, and chamber-music). He also instituted symphony and chamber-concerts for the aid and encouragement of struggling talent; his will (by which the music-publ. establishment is constituted a foundation, conducted by a committee of Russian composers — Rimsky-Korsakov, Glazunov, Liadov) provides for at least 10 symphony concerts and 4 'Quartet Evenings' each season, besides continuing other chamber-music performances, offering prizes for the best compositions, and establishing a pension fund for needy comps., musicians, and their families.

Be'liczay [-lit-sī], Julius von, b. Komorn, Hungary, Aug. 10, 1835; d. Pest, May 1, 1893. Pupil of Joachim, Hoffmann and Franz Krenn; 1888, prof. of theory at the Nat. Acad. of Mus., Pest.—Works: Mass in F, often perf.; symphony in D m. (1888); Ave Maria, f. soprano solo, ch. and orch. (op. 9); serenade for strings (op. 36); Andante for string-orch. (op. 25); trio in E♭ (op. 30); string-quartet in G m. (op. 21); pf.-pieces, études, songs, etc. In 1891 he publ. Part I of a 'Method of Comp.' (in Hungarian).

Bell, William Henry, b. St. Albans, Engl., Aug. 20, 1873. Chorister at St. A. Cath. until 1889, when he won the Goss scholarship at the R. A. M.; studied there 4 years with Steggall (org.), Burnett (vl.), Izard (pf.), and F. Corder (comp.); 1903–12, prof. of harmony there; since 1912, dir. of South African Coll. of Music in Cape Town.—Works: Prologue to Chaucer's Canterbury Tales; Canterbury Tales, three symph. poems; Walt Whitman, symph. in C m.; The Open Road, symph. in F; the symph. preludes A Song in the Morning, The Passing of Wenonah, Agamemnon (Æschylus); other works for orch., Mother Carey, Love among the Ruins, The Shepherd, Two Mood-Pictures, Epithalamion, Arcadian Suite; English Dance Suite for small orch.; choral works with orch., Hawke, The Call of the Sea, Ballad of the Bride, The Baron of Brackley; 2 string-quartets; sonata for vla. and pf.; songs.

Bel'la, Johann Leopold, b. Lipto-Szent Miklós, Upper Hungary, Sept. 4, 1843; priest and canon at Neusohl; now cantor and mus. dir. at Hermannstadt; comp.of much church-music in severe style; also orch. works, national choruses for men's voices and mixed chorus, pf.-pieces, etc.

Bellaigue [-äg'], Camille, b. Paris, May 24, 1858. Law-student, taking a course in music under Paladilhe and Marmontel; 1884, music critic for the 'Correspondant'; since 1885, on 'La Revue des deux Mondes'; also writing for 'Le Temps.' His best-known essays and studies are publ. under the following titles: L'année musicale (5 vols., 1886–91); La Musique française au XIX^e siècle (2 vols., 1890); L'année musicale et dramatique (1893); Psychologie musicale (1894); Portraits et silhouettes de musiciens (1896; English, '97; German, 1903); Études musicales et nouvelles silhouettes de musiciens (1898; Engl., 1899); Impressions musicales et littéraires (1900); Études musicales (2 vols., 1903, '07); Mozart: biographie critique (1906); Mendelssohn (1907, in 'Maîtres de musique'); Les Époques de la musique (2 vols., 1909); Gounod (1910).

Bella'sio, Paolo, comp. of the Venetian school in the 16th century; published a vol. of Madrigals (1579), one of Villanelle alla Romana (1595), and various other madrigals in the collection 'Dolci affetti' (1568).

Bel'lasis, Edward, English writer; b. Jan. 28, 1852. Publ. Cherubini: Memorials Illustrative of His Life (London, 1874); also pf.-music, several songs, etc.

Bell'Ave're (or Bell'Haver'), Vincenzo, b. Venice, 1530 (?); d. there 1588 (?); pupil of A. Gabrieli, whom he succeeded as 2nd org. of San Marco (1586). Publ. several books of madrigals (1567–75; only Book II, a 5, is extant), and single ones in various collections.

Bellaz'zi [-läht'sē], Francesco, Venetian comp., pupil of Giovanni Gabrieli; publ. (1618–28) a mass, psalms, motets, litanies, canzoni, etc.

Bellère [-lär'] (or Bellerus, properly Beellaerts), Jean, bookseller and music-publ. at Antwerp, where he died in 1595. A partner of Pierre Phalèse (fils). His son, Balthasar, transferred the business to Douai, and printed much music up to c. 1625. His printed catalogue of compositions publ. by him (1603–5), was found by Coussemaker in the Douai library.

Bellermann, (Johann) Friedrich, b. Erfurt, Mar. 8, 1795; d. Berlin, Feb. 4, 1874. From 1847–68, Director of the gymnasium 'Zum grauen Kloster' at Berlin. Distinguished writer on Greek music. His chief work is Die Tonleitern u. Musiknoten der Griechen (Berlin, 1847; explanatory of the Greek system of notation); Die Hymnen des Dionysios u. Mesomedes (Berlin, 1840), and Anonymi scriptio de musica, Bacchii senioris introductio, etc. (1841), are smaller treatises on Greek mus. as practised.

Bellermann, (Johann Gottfried) Heinrich, son of preceding; b. Berlin, Mar. 10, 1832; d. Potsdam, April 10, 1903. Pupil of the R. Inst. for Ch.-music, also of E. A. Grell. 1853, teacher of singing at the 'Graues Kloster'; 1861, R. Musikdirektor; 1866, prof. of music at Berlin Univ., succeeding Marx. He composed many vocal works. His book, Die Mensuralnoten und Taktzeichen im 15. u. 16. Jahrh. (Berlin, 1858; 2d ed. 1906), gives an excellent exposition of the theory of mensural music; his treatise Der Kontrapunkt (1862; 2d ed. 1877) revives the theories of J. J. Fux's 'Gradus ad Parnassum,' his adherence to which B. attempted to justify in a pamphlet Die Grösse d. mus. Intervalle als Grundlage d. Harmonie (1873). He also contributed interesting articles to the 'Allgem. musikal. Zeitung' (1868–74) and publ. a biography of E. A. Grell (1899).

Belleville-Oury, Caroline de, brilliant pianist, b. Landshut, Bavaria, Jan. 24, 1808; d. Munich, July 22, 1880. Pupil of Karl Czerny; made long concert-tours, and lived for many years in London, where she married the violinist Oury. Her popular pf.-comps. are, properly speaking, arrangements.

Bell'Haver, Vincenzo. See BELL'AVERE.

Bel'li, Domenico, from 1610–13 Gagliano's successor as teacher of singing at S. Lorenzo, Florence; early comp. for accomp. solo voice; publ. Arie a 1 e 2 voci per sonare con il chitarrone (1616), and Orfeo dolente (5 Intermezzi to Tasso's Aminta; 1616).

Bel'li, Girolamo, composer of the Venetian school; b. in Argenta (Ferrara), 1552; a pupil of L. Luzzaschi; chapel-singer to the Duke of Mantua.—Publ. 3 books of madrigals a 6 (1583, '84, '93), 9 books of madrigals a 5 (1584, '86; the 9th, 1617); 2 books of canzonets a 4 (1584, '93); Sacrae cantiones a 6 (1585), a 8 (1589), and a 10 (1594); 2 magnificats (1610); and Salmi a 5; some 5-p. madrigals in the coll. 'De' floridi virtuosi d'Italia' (1586).

Bel'li, Giulio, b. Longiano, c. 1560; in 1582, music-director at the cathedral in Imola; 1590, Franciscan friar at Carpi, and m. di capp. there; after living in Ferrara, Venice, and other cities he returned to Imola in 1607 as m. di capp. at S. Antonio.—Biogr. by A. Brigidi: Cenni sulla vita e sulle opere di G. B. (Modena, 1865; pp. 19).—He publ. canzonets a 4 (1584, '86, '93, '95); also madrigals (1589, '92); but was chiefly important as a church composer, publishing from 1586 to 1621 a great number of masses, motets, psalms, vespers, sacrae cantiones, etc.—See Q.-Lex.

Bellincio'ni [-choh'nē], Gemma, Italian dramatic soprano; b. Como, Italy, Aug. 19, 1866. Taught by her father, Cesare B., and Corsi (1880); début at the Fiorentini Th., Naples, in 1881, in Pedrotti's Tutti en maschera. The same year she married the tenor Stagno (q. v.). She then travelled for several years in Spain with Tamberlik; has sung on all principal stages of Italy, including La Scala; has toured South America and (1899) the United States in opera; has also toured Germany, Russia, Austria, Rumania, Portugal, Switzerland, and England. Her creations include the prima-donna rôles in Cavalleria Rusticana (1890), Fedora, A Santa Lucia, Lorenza, La Martire, Saffo (Massenet; in Ital.), Nozze istriane, Moïna (at Monte Carlo; in French), Labilia (Spinelli), Rudello (Ferroni). Favorite rôles are Carmen, Sapho, Manon, Violetta, Totea, Santuzza, Fedora; besides which she has about thirty more actually sung on the stage. Violetta (Traviata) is considered her most striking impersonation. Her voice is brilliant in the high register, though apt to be dull in the medium; but always of strong emotional power and intensity. In 1911 she settled in Berlin as a teacher.—Her daughter Bianca made her début at Graz in 1913. A Belli'ni, Vincenzo, famous opera-comp.; b. Catania, Sicily, Nov. 3, 1801; d. Puteaux, near Paris, Sept. 23, 1835. Taught at first by his father, an organist, he was sent in 1819, at the expense of a nobleman impressed by the boy's talent, to the Conservatorio di San Sebastiano at Naples. Here his instruction from the masters Furno, Tritto and Zingarelli was carried on until 1827 with the slovenly lack of method then prevailing in the institution; B. probably profited far more by his private and zealous study of Haydn and Mozart, Jommelli and Paisiello, and, above all, Pergolesi. His student-compositions were a romance, an aria, a symphony for full orch., two masses, several psalms, and a cantata, Ismene; finally his first opera, Adelson e Salvini, was perf. by Cons. pupils on Jan. 12, 1825, and its success encouraged him to further dramatic effort. Barbaja, manager of the San Carlo Th., Naples, and La Scala, Milan, commissioned B. to write an opera, and Bianca e Fernando was enthusiastically received at the former theatre in 1826; followed in 1827 by Il Pirata, and in 1829 by La Straniera, both in Milan. It is interesting to note that the librettist of Il Pirata, Felice Romani, wrote the books of all the succeeding operas except I Puritani. B. met his first reverse at Parma, for the inauguration of the Teatro Nuovo in which town he wrote to order the opera Zaira (1829), which was a flat failure. Undismayed, he accepted a fresh order from La Fenice Theatre at Venice, for which he composed in forty days the opera I Capuleti e Montecchi (1830), which was hailed as a masterwork. After a severe illness, he brought out La Sonnambula at the Teatro Carcano, Milan (1831); with this work, and Norma, which was given at La Scala on Dec. 26, 1831, B. rose to the height of his powers and the zenith of his fame—yet Norma, which B. himself considered his greatest work, and in which Giuditta Pasta created the title-rôle, was coldly received that first evening! But in brief space its beauties were recognized, and the warmth of its reception in other cities, notably in Paris (1835), amply justified its author's verdict. His Beatrice di Tenda (Venice, 1833) shows a distinct falling-off, and failed of popular appreciation. In 1834 he was invited to write an opera for the Théâtre Italien at Paris; this was I Puritani, libretto by Count Pepoli; its triumphant production was the composer's last great success, for, although commissioned immediately to write two more operas for the San Carlo Th., he died at the village of Puteaux, whither he had retired to work on the new scores. Forty years later, his remains were removed to Catania, where a monument was erected to his memory; another monument, due to the exertions of his bosom friend, Francesco Florimo, was dedicated at Naples in 1886.

Bellini's genius is exhibited in the grace, tenderness, pathos and fervor of his melodies, fashioned with a consummate knowledge of vocal resource and effect. On the other hand, his scores show the worst defects of the old Italian school—monotony in harmony, and amateurish instrumentation; for these his imperfect training is doubtless largely responsible. In his best moments he surpasses his brilliant contemporary, Rossini, in the grace and sensuous warmth and charm of his melodies; in other respects he is the latter's inferior.—BIBLIOGRAPHY: F. Cicconetti, *Vita di V. Benedict, Sir Julius, b. Stuttgart, Nov. 27, 1804; d. London, June 5, 1885. He was the son of a Jewish banker; pupil of Abeille, Hummel (1819, Weimar), and Weber (1820, Dresden). In 1823, Kapellm. at the Kärnthnerthor Th., Vienna, and 1825 at the San Carlo Th., Naples, where his first opera, Giacinta ed Ernesto (1829), was performed, which, like I Portoghesi in Goa (Stuttgart, 1830) was not a marked success. After 2 visits to Paris (1830 and '35), he settled in London, where he became a fashionable pf.-teacher and concert-giver, and also thoroughly anglicized. 1836, conductor of opera buffa at the Lyceum, 1837 at Drury Lane, where his first English opera, The Gypsy's Warning, was produced (1838). In 1850 and '51 he was conductor to Jenny Lind on her American tours; then became Col. Mapleson's conductor at Her Majesty's Th. and Drury Lane, and in 1859 at Covent Garden; also of the Monday Popular Concerts. He also conducted the Norwich Festivals from 1845–78, and (1876–80) the Liverpool Philharmonic. He was knighted in 1871.

—Works: The operas above mentioned, and also The Brides of Venice (April 2, 1844), The Crusaders (1846), The Lake of Glenaston (1862), The Lily of Killarney (1862; on the Continent as The Rose of Erin), The Bride of Song (1864); 4 cantatas, Undine (1860), Richard Cœur-de-Lion (1863), 1 on the Prince of Wales' return from India (1876), and Graziella (1882; given London, 1883, as an opera); 2 oratorios, St. Cecilia (1866), and St. Peter (1870); 2 symphonies (1873, '74), 2 pf.-concertos, a variety of pf.-music, etc. He also wrote biogr. sketches of Mendelssohn and Weber (in Hueffer's 'Great Musicians').

Benedict, Milo Ellsworth, b. Cornwall, Vt., June 9, 1866. Pf.-pupil of C. Petersilea, in theory of J. K. Paine; in Europe 1883–4, spending 3 mos. at Weimar w. Liszt. Living as pf.-teacher in Boston. Has publ. 6 Cornwall Dances, op. 1; other pf.-works in MS.

Benedic'tus Ap'penzelders (B. of Appenzell), b. Appenzell, Switzerland; successor of Jean Gossins as master of the boys' choir in the 'chapelle royale' at Brussels, 1539–55.—Works: 1 book of 4-part motets, Liber primus eccl. cantionum, etc. (Antwerp, 1553). NOT the same as 'Benedictus Ducis' [see DUCIS], whose comps. are frequently confounded with the Appenzeller's.

Benel'li, Alemanno. Pen-name of ERCOLE BOTTRIGARI.

Benel'li, Antonio Peregrino, b. Forli, Romagna, Sept. 5, 1771; d. Börnichau, Saxony, Aug. 16, 1830. In 1790, first tenor at San Carlo Th., Naples; in London, 1798; at Dresden, 1801–22, when his voice failed; then teacher of singing at the R. Theatre School, Berlin; dismissed 1829 on account of a bitter and unjust attack on his benefactor Spontini. Publ. a Vocal Method (Dresden, 1819); considerable vocal music, and Solfeggî; and a few pf.-pieces.—See Q.-Lex.

Bene'voli, Orazio, b. Rome, 1602, as the natural son of Duke Albert of Lorraine; d. there June 17, 1672. Pupil of V. Ugolini; m. di capp. of several Roman churches, and finally at the Vatican (1646). Of the highest personal character, and a contrapuntist of lofty genius, he lived and died in poverty. His polyphonic vocal works (masses in 12, 16, 24 and even 48 parts—the mass performed at Sta. Maria sopra Minerva, Rome, in 1650, is for 12 choirs, i. e., 48 real parts—motets, psalms and offertories up to 30 parts) are the culminating point of the polychoric a cappella style; he was likewise a pioneer in choral comp. with obbligato instrumental accomp. (his mass for the consecration of Salzburg cathedral, 1628, is written on 54 staves). Few of his works were publ.; most are in MS. in the Vatican libr.—See Q.-Lex.

Beninco'ri, Angelo Maria, b. Brescia, March 28, 1779; d. Paris, Dec. 30, 1821. Lived in Spain, Italy and Vienna till 1803, when he went to Paris, and brought out three unsuccessful operas; the only successful one, Aladin (Paris, 1822; left unfinished by Isouard, for which B. wrote the last three acts, and a march for the first act), was prod. 6 weeks after his death. An excellent violinist, he publ. string-quartets (op. 2, 3, 4, 5, 8) and 3 pf.-trios (op. 6).

Bennet, Théodore. See THÉODORE RITTER.

Bennett, George John, b. Andover, Hampshire, May 5, 1863. Won the Balfe scholarship, and studied at the R. A. M. under G. A. Macfarren and C. Steggall (1878–84); then at the R. Hochschule in Berlin with H. Barth (pf.) and F. Kiel (comp.), and from 1885–7 at Munich with H. Bussmeyer (pf.) and J. Rheinberger (comp.); elected F. R. A. M. and app. prof. of harm. and comp. there in 1888; Mus. Doc.,Cantab., in 1893; filled several positions as org. from 1890–5; since 1895 org. of Lincoln Cath. and cond. of the festivals; also cond. of Lincoln Mus. Soc. and Orch. Soc.; F. R. C. O.—Works: 2 overtures for orch., Jugendträume and Cymbeline; Festival Evening Service in A with orch. (for dedication of St. Paul's Cath., 1890); Mass in B♭ m. for soli, ch. and orch.; Festival Te Deum for do.; Easter Hymn for do.; Suite in D m. for orch.; a pf.-trio in E; pieces for pf.; do. for org.; songs; part-songs; anthems; etc.

Bennett, Joseph, prominent Engl. mus. critic and writer; b. Berkeley, Gloucestershire, Nov. 29, 1831; d. Purton, n. Berkeley, June 12, 1911. He learned to play several instruments; was precentor at the Weigh House Chapel, and organist of Westminster Chapel; then mus. critic for the 'Sunday Times,' 'Pall Mall Gazette,' and 'Graphic,' also contributing to several other mus. journals. His most important work was done as a writer on the staff of the 'Musical Times' and 'Daily Telegraph.' He edited the 'Concordia' 1875–6, and 'The Lute' 1883–6. From 1885–1903 he annotated the programs of the Philh. Soc.; he also succeeded J. W. Davison as writer of the analytical programs for the Saturday and Monday Popular Concerts. B. has furnished several English composers with some of their best libretti.—Publ. Letters from Bayreuth (1877); The Musical Year (1883); History of the Leeds Musical Festivals, 1859–89 (1892; with F. R. Spark); and Primers of mus. biography. His Story of Ten Hundred Concerts (1887) is an account of the rise of the Sat. Pop. Concerts, 1857–87. His last work was Forty Years of Music (1908).

Ben'nett, Sir William Sterndale, distinguished English comp.; b. Sheffield, April 13, 1816; d. London, Feb. 1, 1875. His father, an organist, died when B. was but 3 years old, and he was educated by his grandfather, John B., a lay-clerk at Cambridge. At 8 he entered the choir of King's College Chapel, and at 10 the R. A. M. (pupil of Ch. Lucas, Dr. Crotch, C. Potter and W. H. Holmes), where he played, in 1833, an original pf.-concerto in D m., publ. later by the Academy. In 1837 the Broadwoods sent him to Leipzig for one year, a visit repeated in 1841–2; he was intimate with Schumann and Mendelssohn, and the influence of both, particularly the latter, is reflected in some of his comps. From 1843–56, he gave a series of chamber-concerts in England; married Mary Anne Wood in 1844; founded the Bach Society in 1849; conducted the concerts of the Philh. Society 1856–66, and the Leeds Mus. Festival in 1858. In 1856, too, he received the title of Mus. Doc. from Cambridge, after his election to the chair of Musical Professor there. In 1866 he was chosen Principal of the R. A. M., then resigning the conductorship of the Philh. The additional degree of M. A. was conferred on him by Cambridge in 1867; that of D. C. L., by Oxford, in 1870; and in 1871 he was knighted. The subscription-fund of the Bennett testimonial presented him at St. James' Hall, 1872, was converted by the recipient into a scholarship at the R. A. M. He is buried in Westminster Abbey.—Sterndale Bennett ranks high among English composers of genuine originality. Himself a pianist of rare ability, he favors the piano above all, and his finest productions are, so to speak, inspired by its peculiarities. The tale of his works is scanty, but in polish, refinement and careful elaboration they vie with the best in musical art.—Works: Op. 1, 1st pf.-concerto, in D m. (1832); op. 2, Capriccio for pf., in D; op. 3, overture Parisina, for orch. (1834); op. 4, 2nd pf.-concerto, E♭; op. 8, sextet for pf. and strings; op. 9, 3rd pf.-concerto, in C m. (1834); op. 10, 3 Mus. Sketches for pf.; op. 11, 6 Studies for pf.; op. 12, 3 Impromptus for pf.; op. 13, Sonata f. pf.; op. 14, 3 Romances f. pf.; op. 15, overture The Naiads, for orch.; op. 16, Fantasia for pf. (1842); op. 17, 3 Diversions f. pf. 4 hands; op. 18, Allegro grazioso for pf.; op. 19, 4th pf.-concerto, in F m. (1836); op. 20, overture The Wood-nymphs, for orch.; op. 22, Caprice in E, for pf. and orch.; op. 23, 6 songs with pf.; op. 24, Suite de pièces for pf. (1843); op. 25, Rondo piacevole for pf.; op. 26, pf.-trio (1844); op. 27, Scherzo for pf.; op. 28, Rondino f. pf.; op. 29, 2 Studies f. pf.; op. 30, 4 sacred duets; op. 31, Tema e variazioni for pf.; op. 32, Sonata-Duo for pf. and 'cello (1852); op. 33, 60 Preludes and Lessons for pf.; op. 34, Rondo for pf.; op. 35, 6 songs w. pf.; op. 36, Flowers of the Months; op. 37, Rondo à la polonaise, for pf.; op. 38, Toccata for pf.; op. 39, The May Queen, a Pastoral (cantata by Chorley), for soli, ch. and orch. (Leeds, 1858); op. 40, Ode (by Tennyson); op. 41, Cambridge Installation Ode (1862); op. 42, Fantasie-Overture, Paradise and the Peri, for orch. (1863); op. 43, symphony in G m.; op. 44, oratorio The Woman of Samaria (Birmingham, 1867); op. 45, music to Sophocles' Ajax; op. 46, pf.-sonata The Maid of Orleans. Also, overtures The Merry Wives of Windsor and Marie du Bois; a pf.-quintet, with wind; pf.-music, part-songs, anthems, songs, and collections of chants.—Cf. J. R. S. Bennett, The Life of W. St. B. (Cambridge, 1907); 'The Musical Times' from May to August, 1903, contains an interesting series of articles on B.; also see F. Corder, W. S. B. and His Music (in 'Mus. Times,' May, 1916).

Ben'newitz, Anton, b. Přivret, Bohemia, March 26, 1833. Violinist; from 1882–1901 Director of Prague Cons.

Benoist [bŭ-nwäh'], François, b. Nantes, Sept. 10, 1794; d. Paris, April, 1878. Pupil of Paris Cons., 1811–15, and Grand Prix de Rome; returning from Italy in 1819, he became organist of the Chapel Royal, and organ-prof. at the Cons.; in 1840, 'chef du chant' at the Opéra; pensioned in 1872.—Works: 2 operas, Léonore et Félix (1821) and l'Apparition (1848); 4 ballets, La Gipsy (1839), Le Diable amoureux (1840), Nisida, ou les Amazons des Açores (1848), and Pâquerette (1851); a Requiem mass for 3 men's voices and a child's voice, with organ ad lib.; and 12 books of organ-works, 'Bibliothèque de l'organiste.'

Benoît [bŭ-nwäh'], Pierre-Léonard-Léopold, eminent Flemish composer and man of letters; b. Harlebeke, Belgium, Aug. 17, 1834; d. Antwerp, March 8, 1901. While studying in the Brussels Cons., 1851–55, he prod. a small opera in the Parktheater, and wrote the music to a number of Flemish melodramas; he became cond. of the above theatre in 1856, and won the Prix de Rome in 1857 with his cantata Le Meurtre d'Abel. He now studied in Leipzig, Dresden, Munich and Berlin, and sent an essay to the Brussels Academy on L'école de musique flamande et son avenir. In 1861 the Théâtre-Lyrique of Paris accepted his opera Le Roi des aulnes; while awaiting its performance, B. acted as cond. at the Bouffes-Parisiens; but the opera was not given. In 1867 he founded the Flemish Music-School at Antwerp, which in 1899 was instituted the Royal Flemish Cons., B. remaining as its director. The goal of his life-work was to create a national Flemish school of musical composition; but the tendency of his compositions is strongly influenced by modern French and German music. —Works: Messe solennelle (1862); Te Deum (1863); Requiem (1863); the Flemish oratorio Lucifer (1866); the 3 Flemish operas Het dorp in't gebergte and Isa (1867), Pompeja (1896); oratorio, De Scheide (1869); Drama Christi, a sacred drama for soli, ch., org., 'celli, double-basses, trumpets and trombones (1871); De Oorlog (War; a cantata for double ch., soli, and enlarged orch., 1873); a 'Children's Oratorio'; a choral symphony, De Maaiers [The Mowers]; music to Charlotte Corday, and to van Goethem's drama Willem de Zwijger (1876); the 'Rubens cantata' Flanderens kunstroem, for mixed ch., children's ch., and orch. (1877); Antwerpen, for triple male ch. (1877); Joncfrou Kathelijne, scena for alto solo and orch. (1879); Muse der Geschiedenis, for ch. and orch. (1880); Hucbald, for double ch., baritone solo, and orch. with harp (1880); Triomfmarsch (1880); oratorio De Rhijn, for soli, ch. and orch. (1889); a mass; motets with organ; Liefde in't leven and Liefdedrama, songs; Sagen en Balladen, for pf.; a pf.-concerto; a flute-concerto, etc.—Writings: De vlaamsche Muziekschool van Antwerpen (1873); Considérations à propos d'un projet pour l'institution de Festivals en Belgique (1874); Verhandeling over de nationale Toonkunde (2 vols., 1877–9); De muzikale Opvoeding en Opleiding in Belgie (no date); Het droombeeld eener muzikale Wereldkunst (no date); De Oorsprong van het Cosmopolitisme in die Muziek (1876); Overschijn en blijk in onze muzikale vlaamsche beweging (no date); Onze muzikale beweging op dramatisch gebied (no date); Onze nederlandsche muzikale eenheid (no date); Brieven over Noord-Nederland (no date); Een koninklijk vlaamsch Conservatorium te Antwerpen (no date); and many contributions to musical and other journals. In 1880 B. became corresponding member, and in 1882 full member, of the Royal Academy, Brussels.—Cf. M. E. Belpaire, Een vlaamsche meester: P. B. (Belfort, 1901); C. Stoffels, *P. Berg'mann, Karl, b. Ebersbach, Saxony, 1821; d. New York, Aug. 16, 1876; studied under Zimmermann in Zittau, and Hesse in Breslau. Went to America 1850 with the travelling 'Germania' Orch., and was later its cond. until its dissolution (1854); also of the Handel and Haydn Soc., 1852–4. In 1855, entered Philh. Orch., N. Y., cond. the concerts alternately with Th. Eisfeld till 1862, then sole cond. until his death. Also conducted the Germ. male chorus 'Arion' for several years. B. was an eminent conductor, a good pianist and 'cellist; an ardent admirer of Wagner, Liszt, etc., he rendered important services to the cause of music in America by introducing their works.

Berg'ner, Wilhelm, b. Riga, Nov. 4, 1837; d. there June 9, 1907. 1861, organist of the English church at Riga; 1868–1906, of Riga cathedral. He founded a Bach Society, and a cathedral-choir, and was a zealous promoter of music in Riga; he brought about the first production of Rubinstein's sacred opera Moses (Feb. 20, 1894), and procured the building of the great organ in the cathedral by Walcker (1882–3).

Bergon'zi, Carlo, from circa 1716-47 violin-maker at Cremona; Stradivari's best pupil. His son, Michelangelo, and his 2 nephews, Niccolo and Carlo Bergonzi, were of minor importance.

Berg'son, Michael, b. Warsaw, May, 1820; d. London, March 9, 1898. Pianist and comp.; pupil of Schneider (Dessau), and Rungenhagen and Taubert (Berlin). Went to Paris (1840), and to Italy in 1846, where his opera Luisa di Montfort was successfully prod. (Florence, 1847). After living in Vienna (1850–3), Berlin and Leipzig, he revisited Paris, and brought out a 1-act operetta Qui va à la chasse, perd sa place (1859). In 1863, 1st pf.-teacher in, and in a short time director of, Geneva Cons.; went to London in a few years, and lived there as a private teacher.—Works: For pf., 12 Grandes Études, op. 62; École du mécanisme, op. 65; Concerto symphonique in E m.; Trio, op. 5; Polonaise héroïque, op. 72; Sonata with flute; Duo dramatique for pf. and flute; duos for pf. and vln.; Mazurkas, Fantasias, etc.

Bergt, Christian Gottlob August, celebrated teacher, composer and organist; b. Öderan, Saxony, June 17, 1772; d. Bautzen, Feb. 10, 1837, where he was organist from 1802, also music-teacher at the Seminary and conductor of the singing society.—His sacred music (a Passion-Oratorio, op. 10; the hymns So weit der Sonne Strahlen, op. 17, and Christus ist erstanden, op. 18, for 4 voices and orch.; a Te Deum; the canticle Herr Gott, dich loben wir, reset; etc.), is well known throughout Germany; he also wrote 6 operas, several symphonies, sonatas for pf. and violin, etc.; a set of Lieder, Congé, also became very popular. His book Briefwechsel eines alten und jungen Schulmeisters (1838) contains a biographical sketch.—See Q.-Lex.

Be'ringer, Oscar, b. Furtwangen, Baden, July 14, 1844; brought up in London. Pupil of Leipzig Cons. (Plaidy, Moscheles, Reinecke) 1864–6; later, at Berlin, of Tausig, Ehrlich, and Weitzmann. He became prof. in the 'Schule des höheren Klavierspiels' at Berlin in 1869; returned to London in 1871, and in 1873 established a similar institution there:—'Acad. for the Higher Development of Pf.-playing' (closed in 1897). Since 1885, pf.-prof. in R. A. M. He is a pianist of great perfection of method, and his book of Technical Exercises is valuable; he has published 2

sonatinas and other pf.-pieces; some songs; also Fifty Years' Experience of Pianoforte Teaching and Playing (1907).

Be'ringer, Robert, brother of preceding, b. Furtwangen, June 14, 1841. Has given many concerts in London and the provinces; from 1861, pianist at the Crystal Palace; cond. of choral societies, and lecturer on music. Has written pf.-music, orchestral pcs., songs, etc.

Bériot [bā-rē-oh′], Charles(-Auguste) de, famous violinist; b. Louvain, Feb. 20, 1802; d. there April 8, 1870. Though sometimes called the pupil of Viotti and Baillot, he owed his technical foundation to the careful instruction of his guardian, Tiby, a provincial teacher. At 9 he played a concerto by Viotti in public; and his later wonderful development was due to his native musical talent and individuality. He went to Paris in 1821; made a triumphant début there; became chamber-violinist to the King of France; played successfully in many concerts in England; was app. solo violinist to the King of the Netherlands (1826–30); lost position and salary through the Revolution, and from 1830–5 made concert-tours through Europe, many with Mme. Garcia-Malibran, whom he married in 1836. After her death in Sept., de B. did not appear in public until 1840, on a tour in Germany. From 1843–52 he was prof. of vln. at Brussels Cons.; failure of eyesight, and paralysis of left arm, necessitated his retirement.—He publ. 7 vln.-concertos; 4 pf.-trios; several duos brillants for pf. and vln.; 11 sets of variations for vln.; also Premier Guide des violonistes; Méthode de Violon (3 parts; Paris, 1858; his best work); many studies for vln.; etc.—Cf. No. VI of 'De fidiculis opuscula' (1894) by Edward Heron-Allen: A Contribution towards an Accurate Biography of De Bériot and Malibran.

Bériot, Charles-Wilfride de, son of preceding; b. Paris, Feb. 12, 1833; d. Sceaux du Gâtinais, Oct. 22, 1914. Pianist, pupil of Thalberg (1855). Prof. of pf. at Paris Cons.—Works: Symphonic poem 'Fernand Cortez; overtures; 3 pf.-concertos; Opéras sans paroles for pf. and vln.; a Fantaisie-Ballet for vln.; a septet; 2 pf.-quartets; a pf.-trio; sonata for pf. and flute; about 60 comps. for pf.; songs, etc. With his father he wrote a Méthode d'accompagnement.

Berlijn [-līn′] (or Berlyn), Anton (or Aron Wolf [?]), b. Amsterdam, May 2, 1817; d. there Jan. 16, 1870. Pupil of L. Erk and B. Koch; also of G. W. Fink at Leipzig. For years he was conductor of the Royal Th., Amsterdam. He wrote 9 operas; 7 ballets; an oratorio, Moses auf Nebo; a symph. cantata; a mass; symphonies, overtures, chamber-music, etc.

Berlioz [bär-lē-ŏhz], Hector(-Louis), a composer of such marked and powerful individuality and wide-spread influence that he has been called the 'father of [ultra-] modern orchestration,' was born at Côte-Saint-André, near Grenoble, France, Dec. 11, 1803; d. Paris, March 8, 1869. His father, a physician, sent him to Paris to study medicine under Amussat; carried away by his passion for music, however (although the flageolet and guitar were the only instrs. he could play), he forsook his medical studies in defiance of parental authority and a cutting-off of his allowance. Entering the Conservatory, he managed to subsist by joining the chorus of the 'Gymnase dramatique'; impatient of Reicha's formal system of instruction, he soon left the Cons., determined to follow his own bent. Fired by the revolt of the new 'romantic' school against the sway of the 'classics,' B. devoted himself heart and soul to the former cause. His first essay in composition, an orchestral Mass given at St.-Roch in 1825, was unintelligible both to executants and hearers, and made him an object of ridicule; still, nothing daunted, he persevered in his chosen path, which led straight to the realm of the most outspoken and elaborate program-music. His next works (1828) were two overtures, Waverly and Les Francs-Juges, and a 'symphonie phantastique,' Épisode de la vie d'un artiste. To these, and other less-known pieces, he added, at a concert in 1829, a composition entitled Concerts des Sylphes, with the following printed program: 'Mephistopheles, to excite in Faust's soul the love of pleasure, convokes the spirits of the air, and bids them sing; after preluding on their magic instrs., they describe an enchanted land, whose happy inhabitants are intoxicated with ever-renewed voluptuous delights; little by little the charm takes effect, the voices of the sylphs die away, and Faust falls asleep to dream delicious dreams.' It shows how far B. had already travelled, at the age of 25, in this direction. In 1826, to obtain 'protection' in his efforts to compete for the great prizes, he had reëntered the Cons., taking a course in free composition with Lesueur. Cherubini long opposed his admission to the annual competitions; at length, in 1830, he bore off the Grand prix de Rome with a cantata, Sardanapale. From his sojourn of 18 months in Rome and Naples, he brought back the overture to King Lear, and a sequel to the 'symphonie fantastique'—Lélio, ou le retour à la vie. By brilliant journalistic work in the 'Journal des Débats,' the 'Gazette musicale,' etc., he increased his prominence, and became a power in musical Paris. And now his symphony Harold en Italie (1834), the Messe des morts (1837), the dramatic symphony Roméo et Juliette, with vocal soli and chorus (1839), and the Carnaval romain were received with pæans of praise in the press; though the attitude of the public was more reserved. But his first dramatic attempt, the 2-act opera semi-seria Benvenuto Cellini (Grand Opéra, Sept. 3, 1838), was rejected in toto by the general public at Paris, and also a fortnight later at London; though the chosen few at Weimar lauded it to the skies. For Liszt was in active sympathy with B., adopting and transmuting the latter's ideas in his own irresistibly genial and original fashion. In 1839 B. was made Conservator of the Conservatory, and, in 1852, librarian, an appointment held until death; the coveted professorship was, nevertheless, jealously denied him. In 1843 his first concert-giving tour in Germany, etc., met with great success, which he recorded in his Voyage musical en Allemagne et en Italie (1844; 2 vols.). Similar excursions through Austria, Hungary, Bohemia and Silesia (1845), and Russia (1847), were equally fortunate. In London (1852) he conducted the first series of the 'New Philh. Concerts'; in 1853 his Benvenuto Cellini was performed at Covent Garden under his bâton. Béatrice et Bénédict, a 2-act comic opera, was likewise brought out by himself at Baden-Baden (1862). He was appointed a member of the juries at the exhibitions in London and Paris, 1855 and 1861; elected member of the Académie in 1856; and decorated with the cross of the Legion of Honor. His last foreign trip was to Petrograd, by invitation of the Grand Duchess Hélène, to bring out his Damnation de Faust. In 1864 the fees from 21 representations of Les Troyens at the Th.-Lyrique, with the sum realized from the sale of the pf.-score, yielded an income, placed at interest, equal to his salary as critic for the 'Journal des Débats', and he at once resigned his post with the following outburst: 'At last, after thirty years' bondage, I am free! No more feuilletons to write, no more commonplaces to excuse, no more mediocrities to praise, no more indignation to suppress; no more lies, no more comedies, no more mean compromises. I am free! I need never again set foot in a lyric theatre, nor speak of nor listen to nor even laugh at the queer medley of music produced there. Gloria in excelsis Deo, et in terra pax hominibus bonæ voluntatis!'.—The evening of his life was overcast by the failure of his opera, Les Troyens à Carthage (1863), and the death of his son Louis (1867). During his lifetime he met with little real appreciation in his native country, though posthumous honors are now showered upon him; but the somewhat artificial 'Berlioz cult' in France in no way rivals the German Wagner movement. Indeed, Germany has most generously honored B.'s memory by the first complete production, under Mottl's direction, of the opera Les Troyens (in two parts: La Prise de Troie, 3 acts, and Les Troyens à Carthage in 5 acts) at Karlsruhe in 1897. His bizarre yet very popular 'oratorio,' La Damnation de Faust (1846), perhaps marks the culmination of B.'s striving after the purely fantastic; but his passion for unprecedented orchestral combinations and gigantic mass-effects was unsated, and he certainly carried the science of orchestration to wonderful opulence. His Traité d'instrumentation (Engl. transl., London; latest German ed. 1905, by Richard Strauss; also a 'Supplément' entitled 'Technique de l'orchestre moderne,' by Widor [1905; German transl. by Riemann]) long held first place among works of its class (Gevaert's great treatise is more modern and complete). Besides the Voyage musical he publ. Les Soirées de l'orchestre (1853), Grotesques de la musique (1859), A travers chants (1862), and his Mémoires (1870; 2nd ed. 1876, 2 vols.; Engl. transl. London, 1884), containing an autobiography from 1803–65; Les Musiciens et la Musique is a series of articles coll. from the 'Journal des Débats' (1903, with introd. by André Hallays). His prose style is both forceful and polished—garnished with caustic wit and fanciful conceits; in verse he penned the words to his l'Enfance du Christ (see below), also to the operas Béatrice et Bénédict and Les Troyens.—Other large compositions, besides works already mentioned, are the sacred trilogy l'Enfance du Christ (Part I, Le Songe d'Hérode; II, La Fuite en Égypte; III, l'Arrivée à Saïs); a Te Deum for 3 choirs, orch. and organ; a Grande symphonie funèbre et triomphale for full military band, with strings and chorus ad lib.; overture to Le Corsaire; Le cinq Mai, for bass solo, ch. and orch. (for the anniversary of Napoleon's death); also other instrumental and choral works, songs, transcriptions. A complete edition of Berlioz's works in about 24 vols., ed. by Ch. Malherbe and F. Weingartner, is being published by Breitkopf & Härtel. So far (1916) 18 vols. have appeared. His literary works were translated into German by R. Pohl, and publ. in 4 vols. (1864). A new German ed., translated by E. Ellès and G. Savic, in 10 vols. (including the entire correspondence), was issued by Breitkopf & Härtel (Leipzig, 1903–12). Volume x contains the treatise on Instrumentation, tr. by D. Schultz and W. Niemann, ed. by Weingartner.

Kullak's Ästhetik des Klavierspiels (Berlin, 1876 and 1889; English translation New York, 1895); publ. an Auswahl Händel'scher Klavierwerke; a Kritische Ausgabe von J. S. Bach's Klavierwerken; etc.

Bisch'off, Hermann, b. Duisburg, Jan. 7, 1868. Pupil of Jadassohn at the Leipzig Cons.; living in Munich. Has written 2 symphonies (E and D m.); a symph. poem, Pan; Gewittersegen; also Das deutsche Lied (1905).

Bisch'off, Kaspar Jakob, b. Ansbach, Apr. 7, 1823; d. Munich, Oct. 26, 1893, where he studied (1842) under Ett, Stuntz, and Franz Lachner, and 1848–9 in Leipzig. Founded (1850) an 'Evangelical Sacred Choral Society' at Frankfort, where he lived as a singing-teacher.—Works: An opera, Maske und Mantilla (Frankfort, 1852); 3 symphonies; overture to Hamlet; chamber- and church-music, etc.; also a Manual of Harmony (1890).

Bisch'off, Ludwig Friedrich Christian, b. Dessau (where his father, Karl, was court-musician), Nov. 27, 1794; d. Cologne, Feb. 24, 1867. 1823–49, director of gymnasium at Wesel; founder (1850) and editor of the 'Rheinische Musikzeitung' at Cologne, superseded (1853) by the 'Niederrheinische Musikzeitung'; he translated Oulibicheff's Beethoven (1859) into German.

Bishop, Sir Henry Rowley, noted English composer; b. London, Nov. 18, 1786; d. there Apr. 30, 1855. Pupil of Francesco Bianchi; attracted attention by his first opera, The Circassian Bride (Drury Lane, 1809); 1810–11 comp. and cond. at Covent Garden, 1813 alternate cond. of the Philharmonic, 1819 oratorio-cond. at Covent Garden, 1825 cond. at Drury Lane Th., 1830 Musical Director at Vauxhall; took degree of Mus. Bac. at Oxford, 1839; 1840–1, mus. dir. at Covent Garden; 1841–3, Prof. of Mus. at Edinburgh; knighted in 1842; cond. of Ancient Concerts, 1840–8; in 1848 was app. Prof. of Mus. at Oxford (succeeding Dr. Crotch), where he received the degree of Mus. Doc. in 1853. A remarkably prolific dramatic composer, having produced about 130 operas, farces, ballets, adaptations, etc. His operas are generally in the style of English ballad-opera; some of the best are Cortez, The Fall of Algiers, The Knight of Snowdon, and Oberon. He also wrote The Fallen Angel (oratorio), The Seventh Day (cantata), etc.; his glees and other lyric vocal productions are deservedly esteemed. (An article on the Glees, by G. A. Macfarren, is in the 'Musical Times' of 1864, April et seq.) He publ. vol. i of Melodies of Various Nations; also 3 vols. of National Melodies, to which Moore wrote the poems.

Bispham [bisp'h'm], David (Scull), admirable dramatic and concert baritone; b. Philadelphia, Jan. 5, 1857. He sang at first as an amateur in the principal choruses of Philadelphia, and the choirs of Holy Trinity and St. Mark's churches, also in private theatricals. In 1886 he went to Milan, studying there with Vannuccini, Hall, and (1887–90) Francesco Lamperti; later in London with Shakespeare and Randegger. Professional operatic début as Longueville in Messager's Basoche at the R. Engl. Opera House, London, Nov. 3, 1891, and 'won immediate favour by his humorous acting and artistic singing' [Grove]. First appearance in serious opera at Drury Lane, June 25, 1892, as Kurwenal, one of his best parts; the baritone rôles in Wagner's operas are his specialties, particularly Beckmesser. After the autumn of 1896 he divided his time between Covent Garden and the New York Metropolitan Opera (down to 1908–9). He created the rôles of William the Conqueror in Cowen's Harold, Chillingsworth in Damrosch's The Scarlet Letter (Boston, Feb. 10, 1896), Benedick in Stanford's Much Ado about Nothing, and Rudolph in Miss Smyth's Der Wald. Some of his other rôles (favorites in sm. caps.) are Pizzarro; Caspar and Ottokar (Freischütz); Mephistopheles and Valentin; Escamillo (Carmen); De Nevers; Figaro (Nozze); Tonio and Silvio (Pagliacci); Alfio (Cavalleria Rusticana); Vulcan (Phil. et Baucis); MEFISTO (Mefistofele, Boito); Philippo (Don Carlos); Iago; FALSTAFF; Manru; Johannes (Evangelimann); Peter (Hänsel und Gretel); Fiorenzo (Rantzau). In 1895 he sang the part of Christ in the St. Matthew Passion at the Bach Festival, and has sung chief parts in Perosi's oratorios. For several seasons he gave series of recitals in London and New York, being the first to sing Brahms's 'Four Serious Songs' in Britain and America. In recitation (Enoch Arden, with R. Strauss's incid. music; A Midsummer Night's Dream, with Mendelssohn's music; etc.) he has made a deep impression. In fact, his recitals became so successful, that he abandoned opera after 1909. He is also a strong advocate of the use of the vernacular in all operatic productions in the U. S., and was probably the first artist to sing all songs at his recitals in English translations.

Bitter, Karl Hermann, b. Schwedt-on-Oder, Feb. 27, 1813; d. Berlin, Sept. 12, 1885. From 1879–82, Prussian Minister of Finance. Wrote Joh. Seb. Bach (1st ed. 1865, 2 vols.; 2nd, 1881, 4 vols.; abridged Engl. ed. by Shuttleworth, 1873); Mozart's Don Juan and Gluck's Iphigenia in Tauris; ein Versuch neuer Übersetzungen (1866); K. Ph. E. und W. Friedemann Bach und deren Brüder (1868, 2 vols.); Über Gervinus' 'Händel u. Shakespeare' (1869); Beiträge zur Gesch. des Oratoriums (1872); Studie zum Stabat Mater (1883); Die Reform der Oper durch Gluck und Wagner (1884); editor of Karl Loewe's Autobiography (1870).

Bittner, Julius, b. Vienna, Apr. 9, 1874. Studied jurisprudence, and at the same time music with J. Labor; won the Mahler prize (founded 1912 for the encouragement of composers) in 1915. Wrote the operas Die rote Gret (Vienna, 1907), Der Musikant (ib., 1910), Der Bergsee (ib., 1911), Der Abenteurer, (ib., 1913); a ballet-opera, Der Markt der Liebe (ib., 1909); choruses and songs. Two other operas, Alarich and Das höllische Gold (finished 1915), have not yet been performed. B. is his own librettist.

Bitto'ni, Bernardo, organist, and comp. of admirable sacred music (in MS.); b. Fabriano, 1755; d. there May 18, 1829. —Biogr. by Alfieri (1852).

Bizet [bē-zā'], Georges (baptismal names Alexandre-César-Léopold), b. Paris, Oct. 25, 1838; d. Bougival, June 3, 1875. He entered the Paris Cons. at nine, his teachers being Marmontel (pf.), Benoist (org.), Zimmerman (harm.), and Halévy, his future father-in-law (comp.). In 1857 he took, among 78 competitors, the prize offered for the composition of an opera buffa, Le docteur Miracle, and also won the Grand prix de Rome. Instead of the prescribed mass, he sent from Rome, during his first year, a 2-act Ital. opera buffa, Don Procopio (Monte Carlo, 1906); later he sent 2 movements of a symphony, an overture (La Chasse d'Ossian), and a comic opera (La Guzla de l'Émir). Returning, he prod. a grand opera, Les Pêcheurs de perles (Th.-Lyrique, 1863); but this work, like La jolie fille de Perth (1867), failed of popular approval. A 1-act opera, Djamileh (1872), fared no better;—but Pasdeloup brought out his overture Patrie, and the 2 symphonic movements, with success. The incidental music to Daudet's l'Arlésienne (1872), however, turned the tide of popular favor; and the striking success of Carmen (Opéra-Com., Mar. 3, 1875), showed what B. might have done had he been spared; he died just three months after his hardly-won triumph. Besides the above-mentioned works, B. comp. two operas, Numa (1871), Ivan le Terrible (not perf.); about 150 pf.-pcs. of all kinds (he was a brilliant pianist), and songs, etc. The music of l'Arlésienne, transformed into a suite, had great success, and was followed by three other suites: l'Arlésienne No. 2, Roma, and Jeux d'enfance, all well received.—Biographical: E. Galabert, Georges Bizet (Paris, 1877); Ch. Pigot, B. et son œuvre (1886); C. Bellaigue, Bizet (1891); P. Voss, Bizet (Reclam, Leipzig, 1899); A. Weissmann, Bizet (in R. Strauss's coll. 'Musik', Berlin, 1907); O. Séré, G. B., in Musiciens français d'aujourd'hui (Paris, 1911); H. Gauthier-Villars, B. Biographie critique (Paris, 1911); R. Brancour, La vie et l'œuvre de G. B. (Paris, 1913).

Black, Andrew, baritone singer, originally an organist; b. Glasgow, Jan. 15, 1859. Pupil of Randegger and J. B. Welch; then of Dom. Scafati, at Milan. First great success at a Crystal Palace concert on July 30, 1887; first appearance at a provincial festival at Leeds, 1892; in 1894 he sang Elijah at the Birmingham Fest., and the same at Gloucester, 1895, and Norwich, 1896. Professor of singing at the Manchester R. C. M. since 1893. Has also appeared in opera; and has sung in the United States.

Blaes [blahs], Arnold Joseph, b. Brussels, Dec. 1, 1814; d. there Jan. 11, 1892. Clarinettist, pupil of Bachmann, whom he succeeded in 1842 as solo clarinet and teacher at the Brussels Cons.

Blaes, Edward, b. Ghent, Nov. 19, 1846; pupil of Cons. there and at Brussels, also of Benoît at Antwerp; in 1876 m. de chap. at St.-Bavo's ch., and municipal music-director of Ghent and bassoon-teacher at the Cons., being solo bassoonist 1875–96 at the French Th. in Ghent. A popular director of choral societies, and comp. of choruses.

Blagrove, Henry Gamble, violinist; b. Nottingham, Oct. 20, 1811; d. London, Dec. 15, 1872. Pupil of his father, R. M. Blagrove, and played in public at 5; was the first pupil of the R. A. M. (opened 1823), where he took the silver medal in 1824. Studied under Spohr at Kassel, 1833–4; after which he played at the leading London concerts and provincial festivals.

Bla'hack, Josef, b. Raggendorf, Hungary, 1779; d. Vienna, Dec. 15, 1846; from 1802–23, tenor at the Leopoldstädter Th., Vienna; 1824, Kapellm. of St. Peter's, Vienna, succeeding Preindl.—Works: 14 masses; 25 graduals; 29 offertories; 10 Tantum ergos; 2 Te Deums.

Blahet'ka (or Plahetka), Marie-Léopoldine, pianist and composer; b. Guntramsdorf, n. Vienna, Nov. 15, 1811; d. Boulogne, Jan. 12, 1887. St. pf.-playing under Josef Czerny, Kalkbrenner, and Moscheles; comp. under Sechter. A brilliant pianist, she made successful tours, and composed effective pf.-pcs. (concertos, polonaises, rondos, sonatas, variations, pf.-trios, etc.), and songs; also wrote a romantic opera, Die Räuber und die Sänger (Vienna, 1830). She resided from 1840 in Boulogne.

Blainville [blăn-vēl'], Charles-Henri, b. in a village n. Tours, 1711; d. Paris, 1769. He was a 'cellist, music-teacher and composer, his most noted works being a symphony (1751) in the 'mode hellénique' [e-f-g-a-b-c-d-e], which excited Rousseau's admiration and Serre's pungent criticism.—Writings: L'harmonie théorico-pratique (1751); L'esprit de l'art musical (1754; German transl. in Hiller's 'Nachrichten'); and Histoire générale, critique et philologique de la musique (1767).

Blamont [-mŏhn'], François Colin de, b. Versailles, Nov. 22, 1690; d. there Feb. 14, 1760. A pupil of Lalande, he became superintendent of the King's music, and comp. many court ballets, 'fêtes,' operas, etc.; also 3 books of cantatas, 2 of motets, and numerous songs. Wrote Essai sur les goûts anciens et modernes de la musique française (1754).

Blanc [blăhn], Adolphe, b. Manosque, Basses-Alpes, June 24, 1828; d. Paris, May, 1885. Pupil of Paris Cons. (1841), and private pupil of Halévy. The Prix Chartier was awarded him in 1862 for chamber-music. For a short time he was conductor at the Théâtre-Lyrique.—Works: A 1-act comic opera, Une Aventure sous la Ligue (1857); 2 operettas, Les deux billets (1868), and Les Rêves de Marguerite; a burlesque symphony; an overture; trios, quartets, quintets and septets f. strings, with and without pf.; pf.-pcs.

Blanchard [blăhn-shahr'], Henri-Louis, b. Bordeaux, Feb. 7, 1778; d. Paris, Dec. 18, 1858. Violinist and composer; conductor (1818–29) at the Théâtre des Variétés, Paris; 1830–3 manager of the Théâtre Molière. Later he became a distinguished mus. critic. He produced several operettas and some chamber-music.

Blangini [-jē'nē], (Giuseppe Marco Maria) Felice, b. Turin, Nov. 18, 1781; d. Paris, Dec. 18, 1841. In 1789, choir-boy at Turin cathedral; at 12 he played the cathedral organ, composed sacred music, and was a skilful 'cellist. In 1797 the family moved to the south of France, and in 1799 to Paris; B. gave concerts, wrote fashionable romances, and came into vogue as an opera-composer in 1802, when he completed Della-Maria's La fausse duègne; as a singing-teacher he was also in request. After producing an opera in Munich (1805), he was app. court Kapellm. (1806), and Princess Borghese made him her Director of Music. King Jérôme app. him General Music-Director at Kassel, 1809; he returned to Paris in 1814, and was made superintendent of the King's music and composer to the Court, and also prof. of singing at the Cons.; but in 1830 he lost all his places at Court, and passed the remainder of his days in comparative obscurity. He wrote 30 operas, 4 masses w. orch., 170 notturnos f. 2 voices, and 174 romances f. one voice. M. de Villemarest edited his autobiography: Souvenirs de F. Blangini (Paris, 1834).

Blan'kenburg, Quirin van, b. Gouda, Holland, 1654; d. The Hague, 1749, as org. of the Reformed Church. He wrote Elementa musica (1739), and Clavicembel en Orgelboek der gereformeerde Psalmen en Kerkgezangen (1732; 3rd ed. 1772); a method for flute; etc.

Bla'ramberg, Paul Ivanovitch, b. Orenburg, Russia, Sept. 26, 1841. Pupil of Balakirev. (Goossens and Warnots); début 1865 in Benoît's Lucifer as the 'Spotgeest' (mocking spirit); also sang the rôle of Gurnemanz in Parsifal at Bayreuth. After 1877 he taught at Bruges, Antwerp and Mons.

Blaze [blahz], (called Castil-Blaze), François-Henri-Joseph, the father of modern French musical criticism; b. Cavaillon, Vaucluse, Dec. 1, 1784; d. Paris, Dec. 11, 1857. Taught by his father, Henri-Sébastien Blaze [1763-1833], in early youth; he went to Paris to study law, but kept up his musical studies, and finally (1820) devoted himself wholly to music. His work L'Opéra en France (1820), a telling arraignment of contemporary French opera-production, won him first of all the post of critic on the 'Journal des Débats'; his articles, signed 'XXX,' made him a power among musicians. During 40 years of uninterrupted literary activity, he publ. many works on music: Dictionnaire de musique moderne (1821, 2 vols; 2nd ed., 1825; 3rd ed., edited by J. H. Mees, with historical preface and a supplement of Netherland musicians, 1828, 1 vol.); Chapelle-musique des Rois de France (1832); La Danse et les Ballets depuis Bacchus jusqu'à Mlle. Taglioni (1832); Mémorial du grand Opéra (from Cambert, 1669, down to and incl. the Restoration); Le Piano; hist. de son invention, etc. ('Revue de Paris,' 1839–40); Molière musicien (1852); Théâtres Lyriques de Paris (2 vols.; on the Grand Opéra [1855], and on the Italian opera 1848–1856 [1856]); Sur l'opéra français: vérités dures mais utiles (1856); L'art des jeux lyriques (1858).—His translations of German and Italian opera-libretti (Der Freischütz, Don Giovanni, Figaro, Il Barbiere, Fidelio, La Gazza ladra, and many others) gave a great and needed impetus to the production of these operas in France. He composed 3 operas, and several skilfully contrived 'pastiches'; a collection of Chants de la Provence; chamber-music, romances, etc.

Blaze, Henri, Baron de Bury, son of preceding; b. Avignon, May 17, 1813; d. Paris, March 15, 1888. His title was bestowed on him while the attaché of an embassy; before and after which time he devoted himself to literary work. He wrote many essays, historical, esthetical, and biographical, for the 'Revue des Deux Mondes,' and other periodicals; these essays were subsequently collected as Musiciens contemporains (1856), Meyerbeer et son temps (1865), Musiciens du passé, du présent, etc. (1880), Goethe et Beethoven (1882), etc. His most elaborate and valuable work is La Vie de Rossini (1854).

Blech [blĕyh], Leo, b. Aachen, April 22, 1871. After leaving school he tried a mercantile career for 4 years; then (1890) was for 1 year a pupil of the Hochschule für Musik at Berlin (Rudorff, Bargiel); study here proving tedious, he returned to Aachen as Kapellm. of the Municipal Theatre during the winters of 1893–6, pursuing during the summers a course of study under Humperdinck. Blum'ner, (Dr.) Martin, b. Fürstenberg, Mecklenburg, Nov. 21, 1827; d. Berlin, Nov. 16, 1901. Pupil of S. W. Dehn in Berlin (1847); 1853, vice-conductor, 1876, regular conductor of the Berlin 'Singakademie.' He was a vocal composer in the strict style.—Works: 2 oratorios, Abraham (1860) and Der Fall Jerusalems (1874); 2 grand cantatas for ch., soli and orch., In Zeit und Ewigkeit (1885) and Festival Cantata (1891); Te Deum in 8 parts; motets, psalms, Lieder, etc.

Blüth'ner [blüt-], Julius (Ferdinand), b. Falkenhain, n. Merseburg, March 11, 1824; d. Leipzig, April 13, 1910. Celebrated piano-maker. Founded his establishment at Leipzig, 1853, with 3 workmen; had in 1897 over 500, and turned out some 3,000 pianos yearly (63,000 up to 1904). B. was awarded many first medals. His specialty was the 'Aliquot-flügel,' a grand piano with a sympathetic octave-string stretched over and parallel with each unison struck by the hammers.—Together with H. Gretschel he wrote Der Pianofortebau (1872; 3d ed. rev. by R. Hannemann, Leipzig, 1909).

Bobin'ski, Henry Antonovitch, pianist; b. Warsaw, Feb. 1, 1861, and studied at the Cons. there and the Philh. School in Moscow, where he became a teacher in 1887; since 1893, teacher in the school of the R. Russ. Mus. Soc. at Kiev. Début as pianist, 1887, at Cracow; has played in other Russian towns, Vienna (1893), etc.—Publ. an orchl. overture, a pf.-concerto (op. 8), variations for string-quartet, minor pf.-pieces, etc.

Boccheri'ni, Luigi, b. Lucca, Italy, Feb. 19, 1743; d. Madrid, May 28, 1805. Pupil of Abbate Vannucci, and studied later in Rome. Being a fine 'cellist, he undertook a long concert-tour with the violinist Manfredi; in 1768 they were in Paris, and B. publ. his op. 1 (6 string-quartets), also 2 books of trios for 2 vlns. and 'cello. These charming works established his fame as a chamber-composer. In 1769 he settled in Madrid as chamber-virtuoso to the Infante Luis, and later to the King. In 1787 he dedicated a work to Friedrich Wilhelm II of Prussia, who thereupon conferred on him the title of chamber-composer, with a salary which ceased at the King's death in 1797. After this, excepting a brief period under the munificent patronage of Lucien Bonaparte, B.'s affairs went from bad to worse, and he died in extreme poverty. He was a prolific chamber-composer (2 octets, 16 sextets, 125 string-quintets, 12 pf.-quintets, 18 quintets f. strings and flute [or oboe], 91 string-quartets, 54 string-trios, 42 trios, sonatas and duets for vln., etc. Also 20 symphonies, an opera, an orchestral suite, a 'cello-concerto, sacred music, etc. Monographs on B.'s life and works by L. Schletterer, B. (Leipzig, 1882, Br. & H.).—See Q.-Lex.

Boch'koltz-Falconi, Anna (recte Bockholtz), b. Frankfort, 1820; d. Paris, Dec. 24, 1879. Vocalist, pupil of Brussels Cons. Settled in Paris, as a teacher, in 1856. She published songs and vocal studies.

Boch'sa, Karl, b. Bohemia; d. Paris, 1821, as a music-seller. He was previously oboist in Lyons and Bordeaux theatres.—Works: 9 quartets for clarinet and strings; 9 quartets for oboe and strings; 6 duos concertants for 2 oboes; a clarinet-concerto; 2 quintets; a Method for Flute; do. f. Clarinet.

Boch'sa, Robert-Nicolas-Charles, son of Karl B.; b. Montmédy, Meuse, Aug. 9, 1789; d. Sydney, Australia, Jan. 6, 1856. At first his father's pupil, he played in public at 7, wrote a symphony at 9, and an opera at 16. He studied under Fr. Beck (Bordeaux), and Méhul and Catel at Paris Cons. (1806); Naderman and Marin were his harp-teachers, but he devised novel methods; he became harpist to Napoleon, and also to Louis XVIII. Detected in forgeries, he fled to London (1817); Parish-Alvars and Chatterton were his pupils there. With Smart he inaugurated the Lenten oratorios in 1822, conducting them alone from 1823. He was harp-prof. at the Acad. of Music from 1822–7, when he was dismissed; from 1826–32 he conducted Italian opera at the King's Th.; in 1839 he eloped with Sir Henry Bishop's wife, made long concert-tours with her in Europe and America, and finally went to Australia.—Works: 9 French operas, one prod. in Lyons (1804), the rest in Paris (1813–16); 4 ballets; an oratorio; orchestral music, etc.; very many compositions of all kinds for harp; and a Method for Harp (a standard work).—Under the title Un musicien voleur, faussaire, et bigame Arthur Pougin published a series of articles in 'Le Ménestrel' (Jan. 13 to March 9, 1907) on the career of this erratic harpist.

Böck'eler, Heinrich, b. Cologne, July 11, 1836; d. Aix-la-Chapelle, Feb. 20, 1899. In 1862 he was vicar-choral and conductor of cathedral-choir at Aix-la-Chapelle; from 1876, editor of the 'Gregorius-Blatt.' — Works: Church-music; choruses for men's voices.

Bock'let, Karl Maria von, brilliant pianist; b. Prague, 1801; d. Vienna, July 15, 1881. Pupil of Zawora (Prague) and Hummel (Weimar) for pf.; of Dionys Weber (Prague) for comp.; and of Pixis for violin. In 1820, violinist at the Vienna 'Th. an der Wien'; later he embraced the career of a concert-pianist and pf.-teacher; Louis Köhler and Jacob Blumenthal were his pupils.

Bocquillon-Wilhem [bŏh-kē-yŏhn'], G. L. See WILHEM.

Bodanzky, Artur, b. ~~Vienna~~, Hungary, Dec. 16, 1877. Having graduated from the Vienna Cons., he began his career in 1897 as one of the first violins at the Court Opera, continuing his studies in comp. with A. von Zemlinski; 1900, cond. of operettas at the Stadt-th. in Budweis; 1901, at Karl-Th. in Vienna; 1903, correpetitor and assistant to Mahler at the Court Opera; 1904, cond. at Th. an der Wien; 1905, first cond. at Lortzing Th. in Berlin; 1906–9, cond. at the Landestheater in Prague, and also of the symph. concerts. Here his excellent work attracted such attention that in 1909 he was called to Mannheim as first cond. and operatic director at the Grand-Ducal Th.; also cond. of symph. and oratorio concerts. In 1912 he arranged a 3-day Mahler festival, when he cond. a body of 1,500 vocalists and instrumentalists. The overwhelming success of the first Parsifal performances in England, which he cond. at Covent Garden in 1914, was largely instrumental in determining his selection as Hertz' successor for the German operas at the M. O. H., where he chose for his début Götterdämmerung on Nov. 17, 1915. He is a conductor of the Mahler type, forceful, authoritative, electrifying; a wonderful builder of climaxes, a master in the distribution of light and shade and in maintaining a just balance between voices and orchestra. At all times he secures a full, mellow tone; even in the most tremendous fortissimos the orchestra is always euphonious.

Bo'de, Johann Joachim Christoph, b. Barum, Brunswick, Jan. 16, 1730; d. Weimar, Dec. 13, 1793. Oboist in Cette, 1755; from 1762–3, music-teacher and editor at Hamburg, and later became Lessing's partner as printer and publisher. Settled in Weimar 1778. Published concertos for 'cello, bassoon and vln.; symphonies, etc.

Bo'dēnschatz, Erhard, b. Lichtenberg, Saxony, 1576; d. as pastor at Gross-Osterhausen, near Querfurt, in 1638. He published valuable collections: Florilegium Portense (Leipzig, 1603 and 1618), containing 115 motets; ditto (2nd part, Leipzig, 1621), containing 150 motets, all by contemporaries; also Florilegium selectissimorum hymnorum for schools (1606; last ed. 1721). His own compositions are less interesting.—See Q.-Lex.

Boe'decker [bö-], Louis, pianist, music-teacher and critic; b. Hamburg, 1845; d. there June 5, 1899. Pupil of E. Marxsen. Publ. works: a Phantasie-Sonate for pf. and violin; a Trio-Phantasie; about 30 pf.-pieces; songs; in MS., orchestral, choral, and chamber-music.

Boehe, Ernst, composer; b. Munich, Dec. 27, 1880; studied theory with R. Louis and Thuille, and pf.-playing with H. Schwartz. In 1907 he cond., with Courvoisier, the 'Volkssymphoniekonzerte' in Munich; since 1913, Hofkapellm. in Oldenburg. He has brought out a number of important orchestral works: 4 episodes from Odysseus' Fahrten (Odysseus' Ausfahrt und Schiffbruch, Die Insel der Kirke, Die Klage der Nausikaa, Odysseus' Heimkehr), the first prod. in London, 1906; the symph. poem Taormina; a Tragische Ouvertüre; Symph. Epilog zu einer Tragödie; Eine Komödienouvertüre; also songs with orchestra; etc.

Held similar posts at Paris and Metz; 1841, app. prof. at the Normal School, Nymwegen, and cond. of Choral Society; 1853, music-director at Delft. He wrote an interesting History of Musical Instrs. in the Middle Ages; also a complete bibliography of ancient and modern musical works produced in the Netherlands. Comp. a symphony, overtures, cantatas, songs, etc.

Boësset [bwĕhs-sā′], Antoine, Sieur de Villedieu, Intendant of Music to Louis XIII; b. circa 1585; d. 1643. Celebrated as the composer of many Airs de cour in 4 or 5 parts, and of numerous ballets.

Boetius [bō-ā′tĭ-ŭs] (or Boethius), Anicius Manlius Torquatus Severinus, b. Rome circa 475 A. D., executed 524 (6?), on suspicion of treason, by Theodoric, whose counsellor he had been for years. Philosopher and mathematician; author of De Musica, a Latin treatise (in 5 books) on Greek music, which was the chief source for the theorizing monks of the middle ages. Besides MSS. in many libraries, De Musica has been published at Venice (1491–2 and '99), Basel (1570), and Leipzig (1867); and in a German transl. by Oscar Paul, with interesting introduction, at Leipzig (1872); a French transl. by Fétis remained MS.

Böh'ner, (Johann) Ludwig, b. Töttelstedt, n. Gotha, Jan. 8, 1787; d. Gotha, Mar. 28, 1860. A composer of great talent but weak character—the reputed original of E. A. T. Hoffmann's 'Kreisler.' Excepting a year (1810) as Kapellm. at Nuremberg, he led a roving life, and finally became addicted to drink.—Works: An opera, Der Dreiherrnstein; overtures, marches, dances, etc., f. orch.; concertos and sonatas f. pf.; much left in MS.

Boh'rer, Anton, b. Munich, 1783; d. Hanover, 1852. Violinist, pupil of R. Kreutzer in Paris. Composed chamber-music, also concertos and solo-pcs. f. vln. With his brother Max, the 'cellist, he was a member of the Bavarian court orch.; from 1810–14 the two made tours through Austria, Poland, Russia, Scandinavia and England; 1815 in France, 1820 in Italy. In 1834, Anton became leader of the orch. at Hanover.

Boh'rer, Max, 'cello-virtuoso; b. Mannheim, 1785; d. Stuttgart, Feb. 28, 1867. After long concert-tours with Anton, he settled (1832) in Stuttgart as first 'cellist in the orch. Tour in the United States, 1842–43. Compositions of minor importance.

Boieldieu [bwäh-el-d'yö'], Adrien(-Louis-Victor), son of F.-A. B.; b. Paris, Nov. 3, 1816; d. Quincy, July 9, 1883. Wrote several attractive operas and operettas; also masses, cantatas, etc.

Boieldieu, François-Adrien, French dramatic comp.; b. Rouen, Dec. 16, 1775; d. Jarcy, n. Grosbois, Oct. 8, 1834. Son of Archbishop Larochefoucauld's secretary; his mother was a milliner. Through conjugal differences, the pair were divorced, and the boy was apprenticed to Broche, the cathedral organist, a pupil of Padre Martini. Broche, of intemperate habits, was brutal; the boy, at 12 years of age, ran away; he went on foot to Paris, and was with difficulty found and brought back. Broche appears to have been his only teacher in youth, natural talent supplying the lack of serious study. At 18 years of age he prod. with success an opera to his father's libretto, La Fille coupable (Rouen, 1793), followed, in 1795, by Rosalie et Myrza. His local reputation encouraged him to extend his sphere, and again he walked to Paris, but his reception was chilling, and he was glad to earn a living by teaching and pianotuning, Érard employing him. He made the acquaintance of Méhul, Rode, Cherubini, and Garat the tenor, who sang the young man's songs in public, and thus procured him recognition and a publisher. Le Ménestrel, S'il est vrai que d'être deux, Ô toi que j'aime, are still found on concert-programs. Fiévée the novelist wrote him a libretto, and La Dot de Suzette, in one act, was prod. with success (Opéra-Com., 1795), followed by Les deux Lettres (1796), and in 1797 by La Famille suisse (Th.-Feydeau). 1798 saw the production of pf.-sonatas, pf.- and harp-duets, and a pf.-concerto; their success obtained for him, 2 years later, the appointment of professor of piano at the Paris Conservatory. Zoraïme et Zulnare (1798), Beniowski, and Le Calife de Bagdad (1800), added to his reputation. Cherubini good-naturedly twitted him on his 'undeserved success,' and B. took a strict course of contrapuntal study, benefiting much by the advice of Cherubini and Méhul. Three years elapsed, and Ma tante Aurore (Th.-Feydeau, 1803), showed marked improvement, and was greeted with great applause. In 1802 he had married Clotilde-Auguste Mafleuroy, a ballet-dancer, and the conjugal misery that resulted led to his self-expatriation in 1803. He went to Petrograd, and was app. cond. of the Imperial Opera, with a handsome salary. He stayed in Russia 8 years; his contract included 3 operas per annum, and a number of military marches, but of this period little was worthy of preservation. The war between Russia and France caused his return to Paris, in 1811. A revival of Ma tante Aurore, the production of a revised version of Rien de trop (comp. in Russia), followed in 1812 by Jean de Paris, created the wildest enthusiasm, opera having been at a low ebb for some time. In 1817 he succeeded Méhul as prof. of comp. at the Cons., and was elected a member of the 'Institut.' In 1818 Le petit chaperon rouge was another triumph. In 1821 he was created Chevalier of the Legion of Honor. Precarious health caused a silence of 7 years, but in 1825 La Dame blanche met with unparalled success, and remains his masterpiece. He was well remunerated for his last opera, Les deux nuits (1829), but it was a failure. In delicate health, with pulmonary trouble contracted in Russia, mortification and disappointment aggravated the disorder. His first wife had died in 1825, and in 1827 he married Mlle. Phillis, a singer, and the mother of his only son Adrien. This union was most happy, and in his last days of illness and pecuniary difficulties he was much consoled by her kindly care and unswerving fidelity. He had retired from the Cons. in 1829, with a pension, but in 1830 the new government revoked the pension. He applied for reinstatement at the Cons., was reappointed, but did not teach again; for Thiers, minister of Louis Philippe, recognized the master's work, and relieved his anxieties by an annual grant of 6000 francs. A journey to Pisa in search of health was of no benefit; he returned to Paris, but again had to seek the mild Southern climate, and died at his country-house at Jarcy.—Among his pupils were Zimmerman, Fétis, Adam, and Labarre. —Boieldieu ranks as the foremost composer of his generation, of French 'opéra comique.' Despite the carelessness of his early education, his masterpieces exhibit evidences of painstaking and conscientious labor, resulting in a high degree of finish and perfection. Besides the operas mentioned, he collaborated with Cherubini in La Prisonnière (1799); with Méhul, Kreutzer, et al., in Le Baiser et la Quittance (1802); with Cherubini, Catel, and Nicolò Isouard—his former rivals—in Bayard à Mézières; with Kreutzer in Henri IV en voyage (1814); with Mme. Gail, pupil of Fétis, in Angéla, ou l'Atelier de Jean Cousin (1814); with Hérold in Charles de France; with Cherubini, Berton, et al., in La Cour des Fées (1821); with Auber in Les trois Genres; with Cherubini, Berton, et al., in Pharamond; with Berton, et al., in La Marquise de Brinvilliers.—Biographical: G. Hequest, A. B., sa vie et ses œuvres (Paris, 1846; pp. 115); A. Pougin, B., sa vie et ses œuvres (Paris, 1875); Lucien Augé de Lassus, B., in series 'Les Musiciens célèbres' (Paris, 1908; pp. 125, with list of minor publications concerning B.); P. L. Boisdeffre [bwăh-dĕf'fr], Charles-Henri-René de, b. Vesoul (Haute-Savoie), April 3, 1838; d. at his estate Vezelise, Dec. (?), 1906. Pupil of Ch. Wagner and Barbereau in Paris, where he resided. Composer; in 1883 the Prix Chartier was awarded him for chamber-music.—Works: A symphony in A m. (1883); Scènes champêtres f. orch.; pf.-sextet (op. 43); 2 pf.-quintets (op. 11 and 25); a pf.-quartet (op. 13); 2 pf.-trios (op. 10 and 32); pf.-sonatas, Romances sans paroles, Mélodies; Messe solennelle (1890); Cantique des cantiques for soli, ch. and orch. (op. 16); Moïse sauvé des eaux (op. 18); choruses Dans la forêt (op. 41) and Les lendemains de la vie (op. 46); etc.—Cf. H. Imbert's 'Nouveaux Profils de Musiciens' (Paris, 1892).

Boise, Otis Bardwell, b. Oberlin, Ohio, Aug. 13, 1845; d. Baltimore, Dec. 16, 1912. Organist at 14. In 1861 studied under Hauptmann, Richter, Moscheles, etc., at Leipzig; 1864 under Kullak at Berlin. 1864–70, organist and teacher in Cleveland; 1870–76, in New York; 1876–78, spent in Europe. He taught in Berlin 1888–1901; since then, prof. of theory and comp. at the Peabody Inst., Baltimore. Among his pupils are Ernest Hutcheson, Howard Brockway, Percy Atherton, and Arthur Nevin.—Works: Symphonies and overtures for orch.; pf.-concertos, and minor pieces; also a text-book, Harmony Made Practical (N. Y. 1900).

Boisselot [bwăhs-lŏh'], Jean-Louis, b. Montpellier circa 1785; d. Marseilles, 1847. A maker of stringed instrs. at Montpellier, he removed to Marseilles and soon set up a successful piano-factory, of which his eldest son, Louis (1809–50), was the manager; François, the present proprietor, is the founder's grandson.

Boisselot, Xavier, second son of J.-L. B.; dramatic composer; b. Montpellier, Dec. 3, 1811; d. Marseilles, Apr. 10, 1893.—Works: The operas Ne touchez pas à la reine (Paris, 1847); Mosquita la sorcière (Paris, 1851); l'Ange déchu (Marseilles, 1869); and a cantata, Velleda (1836).

HUNGARIAN REFERENCE
NEW YORK, N. Y.

Boito [bô'ē-tŏh], Arrigo, poet and opera-composer; b. Padua, Feb. 24, 1842. From 1856–62, pupil in Milan Cons. of Alberto Mazzucato and Ronchetti-Monteviti. His first important ventures were two cantatas, Il 4 giugno (1860) and Le Sorelle d'Italia (1862; w. Faccio); the latter being so succ. that the Italian government granted the authors not only the usual gold medal, but a stipend for two years' foreign travel. B. spent most of this time in Paris, the remainder chiefly in Germany; strongly influenced by hearing and studying a variety of French and German music then practically unknown in Milan, where nothing but Italian or French operas interested the public, he wrote the libretto and gradually finished the music for the opera Mefistofele (Milan, La Scala, Mar. 5, 1868), the unusual style of which made warm partisans, but also aroused the bitter opposition of the strong anti-Wagnerite faction, so that the opera was withdrawn after a second performance. Remodelled, it has met with success at Bologna (1875), Hamburg (1880), and Milan (1881); nevertheless, two others, Nerone and Orestiade, have never been offered for production, and of an earlier opera, Ero e Leandro, nothing remains but a few musical themes and the book. B. ranks high as a poet ('Il Libro dei Versi,' written 1861–7, publ. Turin, 1877, under the anagrammatic pen-name of 'Tobia Gorrio'), and is the author of all his own libretti; he has made admirable translations of some others (Tristan und Isolde, Rienzi), and wrote the books for Amleto (Faccio), Gioconda (Ponchielli), Alessandro Farnese (Palumbo), Tram (Dominiceti), Otello and Falstaff (Verdi; the last held to be his masterpiece), and Un Tramonto (Coronato). Is also a novelist of distinction. From the King he has the titles of 'Cavaliere,' 'Ufficiale,' and 'Commendatore'; in 1892 he was app. Inspector-General of Technical Instruction in the Italian Conservatories and Lyceums; in 1895 he was made Chevalier of the Legion of Honor. He lives in Milan.—Cf. C. Trevor, B.'s Nero (in 'M. T.,' June, 1916).

Bolck, Oskar, b. Hohenstein, East Prussia, Mar. 4, 1837; d. Bremen, May 2, 1888. Pupil (1857) of Leipzig Cons. (Rietz and Moscheles). After teaching in Leipzig, Wiborg (Finland), and Liverpool, he became (1868) Kapellm. at the Würzburg Th., and 1869 at Aachen. 1875, teacher at Riga, where his opera Pierre und Robin (1876) was produced. After this he was chorusmaster, in turn, at Leipzig, Hamburg, and Bremen. He wrote 2 other operas, Gudrun and Der Schmied von Gretna Green (both not perf.), pf.-music, songs, etc.

Bollinger, Samuel, pianist, composer; b. Fort Smith, Ark., Sept. 22, 1871. Studied pf. with Emil Winkler and, at Leipzig Cons., with Reinecke, Schreck, and others; org. Amer. Ch., Leipzig, 1893–5; founded Bollinger Cons. at Ft. Smith in 1896; taught in San Francisco (1897), and Chicago (1906); since 1907 in St. Louis; head of pf. dept. Strassberger Cons.—Works: Op. 3, dramatic overture, Pompilia e Caponsacchi, for orch.; op. 9, Waltzes for orch.; op. 17, Romantic Fantasy for organ; op. 18, The Sphinx, fantasy-suite, five scenes for orch.; op. 19, Sonata for pf. and vln.; numerous works for pf.

Böl'sche, Franz, b. Wegenstedt, n. Magdeburg, Aug. 20, 1869; 1889–94 pupil of the Berlin 'Hochschule' (Bargiel, Spitta, Heymann); 1896, teacher of theory in Cologne Cons. Editor, for the 'Denkmäler deutscher Tonkunst,' of the instrl. works of Melchior Franck; has comp. an overture, Judith, chamber-music, pf.-pieces, songs, etc.

Bol'te, Johannes, contemporary German writer; author of Die Singspiele der englischen Comödianten und ihrer Nachfolger in Deutschland, Holland, und Scandinavien (Leipzig, 1893).

Bolzo'ni, Giovanni, b. Parma, May 14, 1841. Pupil of del Maino (vl.) and Rossi (comp.) at the Cons. there; began as violinist in the orch. at Savona; during the next six years rose to leader and conductor; 3 years in Perugia as cond. and dir. of 'Istituto Morlacchi'; lived a short time in Piacenza; since 1887 dir. of the 'Istituto Musicale,' leader at the 'Teatro Regio' and 'Concerti Popolari' at Turin.—Works: The operas Il Matrimonio civile (Parma, 1870), La Stella delle Alpi (Savona, 1876), Jella (Piacenza, 1881); Tema con variazioni for string-orch.; Al Castello medioevale for small orch.; a symphony; quartets and quintets; pieces for vln.

Bomtem'po, João Domingos, fine pianist; b. Lisbon, Dec. 28, 1775; d. there Aug. 13, 1842. He went in 1802 to Paris for study, and lived there and in London till 1818. In 1833, Director of Lisbon Cons.—Works: 6 symphonies, 4 pf.-concertos, 14 pf.-sextets, a pf.-quintet, sonatas and variations f. pf., an opera (Alessandro in Efeso), several masses, a requiem; and a Method for pf. (London, 1816).

Bo'na, Giovanni, cardinal; b. Mondovi, Oct. 12, 1609; d. Rome, Oct. 25, 1674. Wrote especially De divina Psalmodia. . . . tractatus historicus, symbolicus, asceticus (Rome, 1653), containing valuable information on ancient church-music. Compl. ed. of works publ. Rome, 1747.

Bo'na, Valerio, b. Brescia, c. 1560; still living in 1619; Franciscan monk, in 1596 m. di capp. at Milan. Voluminous composer of sacred and secular vocal music; also theorist; publ. Regole del Contrappunto e Composizione (Casale, 1595), and Essempi delli Passaggi delle Consonanze, et Dissonanze (Milan, 1596).—See Q.-Lex.

Bonaventu'ra, Arnoldo, b. Leghorn, July 28, 1862. St. jurisprudence and chemistry, but devoted himself entirely to musicology. Prof. hist. of music and librarian at the R. Inst. of Mus. in Florence.—Works: Manuale di storia della musica (Leghorn, 1898; 4th ed. 1913); Elementi di Estetica musicale (ib., 1904); Storia degli stromenti musicali (ib., 1908); La vita musicale in Toscana (Florence, 1910, in 'La Toscana al fine del granducato'); Saggio storico sul teatro musicale italiano (Leghorn, 1913); besides num. essays in various journals.

Bo'nawitz (or Bonewitz), Johann Heinrich, b. Dürkheim-on-Rhine, Dec. 4, 1839. Pianist, pupil of the Liège Cons. till 1852, when his parents took him to America. Lived 1861–6 in Wiesbaden, Paris, and London, giving concerts and teaching. From 1872–3 he conducted the Popular Symphony Concerts in New York, an enterprise which failed from lack of popular appreciation; after a successful pianistic tour in the U. S. (1873), he produced 2 operas in Philadelphia, The Bride of Messina (1874), and Ostrolenka (1875). Returned to Europe, 1876, and has since lived in Vienna and London. He has composed 2 other operas and a variety of pf.-music.

Bon'ci [-tchē], Alessandro, lyric stage-tenor; b. Cesena (Romagna) in 1870; studied 5 years under Carlo Pedrotti and Felice Coen at the Liceo Rossini, Pesaro, and in 1896 made his début at the Teatro Regio in Parma as Fenton in Falstaff; was then eng. to give Faust at the T. dal Verme, Leghorn; next at La Scala, Milan, in I Puritani. Here his success was established; he was immediately eng. at Petrograd, then at Vienna, Berlin, Lisbon, Madrid, London (1900), etc.; later in South America and Australia. New York début in Dec., 1906, at the new Manhattan Opera House (Hammerstein), where he sang during three seasons; 1908–9 at M. O. H., also appearing at Covent Garden in 1908. In the season of 1910–11 he sang in concerts in the U. S. His voice is a distinctly lyric tenor of great sweetness and charm. Favorite rôles are Almaviva (Barbiere) and Rodolfo (La Bohème). He is one of the few Italian singers that have achieved distinction also as lieder singers.

Bö'nicke, Hermann, b. Endorf, Nov. 26, 1821; d. Hermannstadt, Transylvania, Dec. 12, 1879, as conductor of the Musical Society there.—Works: An opera, Der Liebesring; part-songs for men's voices; an excellent Method of Choral Singing; and Kunst des freien Orgelspiels (a valuable work).

Boniven'ti (or Boneventi), Giuseppe, dramatic comp.; b. Venice, c. 1660; d. (?). He was m. di capp. to the Duke of Mantua, later to the court of Baden. Wrote 11 operas for Venice, and one for Turin.

Bonnet [bŏhn-nā'], Jacques, b. Paris, 1644; d. there 1724. Publ. Histoire de la musique et de ses effets, depuis son origine jusqu'à présent (1715), and Histoire de la danse sacrée et profane (1723).—See Q.-Lex.

Bonnet, Jean-Baptiste, violinist and composer; b. Montauban, Apr. 23, 1763; organist there from 1802; d. (?) Wrote violin-music (2 concertos, 2 symphonies concertantes f. 2 vlns., and many duos).

Bon'no (or Bono), Joseph, b. Vienna, 1710; d. there Apr. 15, 1788. In 1739, imperial court comp.; 1774, court Kapellm.; from 1732–62 he wrote 20 operas and serenades; also 3 oratorios, 4-part Psalms, and a Magnificat (all in MS.).

Bononci'ni [-tchē-] (he usually wrote his name Buononcini), Giovanni Battista, celebrated dramatic composer, son of G. M. B.; b. Modena, 1660; d. Venice (?), 1750 (or later). He was taught at first by his father; then by G. P. Colonna and Don Giorgio Buoni ('cello), at Bologna, where he brought out some masses and instrumental music (7 vols., publ. 1685–91), and 3 oratorios; in 1690 he was called to Vienna as court 'cellist; went to Rome in 1694, there producing his first opera, Tullo Ostilio, and a second, Serse (both 1694). Returning to Vienna in 1699, he brought out La Fede pubblica (1699) and Gli Affetti più grandi vinti dal più giusto (1701); then, under the patronage of Queen Sophie Charlotte, he spent two years (1703–5) at Berlin as court composer, and wrote Polifemo (1703); on the suppression of the opera-company after the Queen's death (Feb. 1, 1705), B. again betook himself to Vienna, where several new operas were performed (Endimione, 1706; Turno Aricino, 1707; Mario fuggitivo, 1708; Il Sacrificio di Romolo, 1708; Abdolonimo, 1709; Muzio Scevola, 1710; etc.). He also resided and wrote, at intervals, in various Italian cities; while at Rome, in 1716, he was invited to London as conductor and dramatic composer for the new King's Theatre, and more particularly, under the Duke of Marlborough's protection, as the rival of Handel. This operatic (almost political) warfare was waged with varying success; B. prod. Astarto (1720); 3 more, Ciro, Crispo, and Griselda, in 1722; Farnace (1723); Erminia (1723); Calpurnia (1724); and Astianatte [Astianax] (1727). In 1731, however, it was asserted that he had given out, some years previously, a madrigal by A. Lotti as of his own composition. Disgraced by this supposed act of plagiarism, and crushed by Handel's dramatic supremacy, B. lost position and friends; in 1733 he fell into the hands of an alchemist, who swindled him out of the remains of the fortune amassed in his days of triumph. He now wandered from place to place; turned up in Paris, a few years later, when he comp. a motet for the 'Chapelle royale,' playing himself the 'cello-accomp. before the King; in 1737 his opera Alessandro in Sidone, and an oratorio, Ezechia, were given in Vienna; and after the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle the Emperor summoned him to Vienna to compose the festival music celebrating the event (1748). Soon after this he went to Venice, where he was employed as theatre-composer, and was still in that position at the age of 90; after which all traces of him are lost.—In London B. publ. Suites f. harpsichord (n. d.); Cantate e Duetti, dedicated to George I (1721); Divertimenti for harpsichord (1722); and 12 sonatas or chamber airs for 2 violins and a bass (1732).—See Q.-Lex.

Bononci'ni, Giovanni Maria, b. Modena, 1640; d. there Nov. 19, 1678. Entered very young into the service of Duke Francesco II; became later m. di capp. in the churches of S. Giovanni in Monte, and of S. Petronio, at Bologna.—Publ. 12 vols. (1666–78) containing Sinfonie, Ghighe, and Sonate da camera in 1-3 or more parts, w. instrs.; 6-p. Madrigals; Allemandes f. 3-4 instrs.; etc.; also a work, Musico-pratico on song-composition and the art of counterpoint.—See Q.-Lex.

Bononci'ni, Marco Antonio, brother of G. B. B.; b. Modena, 1675 (?); d. there July 8, 1726. A dramatic comp. of distinction; from 1721 he was maestro to the Duke of Modena. Before this, he travelled in Italy and Germany, bringing out a number of operas, praised by Padre Martini for their 'lofty style,' and thought by him superior to those of most contemporaries.—Works: 19 operas, among them Camilla, regina de' Volsci (Vienna, 1692); Griselda (1700?); Andromeda; Arminio; Sesostri; Il Turno Aricino (Florence, 1704); Etearco (Vienna, 1707); La Regina creduta re (Venice, 1707); Tigrane, re d'Armenia; Cajo Gracco (Venice, 1710); Astiniatte (Venice, 1718); and an oratorio, La Decollazione di S. Giovanni Battista (Vienna, 1709).—See Q.-Lex.

Bontem'pi (recte Angeli'ni), Giovanni Andrea, b. Perugia, circa 1624; d. Bruso, near Perugia, June 1, 1705. Maestro at Rome and Venice, later in Berlin and Dresden; returned to Italy in 1694, and was in Paris in 1697.—Works: 3 operas, Paride (1662), Apollo e Dafne (1671), Jupiter ed Io (1673); the oratorio Martirio di S. Emiliano; and the treatises Nova quatuor vocibus componendi methodus . . . (1660), Tract. in quo demonstrantur occultae convenientiae sonorum systematis participati (1690), and an Istoria musica, nella quale si ha piena cognizione della teoria e della pratica antica della musica armonica (1695).—See Q.-Lex.

Bonvin [bŏhn-văn'], Ludwig, b. Siders, Switzerland, Feb. 17, 1850. His musical training in early youth was irregular; as a musician he is chiefly self-taught. After a course of medical study in Vienna, and a journey to Italy, he entered in 1874 the Jesuit novitiate in Holland, becoming organist and choirmaster, and studying harmony and counterpoint; further study of early church-music and of Wagner scores gave him insight into the mysteries of composition, and awakened his talent for composing. From 1887–1907 Father B. was director of chorus and orch. at Canisius College, Buffalo, N. Y. Since then he has been devoting all his spare moments to composing and to historico-musical studies; has written numerous articles with the object of restoring the Gregorian chant to its original rhythm.—His publ. works include 6 masses (op. 6, 26, 49, 63, 83, 84), and much other sacred music (Litanies, Vespers, Ave Maria, Ecce sacerdos, Omne die dic Mariae, antiphones, chants, sacred songs, hymns, etc.); Wittekind (op. 28), for soli, male ch. and orch. (Ger. text); Du sonnige, wonnige Welt (op. 20), for sop. and bar. soli, mixed ch. and orch.; In the summer night (op. 39), for bar. solo, ch. and orch.; Morn on the northern coast (op. 50); Bretagne (op. 60), for mixed ch., bar. and orch.; Drei Tonbilder (op. 12), a Ballade (op. 25), a Festzug (op. 27), Reminiscences [symphony in G m.] (op. 67), Two Symphonic Movements (op. 71) for full orch.; Christmas Night's Dream (op. 10), for string-orch.; organ-pieces, songs, etc. His works have reached the opus-number 108 (1916).

Boom [bohm], Jan E. G. van (Senior), b. Rotterdam, April 17, 1783. Flutist and composer for flute; lived in Utrecht.

Boom, Jan (Johannes) van, son of preceding; b. Utrecht, Oct. 15, 1807; d. Stockholm, March 19, 1872. Accomplished pianist; on a concert-tour through Scandinavia in 1825 he was induced to settle in Stockholm, where he was prof. at the Royal Academy 1849–65.—Works: Operas, symphonies, overtures, string-quartets, trios, a pf.-concerto, and much pf.-music (studies, duets, etc.).

Boosey, Thomas, founder (1825) of the London music-publishing house of Boosey &

Co.; until 1854 copyright publishers of Italian operas; now of cheap editions of standard works and popular English music. In 1868 they bought the factory for musical instrs. of Henry Distin. In 1874 both the publishing business and the factory were combined under the firm name of Boosey & Co.

Boott, Francis (pen-name 'Telford'), b. Boston, Mass., June 24, 1813; d. there in March, 1904. A Harvard graduate in 1831, and a devoted amateur of music, he lived for many years in Florence, Italy, where he studied under L. Picchianti; for the last 30 years he resided in Cambridge. He was quite a fruitful composer in the lesser forms: Secular and sacred songs, anthems, and chorales; many pieces are in the service-book of King's Chapel, Boston. An Ave Maria and a Maria Mater, with the songs Here's a health to King Charles, When Sylvia sings, and Lethe, are widely known. Larger works are Grand Mass; Te Deum; Song of Zechariah, for soli, ch. and orch; Miserere (a capp.); and string-quartets.—Mr. B. bequeathed to Harvard Univ. the sum of $10,000, the interest to form an annual prize for the best 4-part vocal composition written by a Harvard man.

Bordes [bŏhrd], Charles, b. Roche-Corbon, n. Vouvray-sur-Loire, May 12, 1863; d. Toulon, Nov. 8, 1909. Pupil of Marmontel (pf.) and César Franck (org., comp.) 1887–90; from 1890–1905, m. de chap. at St.-Gervais, Paris. The performances of a cappella music which he gave with this choir immediately became famous, so that in 1892 the singers were organized as 'Les Chanteurs de St.-Gervais'; the next year B. founded and edited the 'Anthologie des Maîtres religieux primitifs' and 'Répertoire moderne de musique vocale et d'orgue.' Having interested Guilmant and d'Indy for his ideals, he founded, with them, the 'Schola Cantorum' in 1894, originally for the purpose of training singers in the Palestrina style; at the same time he founded the 'Tribune de St.-Gervais' as the official organ of the Schola (first number appeared January, 1895). The S. C. was formally opened in 1896; before long its scope was enlarged, and to-day it ranks among the foremost conservatories of the world. A nervous breakdown, the result of overwork, compelled B. in 1905 to leave Paris for the south. But even then he would not rest, for in the same year he founded the 'Schola de Montpellier'; he died suddenly from a stroke of apoplexy. In 1889–90, by commission of the government, he studied Basque folk-songs, of which he collected 100 (published in 'Archives de la tradition Basque'); contrib. numerous articles to 'La Grande Encyclopédie,' 'Musica,' 'Le Figaro,' etc.—Compositions: Suite basque for flute with string-quartet; Errege Juan, overture to a Basque drama; Danses béarnaises for orch.; Rhapsodie basque for pf. and orch.; Divertissement for trpt. with orch.; several choruses a capp. (2–7 voices); pieces for pf.; songs. Bourgeois [boor-zhwäh'], Loys [Louis], b. Paris, circa 1510; d. (?); a follower of Calvin, with whom he lived 1545–57 at Geneva. He is renowned as one of the first to harmonize the melodies to Marot's French version of the Psalms, collections in 4–6 parts having been publ. by him at Lyons (1547); some of these melodies are his own. His treatise, Le droict chemin de musique, etc. (Geneva, 1550), proposed a reform in the nomenclature of the tones acc. to the solmisation-syllables, which was generally adopted in France.—Cf. Douen, Clément Marot et le Psautier Huguenot (2 vols.; Paris, 1878–79).

Bourges [boorzh'], Jean-Maurice, b. Bordeaux, Dec. 2, 1812; d. Paris, March, 1881. Composer (pupil of Barbereau) and mus. critic, co-editor of the 'Revue et Gazette musicale.'—Works: An opera, Sultana (Paris, Op.-Com., 1846); a Stabat Mater; 2 pf.-trios, 2 pf.-sonatas, many solo pf.-pcs., vocal romances, etc.

Bousquet [boos-kā'], Georges, b. Perpignan, March 12, 1818; d. St.-Cloud, June 15, 1854. St. in Paris Cons., taking Grand prix de Rome in 1838; was chef d'orch. at the Opéra (1847), and (1849–51) at the Th. Italien, and critic for 'Le Commerce,' 'l'Illustration,' and the 'Gazette musicale.'—Works: 3 operas, l'Hôtesse de Lyon (Cons., 1844), Le Mousquetaire (Op.-Com., 1844), and Tabarin (Th.-Lyrique, 1852); 2 masses, a cantata, a Miserere, chamber-music, etc.

Bovery [bŏh-vrē'], Jules (recte Bovy, Antoine-Nicolas-Joseph), b. Liège, Oct. 21, 1808; d. Paris, July 17, 1868. Self-taught violinist and composer; conducted theatre-orchestras at Lille, Douai, Lyons, Amsterdam, Antwerp, Rouen, Ghent (1845), and Paris (Th. Cluny). Wrote about a dozen operas, operettas, ballads, etc.

Bovy, Charles-Samuel (known under the nom de plume of Lysberg), pianist and salon-composer; b. Lysberg, near Geneva, March 1, 1821; d. Geneva, Feb. 25, 1873. Educated in Geneva and Paris (Chopin, pf., and Delaire, harm.); teacher of pf. at Geneva Cons.—Works: The 1-act comic opera La Fille du carillonneur (Geneva, 1854); and, f. piano, a romantic sonata, l'Absence, much brilliant salon-music (La Napolitaine, op. 26; Deux nocturnes, op. 29; Menuet, op. 60; Le Chant du rouet, Idylle, op. 64; Sur l'onde, op. 94; etc.), paraphrases of opera-themes, etc.

Bowen, York, b. Crouch Hill, London, Feb. 22, 1884. St. pf. for two years with A. Izard at the Blackheath Cons.; then won successively the Érard and Sterndale Bennett scholarships at the R. A. M., where he st. 1900–5, chiefly with T. Matthay (pf.) and F. Corder (comp.); since 1905 teacher of pf. there. Has written 3 concertos for pf. and orch.; a concerto for vla. and orch.; Miniature Suite for orch.; Second Suite; a sonata for vla. and pf.; several smaller pcs. for vla. and pf.

Bowman, Edward Morris [F. C. M., A. C. O., London], b. Barnard, Vermont, July 18, 1848; d. N. Y., Aug. 27, 1913. Pupil of William Mason (pf.) and J. P. Morgan (org. and theory) at New York, 1866–7; from 1867–70 was organist in St. Louis, Mo., of the Union Meth. Ch., then for 2 years of the Second Presb. Ch.; studied in Berlin, 1872–74, with Fr. Bendel (pf.), Ed. Rohde and Aug. Haupt (org.), and Weitzmann (theory, comp. and orchestration); spent summers of 1873–4 at Paris as Ed. Batiste's pupil in organ-playing, and another year in Berlin. In 1874 he resumed his last position in St. Louis; 1877–87, music-director and organist of the Second Baptist Ch. in that city, with an interval of European study under Bridge, Macfarren, Turpin, and Guilmant in 1881, during which B. passed the examination of the London Royal Coll. of Organists, being the first American to do so. In 1883, president of the Music Teachers' Nat. Assoc. (reëlected 1884, '93, '94 and 1905); in 1884, with 15 others, he founded the Amer. Coll. of Musicians; was its first president, and served 8 terms; 1887–94, organist and dir. of the Peddie Memorial Baptist Ch., Newark, N. J.; 1891–95, Ritter's successor as prof. and director of the dept. of music at Vassar College. In 1895 he organized the fine 'Temple Choir,' Brooklyn (200 voices, with orch. of 40), which he conducted till 1906. He was then called to organize and conduct a similar choir for Calvary Baptist Ch., New York (Manhattan). One of the foremost organists, pianists and theorists in the United States, he was a very successful teacher. Publ. Bowman's-Weitzmann's Manual of Musical Theory (1877; an Engl. compilation, from oral communications, of W.'s principles and rules of harmony; approved by W., and later translated into German); and other works.

Boyce, William, organist and composer; b. London, Feb. 7, 1710; d. Kensington, Feb. 7, 1779. Chorister in St. Paul's under Ch. King; articled pupil to Maurice Greene, org. there, and studied later with Pepusch. Became (1734) org. at Oxford Chapel, and in 1736 at St. Michael's, Cornhill; also composer to the Chapel Royal and the King; conductor of the festivals of the Three Choirs (Gloucester, Worcester, Hereford) in 1737; org. of Church of Allhallows in 1749; Master of the Royal Band, 1775; and associate organist to the Chapel Royal, 1758, then resigning his position at St. Michael's and Allhallows to devote himself to issuing Greene's collection of Cathedral Music (1760–78) in 3 vols., comprising morning and evening services, the anthems, and settings of the Sanctus, by Aldrich, Batten, Bevin, Blow, Bull, Byrd, Child, Jer. Clarke, Creyghton, Croft, Farrant, Gibbons, Goldwin, Henry VIII, Humphrey, Lawes, Locke, Morley, Purcell, Rogers, Tallis, Turner, Tye, Weldon, and Wise.—Compositions: Lyra Britannica (several books of songs, cantatas, and duets); 15 Anthems, Te Deum and Jubilate (1780); 12 Anthems and a Service (1790); an oratorio, Noah; masque, Peleus and Thetis; a masque for The Tempest; dirges for Cymbeline and Romeo and Juliet; several odes, symphonies, a vln.-concerto, 12 vln.-sonatas, etc.—See Q.-Lex.

Boyer, (Louis-Joseph-Victor-) Georges, b. Paris, July 21, 1850; won the Prix Rossini, over 169 competitors, with the libretto of Hérode (set to music by Chaumet; Bordeaux, 1892). Also wrote libretti for Le Portrait de Manon (Massenet), Mirka, l'enchanteresse, Dolorès, and several other lyric pieces. Writer for the 'Figaro,' 'l'Événement,' and the 'Petit Journal.'

Boyle, George F., pianist and composer; b. Sydney, N. S. W., June 29, 1886. Pupil of his father and mother, both well-trained musicians; début at Sydney at the age of 7; studied further with his mother till 14, when he made a concert-tour of the chief Australian towns. In 1901 a course of study with Sydney Moss, Australia's foremost pianopedagogue, was cut short after 9 months by the teacher's decease. At 16 B. toured Australia and New Zealand with Mark and Boris Hambourg; at 19 he became a pupil of Busoni in Berlin. Toured Holland with Emma Nevada; lived two years in London, where (April 23, 1908) he married Elise van den Heuvel, a noted Dutch Lieder-singer. He has given recitals in the principal cities of England, Germany, and Holland. Came to America in 1910 to take post of prof. of pf.

Bradbury, William Batchelder, b. York, Me., Oct. 6, 1816; d. Montclair, N. J., Jan. 7, 1868. Studied under Sumner Hill and Lowell Mason; 1847–9 at Leipzig under Hauptmann, Moscheles, and Böhme. Till 1854 he taught, wrote, and conducted mus. conventions; 1854–67, was in business as a piano-maker. Edited more than 50 collections of music, some of which had an immense sale (e. g., Fresh Laurels, 1867, 1,200,000 copies).—Composed 2 cantatas, Daniel (with G. F. Root, 1853), and Esther (1856).

Brad'ský, (Wenzel) Theodor, b. Rakovnik, Bohemia, Jan. 17, 1833; d. there Aug. 10, 1881. Taught by Caboun and Pischek at Prague; joined the cathedral-choir at Berlin, where he gave singing-lessons and composed. Prince George of Prussia, whose opera Iolanthe he set to music in 1872, app. him his court composer in 1874.—Operas: Der Heiratszwang (MS., 1859); Roswitha (Dessau, 1860); Die Braut des Waffenschmieds (MS., 1861); Das Krokodil (MS., 1862); Jarmila (Prague, 1879); Der Rattenfänger von Hameln (Berlin, 1881); many popular part-songs and songs.

Bra'ga, Gaetano, b. Giulianova, Abruzzi, June 9, 1829; d. Milan, Nov. 21, 1907. Eminent 'cellist, pupil of C. Gaetano at Naples Cons. (1841–52). A great traveller, he lived at Florence, Vienna, Paris, and London (between which last two cities he latterly divided his time), besides making concert-tours of Europe.—Works: Several operas, of which La Reginella (Lecco, 1871) was the most successful; vocal chamber-music; pieces for 'cello; and a Metodo di Violoncello.

Brah-Müller (real name Müller), Karl Friedrich Gustav, b. Kritschen, Silesia, Oct. 7, 1839; d. Berlin, Nov. 1, 1878. Teacher at Pleschen, then at Berlin, where he studied under Geyer and Wüerst; from 1867, teacher at Wandelt's Inst., Berlin.—Works: 'Singspiel' Ein Matrose von der Nymphe (Berlin, 1864); operetta Deutschland im Urwald; Te Deum for ch. and orch.; vln.-quartets; organ- and pf.-music, songs, etc.

Braham (recte Abraham), John, renowned tenor; b. London, 1774; d. there Feb. 17, 1856. Pupil of Leoni (London), Rauzzini (Bath), and Isola (Genoa). Début at Covent Garden April 21, 1787; appeared as tenor at Drury Lane in 1796 (opera Mahmoud), and was engaged for the Italian Opera. After study in Italy, and singing in several cities there, he reappeared at Covent Garden in 1801; endowed with a powerful voice of nearly 3-octave compass, his career was now an unbroken series of triumphs. He created the rôle of Hüon in Weber's Oberon (London, 1826). As a ballad-writer he was very popular; also wrote much of the music for the operatic rôles which he assumed, and the incidental music to 12 or more dramas.—See Q.-Lex.

Brahms, Johannes, one of the greatest masters, was born in Hamburg, May 7, 1833; he died in Vienna, Apr. 3, 1897. His father, a double-bass player in the Hamburg City Theatre, was his first teacher; but his chief instructor was Marxsen of Altona. At 14 he made his pianistic début at Hamburg, playing variations of his own on a folk-song. In 1853 he made a concert-tour with Remenyi. At Göttingen he was heard by Joachim, who sent him to Schumann. On him B.'s talent made so profound an impression that he published an enthusiastic article, 'Neue Bahnen' [New Paths], in the 'Neue Zeitschrift für Musik,' hailing B. as the coming hero among composers. However, a number of compositions, among them the three pf.-sonatas and three books of songs, published at Schumann's instigation, failed of popular appreciation. B. now served for a time as conductor of the Prince of Lippe-Detmold's orchestra; the years 1858–62 he spent in diligent study at Hamburg.—Although B., from the outset, confronted the public (to employ Schumann's dictum) 'fully equipped, as Minerva sprang from the brain of Jupiter,' his earlier compositions show a preponderance of technical learning. But in the Serenades for orchestra (1860–1) he already relegates theoretical science to its proper position as a means to an end. In 1862 he went to Vienna, and acted as conductor of the 'Singakademie' in 1863–4; from 1864–9 he lived in various towns (Hamburg, Zurich, Baden-Baden, etc.), and also made concert-tours, rewarded by ever-growing artistic and pecuniary success, with his friend Stockhausen; in 1869 he returned to Vienna. From 1871–4 he conducted the grand orchestral concerts of the 'Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde'; when Herbeck assumed this function, B. again left Vienna, and lived for a time near Heidelberg, but came back in 1878, and thenceforward made Vienna his home. In 1877 Cambridge University tendered him the degree of Mus. Doc.; but he ignored the offer, accepting however, the degree of Dr. phil. from Breslau in 1881, expressing his acknowledgment of the honor in the Akademische Festouvertüre. In 1886 he was created a knight of the Prussian 'Ordre pour le mérite,' with voting privilege, and elected a member of the Berlin Acad. of Arts. In 1889 he was presented with the freedom of his native city. His compositions during the first few years in Vienna were chiefly in the genre of chamber-music, which no other latter-day composer has so enriched; the string-sextet, piano-quintet, and the first three piano-quartets, were written at this time. He also composed several sacred works, among them Ein deutsches Requiem, op. 45, the first 3 choruses of which were given in Vienna in 1867, and the entire work produced in the Bremen cathedral in April, 1868. He left his mark on every branch of composition except opera; he frankly admitted that he 'knew nothing about the theatre.' Nevertheless, the idea of writing an opera was not wholly strange to his mind (cf. Widmann, 'J. B. in Erinnerungen'). B. was put forward by Hanslick, and other critics and musicians opposed to Wagnerian tendencies, as the modern champion of what they term 'absolute music.' B. himself, however, was not hostile to Wagner; he was a close student of Wagner's scores, and highly valued several Wagner autographs in his possession; he even (on Hanslick's authority) defended Wagner against hostile criticism. Though a conservator of established forms, B. was a thoroughly modern musician—a master, not a slave, of form, who did not hesitate to deviate from conventional lines when it suited his artistic purpose. Since Robert Schumann penned his fervent greeting to the twenty-year-old Brahms, the musical world had naturally watched the growth of the composer with the liveliest interest and, likewise, with the keenest scrutiny. The very manner of his introduction to the public was like a challenge calculated to arouse latent opposition and to whet active criticism. And hardly any modern musician, save Wagner, has been the object of so much hostility and animadversion as Brahms. Did he, in fact, fulfil the confident and impassioned predictions of his earliest champion? Yes:—and no! His life-work proved a disappointment to many once ardent admirers. Liszt, hearing B. play his scherzo in E♭ minor, mistakenly welcomed him as an apostle of extreme romanticism. And the young Brahms—Brahms the pianist, the youth full of 'fire and flame,' might well have been expected boldly to explore untravelled paths leading to a new Olympus. Instead of this he chose, unmoved by praise or blame, to be a standard-bearer of the traditions of a glorious past. The new paths which he trod were hardly those which Schumann so fondly anticipated. Austerely resisting the blandishments of the Muse of Programs, he stepped aside the throng to worship at the shrine of 'Classic' Music. His works prove conclusively that the classic forms were not exhausted even by the titanic Beethoven; he shows that in the hands of a master these forms are inexhaustible, that details can be rearranged without disturbing the fundamental lines. With B., as with Beethoven, the form is eminently plastic; it always adapts itself to the artistic content; it never fetters the imagination. B. is an idealist of the highest and purest type. The fine fibre of his musicianly feeling vibrates in his humblest song as in his proudest symphonic movement. In the case of his larger tone-pictures, a first hearing will not give unalloyed pleasure. The ear is sometimes wearied while seeking to follow the clue to his meaning through mazes of labyrinthine intricacy; and the difficulty is increased, it must be confessed, by the peculiarities of an instrumentation to which the undignified epithet 'muddy' has been applied, and which, contrasted with the glowing, scintillating, flashing, kaleidoscopic orchestral color of many of his contemporaries, shows dull and monotonous. But this is the worst that can be urged against B. the composer; and, given a conductor wholly in sympathy with the work and of an analytic turn of mind, passages which under other hands seemed like interminable, dreary wastes, are made to 'blossom like the rose.' Appreciation comes only after familiarity, and when an impression has been made, the effect is generally deep and lasting. In his treatment of thematic rhythms, B. is a lineal successor of Beethoven; in many of his songs one would say that Schubert lives again, but a Schubert whose intense spontaneity is controlled by a subtler feeling for formal finish. Schubert, Schumann, Franz, Brahms and Hugo Wolf are the five great figures in the history of the Lied. Brahms' powerful individuality reaches the very heart of the poem, the mood in which the poet conceived it, and reflects it in the vocal melody; this vocal melody is so closely interknit with the piano-accompaniment, that both flow on together in one broad, deep current of song. His songs, part-songs, and chamber-music, much of the piano-music, and several of the choral works (notably the Deutsches Requiem, the Triumphlied, and the Schicksalslied), enjoy real and undisputed popularity; his four symphonies, the concerto for violin, and the two piano-concertos, are only now coming into their own. He was a model of patient, unremitting industry; he labored, for example, over ten years, off and on, upon his first symphony, which created a profound sensation when produced in 1877; his fame had already been established, however, by his Requiem (1868).

Brahms the pianist was, in his youth, a brilliant and versatile player, of peculiar note in Bach and other classics. At the age of 20, having to play the Kreutzer Sonata at a concert with Remenyi, the piano was discovered to be a semitone below concert-pitch; there being no time to retune it, B., playing without notes, transposed his part a semitone higher throughout (A to B♭) [as Beethoven transposed his own concerto in C to C♯, at a rehearsal]. But early in the '70's, owing to lack of regular practice, his playing had lost its former charm; though still masterly in feeling and intent, it was too insecure in technique and weak in climax to afford full pleasure. It is by his compositions that posterity will judge him; and even the present generation no longer regards Bülow's phrase about 'the three great B.'s as a witty saying, but as a profound truth. In the fields of choral and absolute music the works of Bach, Beethoven and Brahms mark the highest achievement.

In 1906 there was founded in Berlin the 'Deutsche Brahmsgesellschaft,' the chief object of which is the publication of books about the master.

Breit'kopf & Härtel. Firm of music-publishers at Leipzig, founded (as a printing-office) in 1719 by Bernhard Christoph Breitkopf (b. Klausthal, Harz, Mar. 2, 1695; d. Mar. 26, 1777). His son and successor, J. G. Immanuel Breitkopf (b. Nov. 23, 1719; d. Jan. 29, 1794), entered the business in 1745; in 1754, his invention (or revival of Petrucci's invention) of movable types rendered it possible for him to add music-printing to the firm's resources, thus laying the foundation for future expansion. His son, Chr. Gottlob B., relinquished the business in 1795 in favor of his friend Chr. Härtel (b. Schneeberg, Jan. 27, 1763; d. July 25, 1827), in whose hands its prosperity was assured; he added a piano-manufactory, founded the 'Allgem. musikalische Zeitung' (1798), introduced pewter plates, and also lithographed titles. Successive heads of the business were Florenz Härtel (1827–35); Dr. Hermann Härtel (d. 1875), and his brother Raimund Härtel (retired 1880; d. 1888); and finally the sons of two sisters of Hermann and Raimund—Wilhelm Volkmann (b. 1837, d. 1896), and Dr. Oskar von Hase (b. 1846). With Dr. von Hase is now associated Dr. Ludwig Volkmann, the son of Wilhelm V.—Dr. v. Hase is the author of several valuable works on the history of the book-trade; Dr. Volkmann is an authoritative writer on art. —A son of Dr. v. Hase, Hermann (b. 1880), entered the firm in 1904, and is devoting himself to a study of the firm's valuable archives. He has publ. J. Haydn u. B. & H. (1909) and K. Ph. Bach u. B. & H. (1911). Among representative enterprises must be mentioned the monumental editions of Bach, Beethoven, Berlioz, Chopin, Froberger, Gluck, Grétry, Handel, Haydn, di Lasso, Liszt, Mendelssohn, Mozart, Palestrina, Schein, Schubert, Schumann, Schütz, Victoria, Wagner.

Brema, Marie (stage-name of Minny Fehrmann), dram. mez.-sop.; b. Liverpool, Feb. 28, 1856 (father German, mother from Richmond, Va.). Began serious study (after her marriage to Mr. Arthur Braun of Liverpool in 1874) under Henschel in 1890; début at the Popular Concert of Feb. 21, 1891, in Schubert's Ganymed, under the name of 'Bremer' (her father being a native of Bremen); after further teaching by Mme. Bessie Cox and Mr. Blume, she made her stage-début at Oxford in 1891 as Adrienne Lecouvreur, and on Oct. 19 created the rôle of Lola (Cavalleria Rusticana) in London; sang Orfeo on Nov. 27. After continued concert-work, she was eng. by Cosima Wagner to sing the Ortrud at Bayreuth in 1894, also appearing several times as Kundry. In the season of 1895 she sang the rôles of Ortrud, Brangäne and Brünnhilde (Walküre) with the Damrosch company in New York and elsewhere; sang in Brussels (Orphée, Dalila, Amneris) with great success; in the season of 1895–6 she sang all the great Wagner rôles at the M. O. H.; and was again at Bayreuth 1896–7 as Fricka and Kundry. Was well received as Orphée in Paris (1898), and has been a special favorite of the Parisians since her singing of Brangäne at the Lamoureux concerts of 1900, and Brünnhilde (Götterdämmerung) in German at the Château d'Eau performances under Richter in 1902. Her Marcelline, at the revival of Bruneau's Attaque du Moulin in London (1897), was a telling impersonation. She created the Beatrice in Stanford's Much Ado about Nothing (May 30, 1901), and the Angel in Elgar's Dream of Gerontius (1900, Birmingham Fest.). Now ranks among the leading singers of Britain in festivals, concerts, and opera; prof. of singing at the R. C. M. at Manchester.

Bruch, Max, dramatic, choral and instrumental composer, and pianist; b. at Cologne, Jan. 6, 1838. His mother (née Almenräder), a singer, was his first instructor. He afterwards studied with Breidenstein at Bonn. In 1853 he won the four-year scholarship of the Mozart Foundation, at Frankfort, and became a pupil of Ferdinand Hiller, Reinecke and Breuning. At 14 years of age he brought out a symphony at Cologne, and in 1858, in the same city, produced his first dramatic work, Goethe's 'Singspiel' Scherz, List und Rache (op. 1). In 1861 he visited Berlin, Leipzig, Vienna, Dresden, Munich, and Mannheim, where he remained until 1864, producing an opera, Loreley (1863; op. 16), composed to the libretto Geibel had written for Mendelssohn. Here he also composed his choral work for men's voices, Frithjof, which, on a tour in 1864–5, was given with genuine artistic and popular success at Aix, Leipzig and Vienna. At Koblenz (1865–7) he wrote his first violin-concerto (G min.), a favorite with all violinists. In Berlin, where he resided 1871–3, he produced in 1872, with but scanty success, his opera Hermione, based on Shakespeare's Winter's Tale. From 1873–8, with the exception of two artistic journeys to England, he remained at Bonn, devoting himself to composition and producing the two choral works Arminius (1875) and Das Lied von der Glocke (1878), and the second violin-concerto in D min. In 1883 Bruch visited the United States, and brought out his Arminius at Boston. Bruch's chief claim to distinction lies in his development of the epic cantata (frequently called 'weltliches Oratorium' [secular oratorio]), a branch of composition to which comparatively little attention had been paid. Among his works in this line for soli, mixed ch. and orch., are Odysseus, Arminius, Lied von der Glocke, Achilleus; and, for male chorus, Frithjof, Salamis, Normannenzug and Leonidas. Beautiful sound-effects and clear melodious invention are prominent characteristics of his style. Among his smaller works, Kol Nidrei, a Hebrew melody for violoncello, has become popular.

Bruch practised as a music-teacher at Cologne 1858–61, was musical director at Koblenz 1865–7, and court Kapellm. at Sondershausen 1867–70. In 1878 he succeeded Stockhausen as conductor of the Stern Choral Union; from 1880–3 he was conductor of the Philh. Society, Liverpool; in 1883 he succ. Bernhard Scholz in the direction of the Orchestral Soc. at Breslau. He remained in Breslau until 1890, and in 1892 he succeeded von Herzogenberg as director in the branch of composition at the Royal Hochschule in Berlin, with the title of R. Prof. In 1910 he retired, and has since been living in Friedenau, near Berlin. In 1881 he married the singer Klara Tuczek. The Univ. of Cambridge conferred upon him in 1893 the degree of Mus. Doc. (hon. c.); in 1898, the French Academy elected him corresp. member; in 1908 he received the Prussian 'Ordre pour le mérite,' for Arts and Sciences.

Bruch, Wilhelm, b. Mayence, June 14, 1864; a distant relative of the preceding. While preparing for the legal profession he studied at the same time at the Leipzig Cons.;

was theatre-conductor at Strassburg; cond. of the Scottish Orchestra at Edinburgh; now (1916) conductor of the Philharmonic Orch. in Nuremberg. Has composed two operas, Hirlanda (Mayence, 1886), and Das Winzerfest am Rhein (Nuremberg, 1903).

Bruck (or Brouck), Arnold von, conjecturally a German Swiss; d. 1545. In 1534, Kapellm. to Kaiser Ferdinand I. Eminent composer, many of whose motets, hymns, German part-songs, etc., are preserved in collections of the 16th century.

Brück'ler, Hugo, b. Dresden, Feb. 18, 1845; d. there Oct. 4, 1871. Gifted song-composer.—Works: Op. 1 and 2, songs from Scheffel's Trompeter von Säkkingen (1, 5 songs of Young Werner by the Rhine; 2, Margaret's Songs); also Sieben Gesänge and a ballad, Der Vogt von Tenneberg.—Posth.: Nordmännersang, and Marsch der Bürgergarde. (See Musiol's monograph, H. B.)

Bruck'ner, Anton, b. Ansfelden, Upper Austria, Sept. 4, 1824; d. Vienna, Oct. 11, 1896. Organist, composer, and teacher. Son of a village schoolmaster, early orphaned, and chiefly self-taught, he became by diligent study and practice so remarkably able an organist and contrapuntist as to obtain, in 1855, the appointment as cathedral organist at Linz-on-Danube, in competition with many rivals. As opportunity offered, he st. comp. with O. Kitzler, and cpt. with Sechter; in 1867 he succeeded Sechter as court-organist at Vienna, also as prof. of organ, harm. and cpt. at Vienna Cons.; in 1875 he was also app. 'Lektor' of music at Vienna Univ.; in 1891 the Univ. gave him the title of Ph. D. (hon. c.). Journeys to France (1869) and England (1871) established his fame as one of the greatest of contemporary org.-virtuosi. His compositions, in which Wagner's influence is strongly felt, include 9 symphonies: 1st, C m.; 2nd, C m.; 3rd, D m.; 4th (Romantic), E♭; 5th, B♭; 6th, A; 7th (with lovely adagio), E; 8th, C m.; 9th (unfinished); a fine Te Deum (1886, Vienna); Grand Masses in D m., E m., and F m.; a Requiem, Graduals, Offertories, Psalms; Germanenzug, for male chorus; several other works for ditto; chamber-music; string-quintet in F; etc. His music seems, in general, lacking in inspiration and individuality. A list of his works was published by Doblinger.—BIOGRAPHY: F. Brunner, B. (Linz, 1895); R. Louis, A. B. (Munich, 1905); Leo Funtek, Bruckneriana (Leipzig, 1910); F. Graeflinger, A. B. Bausteine zu seiner Lebensgeschichte (Munich, 1911); M. Morold, A. B. (Leipzig, 1912); A. Hahn, Die Symphonie A. B.'s (1914). Letters of B. are contained in F. Graeflinger's Karl Waldeck (Linz, 1905).

Brück'ner, Oscar, excellent 'cellist; b. Erfurt, Jan. 2, 1857. Pupil, at Dresden, of Fr. Grützmacher, Sr., and Draeseke (theory). After tours in Germany, Russia, Poland and Holland, he was app. ducal chamber-virtuoso at Strelitz; since 1889, 1st 'cello at the R. Th., Wiesbaden, and teacher in the Cons. In 1896 he received the title of 'R. Concertmeister'; in 1908, of 'R. Professor.'—Works: Soli for 'cello; pf.-music, songs, etc.

Bruhns, Nikolaus, b. Schwabstädt, Schleswig, 1665; d. Husum, 1697. Organist, pupil of Buxtehude at Lübeck, on whose recommendation he was app. organist at Copenhagen. He was also a violinist, and composed for organ and pf. (Three fine organ-pieces are in vol. i. of Commer's 'Musica Sacra.')

Brüll, Ignaz, b. Prossnitz, Moravia, Nov. 7, 1846; d. Vienna, Sept. 17, 1907. Pupil, at Vienna, of Epstein (pf.), Rufinatscha (comp.), and Dessoff (instrumentation). After giving pf.-recitals and concerts of his own compositions he made extended pianistic tournées, and then settled in Vienna, where from 1872–8 he was pf.-prof. at the Horâk Institute. In 1878 he played in 20 concerts at London. His first opera, Die Bettler von Samarkand (1864), was not specially successful; but the second, Das goldene Kreuz (Berlin, 1875), speedily attained great popularity both in Germany and abroad; it was followed by Der Landfriede (Vienna, 1877), Bianca (Dresden, 1879), Königin Mariette (Munich, 1883), Gloria (Hamburg, 1886), Das steinerne Herz (Vienna, 1888), Gringoire (1-act, Munich, 1892), Schach dem König (Munich, 1893), and a 2-act comic opera Der Husar (Vienna, March 2, 1898; very succ.).—Other works: The ballet Ein Märchen aus der Champagne (1896); Ouverture pathétique, for orch.; Im Walde (Jagdouvertüre) for orch.; 3 serenades for do.; overture to Macbeth; Tanz-Suite for orch.; 2 pf-concertos; Konzertstück for pf. and orch., op. 88; Rhapsodie for ditto; 1 vln.-concerto; suite for pf. and vln.; Trio; sonata for 'cello and pf.; do. for 2 pfs. 4 hands; ditto for vln. and pf.; 4 suites for piano, 2 hands; pf.-pieces; part-songs, songs, etc. Among his literary remains were found a Dramatische Ouvertüre, and fragments of an opera, Rübezahl.

Brumel, Anton, Flemish contrapuntist; b. circa 1480; d. circa 1520. Lived at the court of Sigismund Cantelmus, Duke of Sora; in 1505 he took service with Alfonso I, Duke of Ferrara. Many of his masses are found in old collections; others are in MS. at Munich, etc. Henri Expert publ. the mass De beata Virgine in vol. ix of 'Maîtres Musiciens'; in Maldeghem's 'Trésor' are some other pieces. —Cf. vol. vi of 'La Musique aux Pays-Bas,' by Van der Straeten.—See Q.-Lex.

Buch'mayer, Richard, b. Zittau, April 19, 1857. Entered Dresden Cons. in 1875, and devoted himself especially to pf.; after a 4-years' residence in Russia he returned to Dresden as teacher of pf. at the Cons.; resigned in 1890; taught then a few years at the Musikschule, but has given up all connections with institutions, and is dividing his time between private teaching, concertizing and research work. He always showed a preference for the older piano-music, and his historical recitals have won him an enviable reputation. During a visit to the municipal library of Lüneburg, in 1903, he discovered some valuable manuscripts of organ- and piano-works of the early part of the 17th century, throwing new light on the subject of organ-tablatures. The results of his studies he has publ. in 'Sbd. Int. M.-G.,' 'Bach-Jahrb.' (1908), 'Signale,' etc. Has edited Ch. Ritter's cantata O sanctissime sponse Jesu, and G. Böhm's cantata Mein Freund ist mein (B. & H.).

Büch'ner, Emil, b. Osterfeld, n. Naumburg, Dec. 7, 1826; d. Erfurt, June 9, 1908. Buck, Dudley, noted organist, composer, and teacher; b. Hartford, Conn., March 10, 1839; d. Orange, N. J., Oct. 6, 1909. Pupil of W. J. Babcock (pf.); later, at Leipzig Cons. (1858–9), of Plaidy and Moscheles (pf.), Hauptmann (comp.), and J. Rietz (instrumentation); also studied under Rietz and Johann Schneider (organ) at Dresden, and thereafter spent a year (1861–2) for study in Paris. Returning to America, he became (1862) organist of the Park Ch., Hartford; later of St. James', Chicago; in 1872 of St. Paul's, Boston, where he was also organist to the Music Hall Association. In 1875 he was the organist of the Cincinnati May Festival; then, at New York, asst.-conductor of Th. Thomas's Central Park Garden Concerts, and organist of St. Anne's, Brooklyn; in 1877 he became the organist of Holy Trinity Ch., Brooklyn, and director of the Apollo Club. In 1902 he accepted the position of organist at Plymouth Ch., where, however, he remained only one year, for in 1903 he resigned all positions. He was one of the first American composers to achieve general recognition; his church-music and numerous cantatas, sacred and secular, are deservedly popular.—Works: The comic opera Deseret (1880); a grand opera Serapis (not perf.); symphonic overture Marmion (1880); a Canzonetta and Bolero for vln. and orch. A Complete Method for the Study of Technique and Style* (N. Y., Schirmer).

Bühler, Franz [Pater Gregorius], born in Schneidheim, near Nördlingen, April 12, 1760; d. Augsburg, Feb. 4, 1824. A Benedictine monk at Donauwörth; Kapellm. at Botzen, 1794; at Augsburg cathedral, 1801.—Works: Opera, Die falschen Verdachte; oratorio, Jesus, der göttliche Erlöser (1816); masses, psalms, hymns, and the like; several colls. of German songs with pf.; sonatas and preludes for org.; theoretical pamphlets; etc.

Bull, John, famous org. and contrapuntal comp.; b. Somersetshire, England, 1563; d. Antwerp, March 12, 1628. Pupil of William Blitheman in the Chapel Royal; organist of Hereford cathedral, 1582; later also Master of the Children. 1586, Mus. Bac., 1592, Mus. Doc., Oxon. In 1596 he was appointed, on Queen Elizabeth's recommendation, prof. of music at Gresham College; a post resigned on his marriage, 1607. In 1611 he was in the service of Prince Henry, and left the country two years later, becoming one of the organists to the Archduke at Brussels. In 1617 he became organist of the cathedral of Notre Dame at Antwerp. 200 compositions are attributed to him; list in Ward's 'Lives of the Gresham Professors'; several were printed in contemporary collections (exercises and variations for the virginals, some canons, and an anthem), and a few are reprinted in Pauer's 'Old English Composers'.

Bull, Ole Bornemann, famous violinist; b. Bergen, Norway, Feb. 5, 1810; d. at his country-seat, Lysoën, near Bergen, Aug. 17, 1880. At first a pupil of Paulsen, he rapidly outgrew that teacher's method, and formed a style peculiarly his own, preferring an almost level bridge and flat fingerboard. A student of theology, he failed to pass the examinations; directed the Philh. and Dram. Societies at Bergen (1828); went to Spohr at Kassel in 1829, found him uncongenial, and proceeded to Paris (1831), where he was strongly influenced by Paganini, and made his début in 1832. Now, technically considered, a finished virtuoso, he began his long travels throughout Europe, and 5 times to North America (1843–79). A leading trait of B.'s character was his passionate love for his native land; he founded a national theatre at Bergen, but became involved in troublesome disputes, left the town, and in 1852 bought a tract of 125,000 acres in Pennsylvania to establish a Norwegian colony; but the scheme failed, and he was swindled out of an immense sum. His loss was soon made good, however, by renewed artistic tours. Ole B. did not rank high as a cultivated musician, but he was a past-master of all resources and tricks of technique, and played his own pieces (he rarely attempted others) with wonderful skill and expression. He wrote 2 concertos (A and E m.), and a variety of characteristic solo pieces; of all his works only 3 have been published (La Preghiera d'una madre, Variazioni di bravura, and a Notturno.)—Biogr.: Ole Bull: A Memoir (Boston, 1883), by Sara C. Bull, his second wife (German ed. Stuttgart, 1886); O. Vik is his Norwegian biographer (Bergen, 1890).

Bullard, Frederick Field, b. Boston, Mass., Sept. 21, 1864; died there June 24, 1904. He renounced the study of chemistry for music, taking a four-years' course of composition under Rheinberger at Munich (1888–92). He then settled in Boston as a teacher of composition and composer; was mus. critic for 'Time and the Hour,' 1897–8. He publ. about 40 songs (The Sword of Ferrara, Beam from yonder star, The Water-lily, A June Lullaby, The Singer, The Hermit, De profundis, etc.); also church-songs, hymn-anthems, duets, and a score of 4-p. songs for male voices, several of which are popular.

Bülow [bü'loh], Hans Guido von, a pianist, conductor and critic of wonderful versatility and the highest attainments; born Dresden, Jan. 8, 1830; died Feb. 12, 1894, at Cairo, Egypt, whither he had gone in the vain hope of restoring his undermined health. At the age of 9 his teachers were Friedrich Wieck (pf.) and Eberwein (harmony); when, in 1848, he matriculated at Leipzig Univ. as a law-student, he continued contrapuntal study under Hauptmann. Next year, however, found him at Berlin, where he adopted Wagner's radical tendencies (see W.'s Die Kunst und die Revolution, then just publ.); was confirmed in his views by hearing Lohengrin given at Weimar under Liszt's direction, and joined Wagner in his exile at Zurich. During 1850–1 the master initiated him into the art of conducting; B. then acted as conductor in the theatres at Zurich and St. Gallen, and finally became Liszt's pupil at Weimar. His first pianistic tour (1853), through Germany and Austria, met with fair success; his second, in 1855, secured him the succession to Kullak as first pf.-teacher in the Stern Cons., Berlin, a post held until 1864. He married Cosima Liszt in 1857; in 1858 he was app. court pianist; in 1863 the Univ. of Jena made him Ph. D. (hon. c.). Wagner, having been recalled from banishment by Ludwig II of Bavaria, influenced his royal patron to invite B. to Munich in 1864, as court pianist; from 1867–9 he was also court Kapellm., and Director of the School of Music. From 1869, after separation from his wife, B. lived in Florence as a teacher, pianist, and concert-giver till 1872; here he was also a power in musical circles, and did much to introduce German music. After an interval filled chiefly by concert-tours, he succeeded Fischer, in 1878, as court Kapellm. at Hanover; but frequent embroilments with the theatre Intendant led to B.'s resignation in 1880, and from Oct. 1, of that year, until 1885 he acted as 'Hofmusik-Intendant' at Saxe-Meiningen. In 1882 he took his second wife, Marie Schanzer, an actress at Meiningen. From 1885–8 B. devoted much time to teaching at the Raff Cons., Frankfort, and Klindworth's Cons., Berlin; he likewise directed the Philharm. Concerts at Petrograd and Berlin. In 1888 he founded, at Hamburg, the Subscription Concerts, which were a great success from the start.

Bülow's characteristics, both as a player and conductor, were complete identification with the spirit of the interpreted compositions; careful attention to the minutest details of phrasing, shading, and technique, resulting in reproductions of flawless accuracy; tireless energy; and an almost unexampled memory, enabling him not only to play his entire and unmatchable repertory by heart, but also to conduct the most intricate orchestral works without score—a modern fashion in which he was the pioneer. His training of the Meiningen orchestra, with which he made world-renowned concert-tours, will, in particular, ever be quoted as an astounding example of the subordination of the instrumental factors to lofty artistic intelligence and will-power. No pianist except d'Albert has successfully followed his lead in giving programs filled solely with the most difficult of Beethoven's sonatas; he was, indeed, a classical player par excellence, though having at his fingers' ends all the best productions of modern piano-literature. His pianistic tours in Europe and America (where he gave 139 concerts in 1875–6) were the triumphal progresses of a genuine apostle of high art.—His published comps. include the music to Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar (op. 10), a Ballade f. orch., Des Sängers Fluch (op. 16), a symphonic 'Stimmungsbild' Nirwana (op. 20), 4 Charackterstücke for orch. (op. 23), and a few pf.-pieecs and songs; also masterly transcriptions of the prelude to Wagner's Meistersinger and the whole of Tristan und Isolde, also of Berlioz's overtures to Le Corsaire and Benvenuto Cellini. His critical editions of Beethoven's sonatas, and of Cramer's études, attest his eminent editorial ability.—BIBLIOGRAPHY: E. Zabel, H. v. B. (Hamburg, 1894); Th. Pfeiffer, *Studien bei H. v. Bulss, Paul, baritone stage-singer; born Birkholz Manor, Priegnitz, Dec. 16, 1847; d. Temesvar, March 20, 1902. Pupil of G. Engel; eng. in theatres at Lübeck, Cologne, Kassel, Dresden (1876–89); thereafter at the Berlin Court Opera.

Bult'haupt, Heinrich, poet and dramatist; b. Bremen, Oct. 26, 1849; d. there Aug. 21, 1905. He studied jurisprudence at Göttingen, Leipzig and Berlin, spent some time in Kiev as private teacher, and then made an extensive trip in the Orient. In 1879 he was appointed librarian of the Municipal Library at Bremen; 1892 he received the title 'Professor.' Besides his purely literary work he wrote texts to several operas of Reinthaler, Rubinstein, d'Albert, etc., and to choral compositions of Vierling and Bruch. His most important work dealing with music is his Dramaturgie der Oper (2 vols., Leipzig, 1887; 2d ed. 1902). He also wrote a biography of Karl Löwe in 'Berühmte Musiker' (1898), and Richard Wagner als Klassiker (1899).

Bung'ert, August, b. Mülheim-on-Ruhr, March 14, 1846; d. Leutesdorf, Oct. 26, 1915. Taught by H. F. Kufferath (pf.); then at Cologne Cons.; thereafter, for 4 years. at Paris Cons.; he also studied with Mathias, Kapellm. at Kreuznach (1869), and afterwards at Karlsruhe; he lived (1873–81) in Berlin, pursuing contrapuntal studies under Kiel, and from 1882 at Pegli, near Genoa. The last years of his life he lived alternately at Berlin and Leutesdorf on the Rhine. In 1911 he was made 'R. Prof.'—Compositions: Beginning in 1871, B. composed 2 great opera-cycles: I. Die Ilias, comprising (1) Achilles; (2) Klytemnestra;—II. Die Odyssee, comprising (1) Kirke (Dresden, 1898), (2) Nausikaa (ib., 1901), (3) Odysseus' Heimkehr (ib., 1896; mod. succ.); (4) Odysseus' Tod (ib. 1903).—Each of these 4 'Abende' is also provided with a 'Vorspiel'; the entire work (2 cycles) is entitled Homerische Welt. The entire tetralogy was given also in Berlin, Cologne and Hamburg, but everywhere met with an indifferent reception. Die Ilias was not completed.—Comic opera Die Studenten von Salamanca (Leipzig, 1884); symph. poem Auf der Wartburg; Hohes Lied der Liebe, with orch.; Tasso, overture; pf.-quartet, op. 18 (won prize offered by Florentine Quartet, 1878); Symphonia victrix; var. and fugue for orch., op. 13; a symph., Zeppelins erste grosse Fahrt; Ein deutsches Requiem for bar., chorus and orch. (1907); a mystery, Warum? woher? wohin? (1908); incidental music to Goethe's Faust; a few pieces f. pf.; quartets for men's voices; songs (many to Carmen Sylva's Lieder einer Königin).—Cf. M. Chop, A. B., ein deutscher Dichterkomponist (Leipzig, 1902).

Butler, O'Brien (recte Whitwell), b. Cahersiveen, Ireland, circa 1870; d. May 7, 1915 (lost on the Lusitania). Spent his boyhood days at Iveragh, a place abounding in old Gaelic traditions; began his musical studies in Italy, finishing with C. V. Stanford and W. Parratt at the R. C. M. in London; then travelled extensively, and spent some time in India, where he wrote an Irish opera, Muirgheis, in which considerable use is made of the pentatonic scale. The work was produced in Dublin, in 1903, and was heard in concert-form in New York (1915), during the composer's visit to the U. S. B. also wrote a sonata for vln. and pf. (on Irish themes).—One of his songs, Cincoradh, was selected as the test composition for soprano solo singing at the 'Feis Ceoil' at Dublin in 1915.

Butt, Clara, b. Southwick, Sussex, Feb. 1, 1873. Pupil of D. W. Rootham in Bristol till 1889, when she won a scholarship at the R. C. M., where she continued her studies with J. H. Blower; début at Albert Hall as Ursula in Sullivan's Golden Legend, Dec. 7, 1892; studied subsequently for a short time with Bouhy in Paris and Etelka Gerster in Berlin (1895). Her success at the festivals at Hanley and Bristol in 1893 was so emphatic, that thereafter she not only was constantly sought for those occasions, but prominent composers wrote works specially for her (F. Cliff, Triumph of Alcestis; H. Bedford, Romeo and Juliet; E. Elgar, Sea-Pictures; etc.); has been heard twice in the U. S. (1899 and 1913); 1913–14 she made a tour around the world with her husband, R. Kennerley Rumford, a distinguished baritone, whom she married in 1900. Her voice is a rich contralto of extraordinary beauty.

In 1541 he was elected asst.-organist at San Marco, Venice; 1553–64, organist of the court-chapel, Vienna. 2 books of Ricercari, 2 of Canzoni francesi, and 1 of Mottetti were published (1547–50).—See Q.-Lex.

Buxtehu'de, Dietrich, b. Helsingborg, Sweden, 1637; d. Lübeck, May 9, 1707, as organist at the Marienkirche, a post he had held since 1668. He was famed far and wide as an organist; in 1673 he established the 'Abendmusiken,' celebrated musical services made up of organ-music and concerted pieces for chorus and orchestra, held on Sunday afternoons from 4 to 5; to hear them, J. S. Bach walked 50 miles, from Arnstadt. As a composer he was greatest in the instrumental fugue and suite. A complete edition of his organ-works has been publ. by Philip Spitta. Other instrl. and vocal works are extant in MS. or in rare printed editions.—Cf. H. Jimmerthal, D. B. (Lübeck, 1877), and A. Pirro, D. B. (Paris, 1913).—See Q.-Lex.

Buzzola [bŏŏt'sŏh-lăh], Antonio, dramatic composer; b. Adria, March 4, 1815; d. Venice, March 20, 1871. Pupil of his father, a musical director, and of Donizetti at Naples. After bringing out at Venice the operas Ferramondo (1836), Mastino I della Scala (1841), and Gli Avventurieri (1842), he travelled, for the purpose of study, in Germany and France, returning (1847) to Venice, where he produced Amleto (1848) and Elisabetta di Valois (1850). In 1855 he was app. m. di capp. at San Marco, and wrote much good church-music, etc. An opera in Venetian dialect, La Puta onorata, remains unfinished.

Byrd (or Byrde, Bird, Byred), William, b. London, 1538; d. there July 4, 1623. Pupil of Tallis, and (1554) senior chorister at St. Paul's; 1563, organist of Lincoln cath.; 1569, Gentleman of the Chapel Royal. In 1575 a lucrative patent for the exclusive privilege of printing music and selling music-paper was granted to Byrd and Tallis, passing wholly into Byrd's possession on Tallis' death (1585). B. was an excellent organist and skilful contrapuntist—one of the foremost composers of the period.—Publ. Works: Cantiones . . . sacræ . . . a 5–6; Psalms, Sonets and Songs of Sadnes and Pietie . . . a 5; Songs of Sundrie Natures . . . a 3-6; Liber Primus Sacrarum Cantionum a 5; Liber Secundus (do.); Gradualia ac cantiones sacræ . . . a 5–6; Psalms, Songs and Sonets . . . a 3–6; separate numbers in various colls. Cabezón [kah-bĕ-thôn'], Don (Felix) Antonio de, styled by Pedrell 'the Spanish Bach'; b. Castrojeriz, March 30, 1510; d. Madrid, May 26, 1566, as cembalist and organist to King Philip II. His son and successor, Hernando, published his instrumental works, as 'Obras de música para tecla, arpa y vihuela'

[Works of music for keyed instrs., harp, and lute] (Madrid, 1578); the sole extant copy is in Berlin, and contains, progressively arr., 2- and 3-part exercises, arrangements of hymn-tunes, 4-part Tientos (Ricercari), and arr. of motets by Josquin and other Netherlanders up to 6 parts. Pedrell has brought out a new edition in 'Hispaniæ schola musica sacra' (4 volumes).

Ca'bo, Francisco Javier, b. Naguera, n. Valencia, 1768; d. Valencia, Nov. 21, 1832. In 1810 singer, 1816 organist, 1830 maestro at the Cathedral; one of the foremost Spanish church-composers who preserved the traditions of the Palestrina style. Wrote masses, vespers, motets, etc.; also some organ-music.

Caccini [kăht-chē'nē], Giulio, called Romano, because born at Rome, circa 1546; d. Florence, Dec. 10, 1618, where he had resided since 1565 as singer to the Tuscan court. A pupil of Scipione della Palla in singing and lute-playing. His first essays in composition were madrigals in the ancient polyphonic style; but the example of Vincenzo Galilei, and his own surpassing skill as a singer (aided, no doubt, by the discussions of the artists and literati frequenting the houses of Bardi and Corsi at Florence), inspired him to write vocal soli in recitative-form (then termed musica in istile rappresentativo), which he sang with great applause to his own accomp. on the theorbo. These first essays in dramatic music were followed by his settings of detached scenes written by Bardi, and finally by the opera Il combattimento d'Apolline col serpente, poem by Bardi; then appeared La Dafne (1597), in collaboration with Peri, poem by Rinuccini; Eurydice (1600), poem by Rinuccini; and Il rapimento di Cefalo (Oct. 9, 1600, the first opera ever prod. in a public theatre), poem by Chiabrera. Eurydice, upon which C. based his claim as the originator of the new style, was written after Peri's comp. of the same text, although both works were produced in the same year. Another epoch-making work was Le nuove musiche, a series of madrigals for solo voice, with bass (1601; 1607; 1615). He also published Nove Arie (Venice, 1608), and Fuggilotio musicale (Venice, 1614; madrigals, sonnets, arias, etc.). Caccini was called, by abbate Angelo Grillo, the 'father of a new style of music'; Bardi said of him that he had 'attained the goal of perfect music.'—Cf. A. Ehrich, G. C. (Leipzig, 1908).—See Q.-Lex.

Cadaux [kăh-doh'], Justin, b. Albi (Tarn), France, April 13, 1813; d. Paris, Nov. 8, 1874. Pupil of Zimmerman (pf.), and Dourlen (harm.), at Paris Cons.; comp. 6 comic operas.

Ch.; conductor of 'Pittsburgh Male Ch.'; student of Indian Songs; lectures on Indian lore with Princess Tsianina Redfeather, Indian mezzo-soprano; has appeared in America, London and Paris since 1909. Member Advisory Council for Promotion of Opera in English, Amer. Mus. Soc., A. G. O., MS. Soc.—Works: Trio for vln., 'cello and pf. in D; piano-sonata in A; The Vision of Sir Launfal, cantata for male voices (prize comp., Pittsburgh, November, 1909); many Indian songs, and part-songs; many pf.-pieces; 2 operas, The Land of Misty Water (3-act), and The Garden of Death (1-act), have not yet been produced.

Cady, Calvin Brainard, b. Barry, Ill., June 21, 1851. Pupil of Oberlin Cons.; from 1872–4 at Leipzig Cons., where his teachers were E. Fr. Richter (harm., cpt.), Papperitz (org.), and O. Paul (pf., comp.); taught harm. and pf. at Oberlin Cons., 1874–9; act. prof. of music at Univ. of Mich., 1880–8; until 1894, prof. at Coll. of Music and editor 'Music Review' (1892–4) in Chicago; then lived in Boston as lecturer; since 1907 lecturer on music at Columbia Univ.; since 1908 also at Inst. of Musical Art as lecturer on musical pedagogy; advocates the appreciation of music as essential in all courses leading to a liberal education. Has written Musical Education (3 vols., 1902–7).

Cæcilia. See CECILIA.

Cafa'ro, Pasquale (called Caffarel'li), noted composer; b. San Pietro in Galatina, province of Lecce, Italy, Feb. 8, 1706; d. Naples, Oct. 23, 1787. Pupil of L. Leo in Naples Cons. della Pietà, and Leo's successor in 1745.—Wrote operas, oratorios, cantatas, etc.; a Stabat Mater in 2 parts, with organ, is specially noteworthy.—See Q.-Lex.

Caffarel'li (real name Gaetano Majorano), brilliant soprano (musico); b. Bari, April 16, 1703; d. on his estate Santo-Dorato, near Naples, Nov. 30, 1783. A poor peasant-boy, endowed with a beautiful voice, he was discovered by a musician named Caffaro (not Pasquale Cafaro), who taught him, and sent him to Porpora at Naples. In gratitude to his patron he assumed the name of Caffarelli. After 5 years' hard study Porpora dismissed him with the words: 'Go, my son, I have nothing more to teach you; you are the greatest singer in Italy and in the world.' He was indeed a master of pathetic song, and excelled in coloratura as well; he read the most difficult music at sight, and was an accomplished harpsichord-player. His début at the Teatro Valle (Rome, 1724) in a female rôle (such was the custom for artifical soprani) was attended by a perfect ovation; his renown increased from year to year. In 1738 he sang in London, and apparently made little impression; but in Italy, Spain, Paris and Vienna, he was triumphantly successful. He amassed a fortune, bought the dukedom of Santo-Dorato, and assumed the title of duke.

Caf'fi, Francesco, b. Venice, 1786; d. Padua, February, 1874. Wrote a *Storia della musica sacra nella già Cappella Ducale di S. (1842–7) under Ray and Frasi; as a student 3 of his operas were produced in the Cons. Th.: Rosalia di S. Miniato (semi-seria, 1845); I due Savojardi (do., 1846); and Don Bucefalo [his masterwork] (buffa, 1847). From 1852–73 he was m. di capp. in the cathedral of Vigevano; 1873, succeeded Cossia as m. di capp. in the cathedral of Novara; 1887, m. di capp. in S. Maria Maggiore, Bergamo. From 1848–74 he brought out some 15 more operas at Rome, Genoa, Turin, Milan, etc. He left 3 operas: Gli amori di Cleopatra (buffa, comp. circa 1870), Re Lear (finished 1893, 5 acts), and Il Carabiniere (in rough sketch).

Cahen [kăhn], Albert, composer; b. Paris, Jan. 8, 1846; d. Cap d'Ail, March, 1903. Pupil of Mme. Szarvady (pf.) and César Franck (comp.).—Works: Jean le Précurseur, biblical poem (1874); Le Bois, comic opera (1880, Opéra-Com.); Endymion, mythological poem (1883); La Belle au bois dormant, fairy opera (Geneva, 1886); Le Vénitien, 4-act opera (Rouen, 1890); Fleur des neiges, ballet (Brussels, 1891); La Femme de Claude, 3-act lyric drama (Paris, 1896, Opéra-Com.; unsuccessful).

Cahen, Ernest, b. Paris, Aug. 18, 1828; d. there Nov. 8, 1893. Pupil of the Cons., taking first prize for harm. and accomp. in 1847, and the second Grand Prix for comp. in 1849. Pianist and teacher; also 'professeur adjoint' at the Cons.—Works: 2 operettas, Le Calfat (1853), and Le Souper de Mezzetin (1859), both produced at the Folies-Nouvelles.

Cahn-Speyer, Rudolf, b. Vienna, Sept. 1, 1881. A student of chemistry, but at the same time studied music with H. Grädener at Vienna; while taking courses in science at the Univ. of Leipzig, he continued his musical studies with Jadassohn, Krehl and Riemann; took courses in musicology under Sandmann at Univ. of Munich in 1906; graduated, 1908, with dissertation Franz Seydelmann als dramatischer Komponist (Leipzig, 1909); then studied with L. Thuille and A. Beer-Walbrunn; conducted at Kiel (1908) and Hamburg (1909–11); since 1911, prof. at Klindworth Cons. in Berlin. Has written Zur Opernfrage. Das Wesen der Oper und ihre Entwicklung in der Gegenwart (Leipzig, 1913).

Calda'ra, Antonio, b. Venice, 1678; d. Vienna, Dec. 28, 1736. Prolific composer of operas and sacred dramas (70), oratorios, masses, and other church-music, chamber-music, etc. He lived in Bologna and Mantua; in 1714 was app. Imp. chamber-composer at Vienna, and from Jan. 1, 1716, was assistant Kapellm. to J. J. Fux.—See Q.-Lex.

Caldicott, Alfred James, b. Worcester, England, Nov. 26, 1842; d. near Gloucester, Oct. 24, 1897. Chorister in Worcester cath., 1851, and articled to the organist, Done, in 1856. He studied at Leipzig Cons. under Moscheles, Hauptmann, etc.; and in 1864 became org. of St. Stephen's church, Worcester, and Corporation organist. Took degree of Mus. Bac., Cantab., 1878; was app. prof. at R. C. M., London, in 1883; from 1885–9 was cond. at the Albert Palace, Battersea; 1890–1, cond. of Huntingdon's travelling opera-company in America; 1892, dir. of R. C. Calega'ri, Antonio, b. Padua, Feb. 17, 1757; d. there July 22, 1828. Dramatic composer, who brought out 3 operas in Venice: Le Sorelle rivali (1784), L'Amor soldato (1786), and Il Matrimonio scoperto (1789); living in Padua, 1800; publ. (Venice, 1801) a curious treatise on composition: Gioco pittagorico musicale, republ. in Paris, where he lived for several years, as L'art de composer la musique sans en connaître les éléments (1802). Returning to Padua, he was organist at the Ch. of San Antonio till his decease. Subsequently, 2 more works were publ.:

Sistema armonico (1829), and a vocal method, Modi generali del canto (1836).—See Q.-Lex.

Calega'ri (or Callegari), Francesco Antonio, b. Padua, before 1700; d. there 1742. He was a Franciscan monk, 1702–24 m. di capp. in the Minorite monastery at Venice, and then in Padua, at the Ch. of San Antonio, until 1728. He wrote a theoretical treatise Ampia dimostrazione degli armoniali musicali tuoni (MS. at Bergamo); also sacred music and chamber-music.—See Q.-Lex.

Calet'ti-Bru'ni. See CAVALLI.

Calkin, John Baptiste, b. London, Mar. 16, 1827; d. there May 15, 1905. Pianist, organist, and composer; pupil of his father, James Calkin; was organist, precentor, and choirmaster at several churches; app. 1899 prof. at Guildhall School of Music. Besides several services, and many anthems, glees, part-songs, and songs, he publ. a string-quartet, a pf.-trio, a sonata f. pf. and 'cello, various pcs. for pf., and organ-music.

Cal'laerts [-lahrts], Joseph, b. Antwerp, Aug. 22, 1838; d. there Mar. 3, 1901. Pupil of Lemmens in Brussels Cons. Org. (1851–6) of the Jesuit college, later of the cathedral at Antwerp, and organ-teacher at the Music-School from 1876.—Works: Comic opera Le Retour imprévu (Antwerp, 1889); a prize-symphony (1879) and a prize pf.-trio (1882); organ- and pf.-music; cantatas, masses, litanies, etc.

Callcott, John Wall, b. Kensington, Nov. 20, 1766; d. Bristol, May 15, 1821. He received some instruction from Henry Whitney, organist of Kensington Parish Church, but was chiefly self-taught in early youth; he attracted the attention of Dr. Arnold, Dr. Cooke, and John Sale, who aided him. From 1783–5 he was deputy organist to Reinhold, at St. George the Martyr; in the latter year he won 3 prize-medals for a catch, O beauteous fair; a canon, Blessed is he; and a glee, Dull repining sons of care; he joined the orchestra of the Acad. of Antient Music, and also took the degree of Mus. Bac. (Oxon.). He was a co-founder of the Glee Club (1787); joint-org. of St. Paul's, Covent Garden (1788); in 1789 he won all the prizes offered by the 'Catch Club,' and became organist of the Asylum for Female Orphans (1792–1802). He studied instrumental comp. w. Haydn in 1790; in 1800 he was made Mus. Doc. (Oxon.). App. lecturer on music at the Royal Institute, succeeding Dr. Crotch (1806), his mind gave way under the strain incident to this position and overwork on his pet scheme, a dictionary of music, which was never completed. His Grammar of Music (1805) was a standard elementary text-book. Many of his numerous glees, catches, and canons are real works of art. A memoir of C. was prefixed to a 'Collection of Glees, Canons, and Catches,' by W. Horsley (London, 1824; 2 vols.).—See Q.-Lex.

Callcott, William Hutchins, son of preceding; b. Kensington, 1807; d. London, Aug. 4, 1882. Organist, pianist, and composer; he wrote a good deal of popular vocal music (songs, anthems), and pf.-music (chiefly instructive pcs. and arrangements).

Callinet. See DAUBLAINE ET CIE.

Calvé, Emma [real name Emma Roquer], dramatic soprano; b. Décazeville, near Aveyron, southern France, in 1863 [or 1866?]. Educated from 10–15 in the Convent of the Sacred Heart, Montpellier; studied 1880–2 in Paris with Puget, the former stage-tenor. Début as Marguerite at the Monnaie in Brussels, Sept. 29, 1882; sang there for one year, studied for another year under Mme. Marchesi, and created the rôle of Bianca in Aben Hamet at the Th.-Italien, Paris, Dec. 16, 1884; soon after, she entered the Opéra-Comique, and remained there till 1887. Her successes received a temporary check at La Scala, Milan, in Jan., 1887, when she was hissed as Ophelia, but she scored a triumph there, after 18 months' study with Laborde, in the same rôle. She created Santuzza in Cavalleria Rusticana (1890); was eng. at the Opéra-Comique for two years (1891–3); sang 1892 at Covent Garden with great applause; eng. by Abbey and Grau for M. O. H. in 1893; New York début Nov. 29, 1893, as Santuzza; played Carmen on Dec. 20, and made an indescribable sensation. Sang at the Opéra-Comique, season of 1894–5; then toured Europe (Madrid, Monte Carlo, Petrograd); created La Navarraise in Oct., 1895; began second American tour on Nov. 20, 1895; created Sapho, Nov. 29, 1897, at Paris. Since then, her career has been an uninterrupted succession of triumphs. In 1903–4, eng. in Paris at the Opéra Municipal du Théâtre de la Gaîté; in 1908 at the Manh. Op. House, N. Y., where her Carmen aroused the same enthusiasm as before; after 1910 she practically retired from the stage, confining herself to concert-appearances. The sensational success of her Carmen is undoubtedly responsible for the fact that she has been heard in only a limited répertoire. Besides the rôles mentioned, she has also sung the chief soprano rôles in Mefistofele, Messaline, l'Hérodiade, Les Pêcheurs de Perles.—Cf. A. Wisner, E. C.; Her Artistic Life, etc. (N. Y., 1902).

Calvi'sius, Sethus (real name Seth Kall'witz), son of a poor peasant at Gorschleben, Thuringia; b. Feb. 21, 1556; d. Leipzig, Nov. 24, 1615. By his own efforts (at first as a street-singer for alms, afterwards as a teacher) he supported himself while studying in the Gymnasia of Frankenhausen and Magdeburg, and the Universities at Helmstadt and Leipzig. In Leipzig he became (1581) mus. director at the Paulinerkirche; from 1582–92 he was cantor at Schulpforta, then cantor of the Thomasschule at Leipzig, and (1594) musical dir. at the Thomaskirche and Nicolaikirche there. C. was not only a musician, but a scholar of high and varied attainments. His writings are valuable sources; Melopoeia seu melodiae condendae ratio (1582); Compendium musicae practicae pro incipientibus (1594; 3d ed. as Musicae artis praecepta nova et facillima, 1612); Exercitationes musicae duae (1600); Exercitatio musicae tertia (1611).—Publ. compositions: Auserlesene teutsche Lieder (1603); Biciniorum libri duo (1612); the 150th Psalm (12 parts); a coll., Harmoniae cantionum ecclesiasticarum a M. Luthero et aliis viris piis Germaniae compositarum 4 voc. (1596); and a 4-p. arr. of C. Becker's psalm-tunes (1602, '16, '18, '21). MS. motets, hymns, etc., in the Thomasschule Library, Leipzig.—Cf. K. Benndorf, S. C. als Musiktheoretiker, in 'Vschr. f. M.-W.', 1894.—See Q.-Lex.

Calvocores'si, Michel D., b. (of Greek parents) Marseilles, Oct. 2, 1877. Having received an excellent classical ed. at the 'Lycée Janson-de-Sailly' at Paris, he took up the study of music with X. Leroux; since 1905 prof. at the 'École des Hautes Études Sociales' and correspondent for numerous Fr. and foreign journals ('Mercure de France,' 'Guide Musical,' 'Musical Times' [London], 'New Mus. Rev.' [N. Y.], 'Die Musik' [Berlin], 'Muzika' [Moscow], etc.); an excellent lecturer, he has been indefatigable in his propaganda of Russian music in France and England, for which he was made officer of the order of St. Anna in 1908; together with L. Vallas, ed. of 'Revue française de Musique'; a capable translator of songs and operas (into Fr., Engl. and Ger.). Has published La Musique russe (1907);biographies of Liszt (1907), Moussorgsky (1908), Glinka (1913), Schumann (1913); tr. Rimsky-Korsakov's Treatise on Orchestration into French (1914).

Cambert [kăhn-bär'], Robert, (the first French opera-composer, preceding Lully), b. Paris c. 1628; d. London, 1677. Pupil of Chambonnières; org. at St.-Honoré; intendant of music (1666) to the queen-dowager Anne of Austria. His first venture on the lyric stage was La Pastorale, written by Perrin and successfully produced at the Château d'Issy in 1659); it was followed by Ariane, ou le Mariage de Bacchus (rehearsed in 1661), and Adonis (1662; not perf.; MS. lost). Perrin having received, in 1669, letters patent for establishing the 'Académie royale de musique' (the national operatic theatre, now the Grand Opéra), brought out, in collaboration with C., the first real opera, Pomone (1671); a second, Les Peines et les plaisirs de l'amour, was written, but never produced, Lully having meantime (1672) had the patent transferred to himself. [These last 2 operas have been publ. in 'Chefs-d'œuvre classiques de l'opéra français' (Leipzig, Breitkopf & Härtel).] C.'s disappointment drove him to London; he became a bandmaster, and died as Master of the Music to Charles II. —Cf. A. Pougin, Les vrais créateurs de l'opéra français, Perrin et C. (Paris, 1881).

Cambi'ni, Giovanni Giuseppe, b. Leghorn, Feb. 13, 1746; d. Bicêtre, Dec. 29, 1825. A pupil of Padre Martini, and a most prolific composer of mediocre instrumental works, writing over 60 symphonies within a few years. He lived chiefly in Paris as a ballet-composer and conductor; he died in the almshouse.—Other comps.: 144 string-quartets; ballets, operas, oratorios, etc.

Camet'ti, Alberto, b. Rome, May 5, 1871. Pupil of the Cons. della Accademia di S. Cecilia; m. de ch. at St. Louis' in Rome; member of the commission app. by Pope Pius X to investigate the condition of church music. Has publ. many sacred and secular comps., but is more important as a writer. Princ. works: Cenni storici di G. P. da Palestrina (Milan, 1895); Il testamento di Jacobello Pierluigi (1903); Cristina di Suezia, l'arte musicale e gli spettacoli in Roma (1911); Documenti inediti su Luigi Rossi (Leipzig, 1912); Chi era l'Ippolita del cardinale di Montalto? (1913); several valuable essays in 'Rivista Musicale' (Bellini a Roma [1900], Donizetti a Roma [1904–7], Mozart a Roma [1907], Frescobaldi a Roma [1908], etc.).

Camidge, John, b. circa 1735; d. York, Engl., Apr. 25, 1803. He was organist at York cath. for 47 years.—Publ. Six Easy Lessons for the Harpsichord; other music f. harpsich.; church-music, glees, songs.

Camidge, Matthew, b. York, 1758; d. there Oct. 23, 1844; son of John, Sr., whom he succeeded at York cath. (1803–44). Publ. Cathedral Music; 24 Original Psalm- and Hymn-tunes; sonatas and marches f. pf.; a Method of Instruction in Music by Questions and Answers, etc.

Campagnoli [-păh-ñoh'lē], Bartolommeo, b. Cento, Sept. 10, 1751; d. Neustrelitz, Nov. 6, 1827. Renowned violinist, pupil of Dal-l'Ocha and Guastarobba at Modena, later of Nardini at Florence. After several years of concert-giving in Italy, he became leader (1776) of the Abbot of Freising's orch.; was later mus. dir. to the Duke of Kurland in Dresden (whence he made successful concert-tours); 1797–1818, he was leader at Leipzig; finally he became court Kapellm. at Neustrelitz.—Works: Chamber-music; concerti f. flute; 1 violin-concerto; 7 celebrated Divertissements (studies f. vln.); 41 Caprices pour l'alta-viola (op. 22); a Méthode de la mécanique progressive du jeu du violon (Leipzig, 1824); etc.—See Q.-Lex.

Campa'na, Fabio, b. Leghorn, Jan. 14, 1819; d. London, Feb. 2, 1882. From the beginning of his career he lived in London, popular as a singing-teacher and composer. Besides hundreds of songs w. pf.-acc., he wrote the operas Caterina di Guisa (Leghorn, 1838), Giulio d'Este (Venice, 1841), Vannina d'Ornano (Florence, 1842), Luisa di Francia (Rome, 1844), Almina (London, H. M.'s Th., 1860), and Esmeralda, o Nostra Donna di Parigi (Petrograd, 1869).

Campana'ri, Giuseppe, eminent dramatic baritone; b. Venice, 1859. While playing in the orch. at La Scala in Milan he began to study singing; came to the U. S. in 1884, and was a 'cellist in the Boston Symph. Orch. until 1893; début as leading bar. of G. Hinrichs' Op. Co. in New York, 1893; in his first season he sang Tonio in Pagliacci in the first Amer. perf., and was recognized at once as an artist of unusual ability; from 1895-8 member of M. O. H.; since then he has devoted himself chiefly to concert-work and teaching; now (1916) living in New York.

Campana'ri, Leandro, violinist; b. Rovigo, Italy, Oct. 20, 1857; st. Milan Cons., graduating 1877. European tours, 2 years; in America 1881, début at Boston (Symph. Orch.). very successful. Settled in Boston, and organized Campanari String-quartet; 1883, mus. dir. of choir, Jesuit Ch., and 1st prof. of violin in N. E. Cons.; 1887–90 in Europe; 1890 first prof. of vln. and head of orchl. dept. in Cincinnati Cons.; 1897–1905, director and conductor of the grand orchestral concerts in La Scala Th., Milan, and on tours; 1906 for a short time cond. at Manh. Op. House, and (during Scheel's illness) of the Phila. Symph. Orch.; since 1907 living in San Francisco as a successful teacher of of vl. and singing.—Works: Text-books for violin; numerous songs.

Campani'ni, Cleofonte, eminent cond. and op. manager; b. Parma, Italy, Sept. 1, 1860. Pupil at Cons. of Parma (1870–8) of Ferrarini (vl.); later of Bazzini at Milan; début as cond. with Carmen at Parma, in 1883; the same year he became asst.-cond. to Vianesi during the first season of opera at the new M. O. H.; was brought over specially in 1887 to conduct the first Amer. perf. of Otello at the M. O. H.; then was first cond. at various Italian theatres, La Scala (Milan, 1903–6), San Carlo (Naples, 1 year); made extensive tours of Spain, Portugal and South America; cond. Cov. Garden Th. from 1900–12. A larger field opened to him in 1906, when Hammerstein engaged him for the new Manhattan Opera House in New York. C. was not only the principal cond., but also the artistic director. His success was such that at the end of the first season the new company had become a dangerous rival of the older M. O. H. Differences with Hammerstein led C. to resign in 1909. In the following year he was engaged as princ. cond. of the newly formed Chicago Opera Co., where he had practically autocratic power; in 1913 he was app. general director, which post he still holds. Among operatic conductors he occupies a place in the first rank; in all styles of music he seems to be equally at home. Since 1906 he has introduced the following novelties into the U. S.: Massenet's Thaïs, Jongleur de Notre-Dame, Grisélidis, Sapho, Hérodiade, Cendrillon, Cléopâtre, Marie Madeleine; Debussy's Pelléas et Mélisande; Charpentier's Louise; Wolf-Ferrari's I Giojelli della Madonna, Il Segreto di Suzanna; Parelli's I dispettosi Amanti; Goldmark's The Cricket on the Hearth; Erlanger's Noël, Aphrodite; Kienzl's Ranz des Vaches; Franchetti's Cristoforo Colombo; Gnecchi's Cassandra; Nougès' Quo Vadis?; Herbert's Natoma; Blockx's Princesse d'Auberge; Saint-Saëns' Déjanire; Buchhalter's A Lover's Knot; Gunsbourg's Le vieil Aigle.

Campani'ni, Italo, brilliant operatic tenor; b. Parma, June 29, 1846; d. Bigatto, n. Parma, Nov. 22, 1896. St. 3 years in G. Griffini's School of Music. Début 1869, at Odessa, in Trovatore; sang for some years without marked success, then studied with Lamperti, and reappeared at Florence, 1871, in Lohengrin, with great applause. London début 1872, as Gennaro in Lucrezia Borgia. Tours in U. S. A., 1873 and 1879–80 (with Nilsson), 1892 (w. Patti), and 1894. Since 1883, lived principally in New York. Sang leading rôles in Lohengrin, Mefistofele, Faust, Carmen, Don Juan, Lucia di Lammermoor, Huguenots, Ruy Blas, etc.

Campbell-Tipton, Louis, composer; b. Chicago, Nov. 21, 1877. Studied with various teachers in Chicago and Boston; pupil of Royal Cons. at Leipzig (1896–9), studying theory and pf. with Carl Reinecke, Gustav Schreck, and Weidenbach; returned to Chicago and was instr. of theory at the Chicago Mus. Coll. from 1900–5; since then living as private teacher in Paris. His work is highly colored, vigorous, with a strong leaning towards the dramatic. Has written so far chiefly for pf. (Sonata Heroic, Sea Lyrics, The Four Seasons, suite, serenade, etc.), Suite pastorale f. pf. and vln.; also a number of very effective songs. Has several larger works in MS.

Cam'penhout, François van, b. Brussels, Feb. 5, 1779; d. there Apr. 24, 1848. Beginning as violinist in the Th. de la Monnaie, he studied singing under Plantade, and became a fine stage-tenor, appearing in Belgium, Holland, and France. Retired 1827, and wrote 6 operas, several other stage-pieces, 9 cantatas w. orch., choruses, masses, Te Deums, songs, etc. He is, however, chiefly remembered as the composer of La Brabançonne, which was written during the revolution of 1830, and has since become the national air of Belgium.

Campion [kăhn-p'yŏhn'], François, theorbist (1703-19) at Grand Opéra, Paris.—Publ. Nouvelles découvertes sur la Guitare, etc. (1705); Traité d'accompagnement pour le théorbe (1770); Traité de composition, etc. (1716); and a supplement (Additions) to the last two (1739).—See Q.-Lex.

Campion, Thomas, English physician; also poet, composer, and dramatist; d. London, Feb., 1619.—Publ. Two Books of Ayres, etc. (1610), followed by 2 more (1612); Ayres for the Masque of Flowers (1613); Songs of Mourning [for Prince Henry] (1613); A New Way of Making Foure Parts in Counterpoint (1618; also in Playford's 'Introd. to the Skill of Musick,' 1655).—See Q.-Lex.

Campio'ni, Carlo Antonio, b. Leghorn, c. 1720; d. Florence, 1793, as m. di capp. to the Tuscan court. Comp. church-music (a fine Te Deum); also publ. 7 vols. of violin-duets, with basso cont.—See Q.-Lex.

Campore'se, Violante, soprano stage-singer; b. Rome, 1785; d. there 1839. Before 1814, engaged for Napoleon's private music; stage-début in London, 1817 (Haymarket). Engaged until 1818, and again from 1821–3; sang at the Antient and Philh. Concerts, 1824–5. Retired 1829.

Cam'pos, João Ribeiro de Almeida de, b. Vizen, Portugal, c. 1770; d. (?); m. di capp., also professor and examiner for church-singing, at Lamego in 1800. Publ. Elementos de musica (1786) and Elem. de cantochão [Plain-Song] (1800, and many later editions).

Campra [kăhn'-], André, French opera-comp.; b. Aix (Provence), Dec. 4, 1660; d. Versailles, July 29, 1744. A pupil of Guillaume Poitevin, he was app. maître de mus. at Toulon cathedral at the age of 20; in 1681, m. de chap. at Arles, and from 1683–94 at Toulouse cath. Going thence to Paris, he was at first m. de chap. at the Jesuit collegiate ch., and shortly after at Notre-Dame, an appointment held until the successful production of two operas (under his brother Joseph's name) induced him to embrace a secular career. In 1722 he was made cond. of the Royal Orch. His operas were performed after Lully until eclipsed by the genius of Rameau.—Operas, l'Europe galante (1697); Le Carnaval de Venise (1699); Hésione (1700); Aréthuse, ou la vengeance de l'amour (1701); Tancrède (1702); Les Muses (1703); Iphigénie en Tauride (1704); Télémaque (1704); Alcine (1705); Le Triomphe de l'amour (1705); Hippodamie (1708); Les Fêtes vénitiennes (1710); Idoménée (1712); Les Amours de Mars et Vénus (1712); Télèphe (1713); Camille (1717); Les Âges, ballet-opéra (1718); Achille et Déidamie (1735); and several divertissements, etc., for the Versailles court. Also 3 books of cantatas (1708, et seq.), and 5 books of motets (1706, 1710, 1713, etc.).—Cf. A. Pougin, A. C. (Paris, 1861), and L. de la Laurencie, Notes sur la jeunesse d'A. C. (in 'Sbd. Int. M.-G.', X, 2, 1909); id., A. C., musicista profano (in 'L'Année Musicale,' 1913).—See Q.-Lex.

Camps y Soler, Oscar, Spanish pianist, comp. and writer; b. Alexandria, Egypt, Nov. 21, 1837. Pupil of Döhler at Florence, and played in public as early as 1850; st. w. Mercadante, at Naples; made concert-tours in Europe, and settled in Madrid.—Works: Grand cantata; songs; pf.-pcs.—Also a Teoría musical ilustrada, a Método de Solfeo, Estudios filosóficos sobre la música, and a Span. transl. of Berlioz's Instrumentation.

Candeille [kăhn-dā'ē], [Simons-Candeille,] Amélie-Julie, daughter of Pierre-Joseph C.; b. Paris, July 31, 1767; d. there Feb. 4, 1834; dramatic soprano, actress, and composer. Début 1782 as Iphigénie in Gluck's Iphigénie en Aulide; from 1783–96, actress in the Th.-Français. In 1798 she married Simons, a Brussels carriage-builder, was separated from him in 1802, lived in Paris as a music-teacher till 1821, when she married the painter Piérié [d. 1833]. She wrote the libretto and music of the very succ. operetta La belle fermière (1792), in which she played the leading part, singing to her own accomp. on piano and harp; and produced an unsuccessful opera, Ida, l'orphéline de Berlin (1807). Publ. also 3 pf.-trios, 4 pf.-sonatas, a sonata f. 2 pfs., pf.-fantasias, some romances, and the songs from the Belle fermière.

Candeille, Pierre-Joseph, opera-comp.; b. Estaires (dept. du Nord), Dec. 8, 1744; d. Chantilly, Apr. 24, 1827. He wrote some 20 operas, divertissements, etc., the best being Castor et Pollux (1791); most of them were never produced.

Cange [kähn'zh], Charles-Dufresne, sieur du, b. Amiens, Dec. 18, 1610; d. Paris, Oct. 23, 1688. A learned lawyer, interested in musical research. Publ. Glossarium ad scriptores mediæ et infimæ latinitatis (1678, 3 vols.; 1733–36, in 6 vols.; 1840–50, in 7 vols.), explaining the musical instrs. and terminology of the middle ages.

Can'nabich, Christian, b. Mannheim, 1731; d. Frankfort, Feb. 22, 1798. An accomplished violinist (pupil of Jommelli) and composer, he excelled particularly as conductor of the Electoral orch. at Mannheim, a post to which he was app. in 1775, having been leader since 1765. C. rendered this orch. famous by the (then unique) perfection to which he carried the dynamic nuances, more especially the crescendo and decrescendo. His compositions (operas, ballets, about 100 symphonies, 3 violin-concertos, much chamber-music) were popular. Riemann publ. a symph. in B♭ and an overture in C in 'Dkm. der Tonkunst in Bayern', viii, 2; also a str.-quartet, op. 5, no. 2, in 'Mannheimer Kammermusik.' His father, Matthias C., was a flutist in the Electoral orch.—See Q.-Lex.

Can'nabich, Karl, violinist and comp., son of Christian; b. Mannheim, 1769; d. Munich, May 1, 1806 (whither the orchestra had followed the Elector's court in 1778); Kapellm., from 1800, of the orch.—See Q.-Lex.

Capellen, Georg, b. Salzuflen, Lippe, Apr. 1, 1869. St. philosophy and law at Tübingen, Göttingen and Berlin; notable writer on theory of music. Has publ. Die musikalische Akustik als Grundlage der Harmonik u. Melodik (Leipzig, 1903); Die Freiheit oder Unfreiheit der Töne u. Intervalle als Kriterium der Stimmführung (ib., 1904; with appendix containing analyses of Grieg's works in proof of his theory); Die Abhängigkeitsverhältnisse in der Musik (ib., 1904; presenting a solution of the problems of figuration, sequence and inversion); Die Zukunft der Musiktheorie (ib., 1905; against dualism); Ein neuer exotischer Musikstil (Stuttgart, 1906); Fortschrittliche Harmonie- u. Melodielehre (Leipzig, 1908); Die Unmöglichkeit u. Überflüssigkeit der dualistischen Molltheorie Riemanns (in 'Neue Ztschr. f. Musik,' 1901, Nos. 44-50).

Capel'li. Pen-name of Johann David von Apell.

Capoc'ci [-pŏht'chē], Filippo, b. Rome, May 11, 1840; d. there July 25, 1911. Reputed to have been the finest Italian organist of his time. From 1875, organist of San Giovanni in Laterano.—Wrote an oratorio, S. Atanasio (1863); six sonatas, and other works f. organ.

Capoc'ci, Gaetano, b. Rome, Oct. 16, 1811; d. there Jan. 11, 1898. Organ-pupil of Sante Pascoli; st. later under Fioravanti and Cianciarelli (comp.), and in 1833 brought out his first oratorio, Battista. He became org. at the Ch. of S. Maria di Vallicella, and (1839) at S. M. Maggiore; elected, in 1855, maestro direttore of the 'Cappella Pia' at the Lateran, succeeding Meluzzi. He wrote and publ. a vast amount of sacred music (another oratorio, Assalonne; masses, motets, litanies, offertories, psalms, introits, etc.), and formed numerous distinguished pupils.

Capoul [-pool'], Joseph-Amédée-Victor, brilliant stage-tenor; b. Toulouse, Feb. 27, 1839; pupil (1859) of Révial and Mocker at Paris Cons. Début at Opéra-Com., Aug. 26, 1861, as Daniel in Adam's Le Chalet; eng. at the Opéra-Com. 1861–72, and has since then sung in London (with Nilsson), New York, and other cities; 1892, prof. of operatic singing in National Conservatory, New York; since 1897 stage-manager at the Grand-Opéra. Has created the chief tenor parts in Les Absents (Poise), La Colombe (Gounod), La Grand'tante (Massenet), Le Premier Jour de bonheur (Auber), Vert-Vert (Offenbach), Paul et Virginie (Massé), Les Amants de Vérone (d'Ivry), etc.

Caraccioli [-răh-tchoh'lē], Luigi, comp. and excellent singing-teacher; b. Adria (Bari), Aug. 10, 1849; d. London, July 22, 1887. Pupil of Cesi, Conti and Mercadante in Naples (1863–9). Called to Dublin (1878) as Dir. of the School of Singing in the R. Irish Academy of Music; removed, in 1881, to London. Wrote a successful opera, Maso il Montanaro (Bari, 1874), and innumerable songs, many being very popular (Danza delle memorie, Un sogno fu!, Rime popolare, etc.).

Cara'fa de Colobra'no, Michele Enrico, b. Naples, Nov. 17, 1787; d. Paris, July 26, 1872. A son of Prince Colobrano, Duke of Alvito, he began mus. study early and while very young wrote an opera, 2 cantatas, etc. Though he became an officer in the army of Naples, and fought in Napoleon's Russian campaign, he devoted his leisure to music, and after Waterloo adopted it as a profession. Up to 1819 he produced 9 operas on Italian stages; from 1821–33, about 20 in Paris, most successful among which were Le Solitaire (1822), Masaniello (1827, his best), and La Violette (1828); also a few others in Italy and Vienna. Settled in Paris, 1827; member of the Academy (Lesueur's successor), 1837; in 1840, prof. of comp. at Cons. Besides operas, he wrote ballets, cantatas, and considerable good church-music.

Cardon, Louis, eminent harpist; b. Paris, 1747; d. Russia, 1805, whither he had fled at the outbreak of the Revolution. His Art de jouer de la harpe (Paris, 1785) is one of the earliest methods for that instrument; wrote 2 symphonies concertantes for harp and string-orch., op. 18; several sonatas, trios and duos for harp; numerous arrangements.

Caresti'ni, Giovanni (stage-name Cusanino, from the family of Cusani in Milan, his protectors); b. Monte Filatrano (Ancona), circa 1705; d. there 1760. Soprano singer (musico) at Rome, Prague, Mantua, London (1733–5, under Handel, in rivalry with Farinelli), then at Venice, Berlin and Petrograd (1755–8).

Carey, Henry, b. 1685 (?); d. London, Oct. 4, 1743. A reputed natural son of George Savile, Marquis of Halifax. His teachers were Linnert, Roseingrave, and Geminiani, but he was chiefly self-taught. He lived as a music-teacher, and writer for the theatres. His claim to authorship of God Save the King is disputed, despite the attempts of his son, Gerome Savile Carey (1743–1807), to substantiate it (v. articles by Cummings, 'Mus. Times,' 1878). His song Sally in Our Alley still enjoys popularity. His musical dramas (ballad-operas), 9 in number, had considerable success; in 1737 he publ. 100 ballads, The Musical Century.—See Q.-Lex.

Caris'simi, Giacomo, b. Marino, near Rome, about 1604; d. Rome, Jan. 12, 1674. From 1624–7 he was organist at the Cath. of Tivoli; from 1628 to his death m. di capp. in the Ch. of S. Apollinare, Rome. A prolific and original church-composer, he broke with the Palestrina tradition, devoting himself to perfecting the monodic style, as is evidenced by his highly developed recitative and more pleasing and varied instrumental accompaniments. His music MSS. were dispersed at the sale of the library of the German College, and many are lost; but few printed works are still extant. There were publ. the 5 oratorios Jephte (his masterpiece), Judicium Salomonis, Jonas, Jonah, Balthazar; 2 colls. of motets a 2, 3 and 4 (Rome, 1664, '67); masses a 5 and 9 (Cologne, 1663, '67); Arie da camera (1667); and detached pieces in several collections. The finest coll. of his works is that made by Dr. Aldrich at Christ-Church College, Oxford. He also wrote a treatise, publ. only in German: Ars cantandi, etc. (Augsburg; 2d ed. 1692; 3d, 1696). F. Chrysander publ. 4 oratorios (Jephte, Judicium Salomonis, Balthazar, Jonas) in vol. ii of 'Dkm. der Tonkunst.'—Cf. M. Brenet, Les Oratorios de C. ('Riv. Mus. Ital.', 1897); A. Schering, Geschichte des Oratoriums (Leipzig, 1911).

Carl, William Crane, concert-organist; b. Bloomfield, N. J., March 2, 1865. Pupil for several years in New York of S. P. Warren (org. and theory) and Mme. Mad. Schiller (pf.); also, for nearly 2 years, of Alex. Guilmant, Paris (org. and theory). From 1882–90, organist of First Presbyterian Ch., Newark, N. J.; since 1892, organist and choirmaster of the Old First Presby. Church, New York; 1893–1900, conductor of N. Y. 'Baton Club' (mixed ch. of 75 voices; merged after 1898 in the 'Gamut Club'); founder and dir. of 'Guilmant Organ Sch.', N. Y.; Mus. Doc., N. Y. Univ., 1911; also 'Officier de l'instruction publique' since 1909. As a concert-organist with an enormous repertory, C. has played in most large cities between New York and San Francisco, both with the large orchestras and in recital, and has inaugurated many organs, etc. Founder, and member of Council, of Amer. Guild of Organists. Has publ. Masterpieces for the Organ; 30 Preludes for the Organ; Novelties for the Organ (2 books); Master Studies for the Organ.

Carmichael, Mary Grant, contemporary British pianist and composer; b. Birkenhead. Pupil of O. Beringer, W. Bache, and F. Hartvigson (pf.), and E. Prout (comp.). She is an accomplished accompanist.—Works: Operetta, The Snow Queen; a Suite for pf. 4 hands, and minor pf.-pieces; many songs, including The Stream, a song-cycle.—Transl. H. Ehrlich's Celebrated Pianists of the Past and Present (London, 1894).

Carnicer [-nē-thār'], Ramón, b. Tarrega, Catalonia, Oct. 24, 1789; d. Madrid, March 17, 1855. From 1818–20, conductor of the Italian Opera, Barcelona; 1828–30, of the Royal Opera, Madrid; 1830–54, professor of comp. at Madrid Cons. One of the creators of Spanish national opera (the zarzuela), he composed 9 operas, wrote much church-music, many symphonies, Spanish songs, etc.; also Dulce Patria, the national hymn of Chile.

Ca'ro [kah-], Paul, b. Breslau, Oct. 25, 1859. Pupil of J. Schäffer and B. Scholz; 1880–85, at Vienna Cons., of Door and Bruckner; lives in Breslau.—Works: Op. 2, sonata in F; op. 6, string-quartet in B♭ m.; op. 8, pf.-trio in E; op. 19, string-quartet in D m.; op. 20, ditto, in F♯ m.; numerous pf.-pieces and songs. In MS. he has 5 symphs.; a sinfonietta; several symph. poems; 2 serenades for string-orch.; 2 sacred cantatas; a Requiem; a pf.-quintet; about 30 string-quartets; an overture to Faust. An opera, Hero und Leander, was produced at Breslau (1912); another opera, Die Hochzeit von Ulfosti, has not yet been produced.

Caron [kah-rŏhn'], Philippe, famous (Netherland?) contrapuntist of the 15th century, a pupil of Binchois and Dufay; his only extant works are a few masses in the Papal Chapel, and a MS. of 3-part chansons in the Paris Library.

Caron, Mme. Rose (née Meuniez), dramatic soprano; b. Monerville, France, Nov. 17, 1857; entered the Paris Cons. (already married) in 1880, leaving in 1882 to take lessons with Marie Sasse in Brussels, where her début was made as Alice in Robert (1884). Here she created Brunehilde in Sigurd (1884), and Eva in Les Maîtres-Chanteurs (1885); then sang 2 years at the Opéra, Paris, and again in Brussels 1888–90, creating Laurence (in Jocelyn), Richilde, and Salammbô (1890); in 1890 she returned to the Paris Grand Opéra, where she created Sieglinde (1893) and Desdemona (1894) in the first performances of Walküre and Otello in France; in 1898 she created Fidelio at the Op.-Comique (first perf. in France!). Other principal rôles are Rachel, Norma, Marguerite, Valentine (Huguenots), Elsa, Elisabeth. Since 1900 she has appeared almost exclusively on the concert-stage; in 1902 app. prof. of singing at the Cons.—Cf. H. de Curzon, Croquis d'artistes (Paris, 1898).

Carpa'ni, Giuseppe Antonio, writer and poet; b. Villalbese (Como), Jan. 28, 1752; d. Vienna, Jan. 22, 1825, as court poet; for a short time censor and theatre-dir. at Venice, but lived the greater part of his life in Vienna. Chief works: Le Haydine, ovvero lettere sulla vita e le opere del celebre maestro Giuseppe Haydn (Milan, 1812); and Le Rossiniane, ossia lettere musico-teatrali (Padua, 1824). He was the author of several opera-libretti; transl. others from the French and German.

Carpenter, John Alden, composer; b. Park Ridge, Ill., Feb. 28, 1876. Studied at Univ. Sch., Chicago; at Harvard Univ. he pursued besides the regular acad. course (A. B. 1897) the full course in music under Prof. John K. Paine; pupil of Edward Elgar (Rome, 1906) and of Bernhard Ziehn (Chicago, 1908–12). In his compositions he follows the modern impressionistic tendencies. Has written Adventures in a Perambulator, orch. suite (1914); Gitanjali, song-cycle (1913); concertino f. pf. and orch. (1915); sonata f. vln. and pf. (1912); numerous songs.

Carpentras [-păhn-trah'], (Il Carpentrasso in Italian; his real name was Eliazar Genet); b. Carpentras (Vaucluse), c. 1475; d. Avignon (?), c. 1532. In 1515, leading singer in, and soon after m. di capp. of, the Pontifical chapel; in 1521 he was sent to Avignon on negotiations connected with the Holy See. 4 volumes of his works (Masses, 1532; Lamentations, 1532; Hymns, 1533; Magnificats) were printed at Avignon, by Jean de Chaunay, in round notes and without ligatures. A few motets are printed in Petrucci's 'Motetti della Corona' (vol. i, 1514, and vol. iii, 1519).

Carr, Frånk Osmond, English composer; b. Yorkshire, Apr. 23, 1858. Mus. Bac., Oxon., 1882; Mus. Doc., 1891.—Works: several farces, burlesques, and comic operas: Joan of Arc (1891), Blue-eyed Susan (London, 1892), In Town ('92). Morocco Bound ('93), Go Bang ('94), His Excellency ('94, book by Gilbert), Biarritz ('96), Lord Tom Noddy ('96), The Clergyman's Daughter (Birmingham, '96; London, Gaiety Th., later, as My Girl), The Rose of the Riviera ('99), Roger de Coverley (1907), etc.

Carré, Albert, nephew of the librettist Michel Carré; b. June 22, 1852, at Strassburg, where he st. in the Lycée. At first an actor in the Vaudeville Th., Paris, he assumed the direction of the theatre at Nancy in 1884; in 1885, that of the Vaudeville (with Deslandes till 1890); and 1894–98, of the V. and the Gymnase together (with Porel). Also, 1885–90, director of the Cercle at Aix-les-Bains. From 1898–1912 he was director of the Opéra-Comique, succeeding Léon Carvalho. During his incumbency the performances rose to high a degree of excellence, and as C. produced several works which, according to French standards, belong to grand opera, the Op.-Com. for a time became a serious rival of the Grand Opéra. Carré has written a number of light stage-pieces, set to music by various composers.

Carre'ño, Teresa, b. Caracas, Venezuela, Dec. 22, 1853. A pupil of L. M. Gottschalk, afterwards of Georges Mathias in Paris, she has become one of the foremost pianists. She played in public 1865–6; her reputation was well established in 1875, when she made a tour of the United States. For several years she resided in London, and then travelled 1889–90 throughout Germany, everywhere winning applause and greatly enhancing an already brilliant reputation. In 1893 she received the title of Court Pianist to the King of Saxony. She has played in all the chief European and American towns. In 1872 she married the violinist Émile Sauret; was divorced after a few years and married the baritone Giov. Tagliapietra; again div., and married to Eugen d'Albert (1892–5); after being div. from him, she married a younger brother of Tagliapietra. A daughter, Teresita, has appeared as a pianist. Mme. C.'s playing is characterized by brilliancy, dash and masculine vigor; she has publ. a str.-quartet in B, and a number of brilliant concert-pcs. for pf.

Carro'dus, John Tiplady, eminent violinist; b. Keighley (Yorks.), Jan. 20, 1836; d. Hampstead, London, July 13 (not 12), 1895. A pupil of Molique at London and Stuttgart, he returned to England in 1853; had played since then in the best English orchestras, succeeding Sainton (1869) as leader of the Covent Garden Orch.; later he was also leader at the Philharmonic, and at the chief provincial festivals; made his début as soloist in 1863. He was an excellent teacher, and publ. several pieces for solo violin.—Cf. A. Carrodus, J. T. C., Violinist: a Life-Story (London, 1897).

Carse, A. von Ahn, b. Newcastle-on-Tyne, May 10, 1878. Pupil of F. Corder at R. A. M., London; teacher of comp. there since 1902. Wrote 2 symphs. (C m., G m.); prelude to Manfred; a concert-overture (D); 2 symph. poems, The Death of Tintagiles and In a Balcony; a cantata, The Lay of the Brown Rosary; chamber-music; pf.-pieces; songs.

Boise, Berlin (1895–7); organ with Arthur Egidi, Berlin (1897–8), and Homer N. Bartlett (1898–9). Mus. dir. of Thatcher School, Nordhoff, Cal. (1892–4); org. and choirm. American Ch., Berlin (1897–8); lecturer on music, and organist and choirm., at Princeton Univ. (1899–1901); now in N. Y. City as arranger, cond. and comp. Received A. B., Princeton (1888); A. M., Columbia Univ. (1899); admitted to the Bar in 1891.—Works: The Blonde Donna, or The Fiesta of Santa Barbara, opéra comique; a string-quartet in G; Symphonic Suite in D m. for orch.; many songs; anthems (The Lord's Prayer, Out of the Depths, etc.); male quartets.

Carter, Thomas, b. Ireland, 1734; d. London, Oct. 12, 1804. Organist of St. Werburgh's Ch., Dublin, 1751–69; studied in Italy (1770–1); from 1771–2, cond. of theatre in Bengal; settled in London, 1773, as composer to theatres. He composed incidental music to several plays; also a concerto for bassoon and pf.; 6 pf.-sonatas; songs; Lessons for the Guitar.—See Q.-Lex.

Cartier [kăhr-t'yā'], Jean-Baptiste, b. Avignon, May 28, 1765; d. Paris, 1841. Pupil of Viotti; violinist at Grand Opéra (1791–1821); 1804, member of the Imperial Orch.; 1815, of the Royal Orch.; pensioned 1830.—Works: 2 operas; sonatas, variations, duets, and études for vln.; and L'art du violon (Paris, 1798, 1801), containing selections from eminent French, Italian and German masters of the 17th and 18th centuries.

Carul'li, Ferdinando, b. Naples, Feb. 10, 1770; d. Paris, February, 1841. Brilliant self-taught guitar-player, whose original method is the basis of modern guitar-playing. He lived in Paris, from 1808, as an eminently successful and popular concert-giver and teacher. His compositions are nearly 400 in number (concertos, quartets, trios, and duos; fantasias, variations, and solos of all descriptions). He wrote a Method, and a treatise, L'harmonie appliquée à la guitare (Paris, 1825).

Carul'li, Gustavo, son of preceding; b. Leghorn, June 20, 1800; d. Boulogne, April, 1877. Vocal composer, and excellent singing-teacher; wrote a Méthode de Chant, many vocal exercises, songs with pf., trios (his best works), etc.; also an opera, I tre mariti (Milan, 1825).

Caru'so, Enrico, the greatest dramatic tenor of the present time, and probably of this generation, was born at Naples, Feb. 25, 1873. Reared amid humble surroundings as a member of a large family, he began serious vocal training in 1891 under Guglielmo Vergine (voice-placement), studying for 3 years and finishing under Vincenzo Lombardi. His début was made in April, 1895, at Caserta (near Naples), in the rôle of Faust; but he was hardly known till his appearance in 1896 at the Fondo Th., Naples, in La Traviata, successfully seconded by La Favorita and Gioconda. His position became assured with his engagement at the Teatro Lirico in Milan, where he was chosen to create the rôle of Loris in Giordano's Fedora (1898); he also sang at the Carlo Felice in Genoa, for two winter seasons at Petrograd, and during five summer seasons (1899–1903) at Buenos Aires. For the Carnival of 1901 he appeared at La Scala, Milan, in La Bohème, Mefistofele, and L'Elisir d'amore, and created the Florindo in Mascagni's Le Maschere. In the autumn of 1901 he sang at Treviso and Bologna in La Tosca; for the Carnival of 1902 again at Milan (T. Lirico), creating the leading tenor rôles in Cilèa's Adriana Lecouvreur and (at La Scala) Franchetti's Germania. In 1902 he likewise sang with Melba at Monte Carlo (where he was engaged for four seasons), and made his London début on May 14 at Covent Garden as the Duke in Rigoletto with unmistakable success so far as the discriminating public was concerned, though the critics reserved their enthusiasm. During the winter season of 1903–4 he sang at Rome and Lisbon; later (Nov. 23, 1903) making his American début at the Metr. Opera House, New York, in Rigoletto; here he has appeared regularly ever since. At Monte Carlo (March, 1904) he took the part of Pinkerton in the creation of Puccini's Madama Butterfly. From his summer season of 1903 at Covent Garden dates his immense popularity in London, where he has not appeared in opera since 1907, the management being unwilling to accede to his terms; he has, however, sung at private entertainments and in concert, where his wonderful gifts are displayed to great advantage. In 1907 he included Leipzig, Hamburg and Berlin in a German tournée which became an ovation; in the autumn of 1907 he was enthusiastically greeted at the Court Opera in Vienna. When he sang there again in 1913 he received 15,000 crowns ($3,000) for each performance. Since then he has received similar fees everywhere, and when he appears now in Germany or Austria the seats are practically sold at auction. It is said that the royalties paid to him for his records are some $75,000 a year. It would be idle, even if it were possible, to attempt a complete list of the theatres in which he has sung. His tone has the ring of the true dramatic tenor, combined with a sweetness and power unrivalled to-day on the stage. In perfection of breath-control and equalization throughout its compass his voice is an admirable exemplar of the so-called Old Italian Method of bel canto; in range of expression, from the rude passion of the Italian veristic opera to the tranquil beauty of lyric episodes, he stands alone on the stage. He himself says that he has no 'favorite rôles'—that all should have equal importance for the conscientious singer. His repertory of over 50 parts sung on the stage includes the chief rôles of modern French and Italian opera.—Cf. J. H.Wagenmann, E. C. und das Problem der Stimmbildung (Altenburg, 1911).

Caruso, Luigi, b. Naples, Sept. 25, 1754; d. Perugia, 1822. M. di capp. at Perugia cathedral, and a remarkably prolific dramatic comp. (69 operas); he also wrote 5 oratorios and much other church-music.—See Q.-Lex.

Carvalho [-vähl'yŭ], (really Carvaille), Léon, distinguished opera-manager; b. 1825 in a French colony; d. Paris, Dec. 29, 1897. Himself a good singer, he met Mlle. Miolan, the celebrated soprano, at the Opéra-Comique, and married her in 1853. From 1872–4, manager of the Théâtre du Vaudeville; for 1 year, stage-manager at the Grand Opéra; from 1875, Director of the Opéra-Comique, succeeding du Locle. After the terrible fire of 1887, in which 131 persons perished, he was arrested and sentenced to 6 months' imprisonment, and a fine of 200 fr.; but was acquitted on appeal, and finally reinstated in 1891. He not only produced acknowledged masterworks, but encouraged many young artists by bringing out new operas.

Carvalho-Miolan [kähr-vähl'yŭ-m'yohläh̃n'], Caroline-Marie-Félix, b. Marseilles, Dec. 31, 1837; d. near Dieppe, July 10, 1895. Famous dramatic soprano. Entered Paris Cons. at 12; st. under Duprez; took first prize after 4 years. Trial début 1849, in Lucia (Act I), at the Opéra-Comique, where she was engaged 1849–56. In 1853 married Léon C.—Favorite par excellence in Op.-Comique, Th.-Lyr., and (1868) Grand Opéra. Leading rôles: Juliette, Marguerite, Mireille, Dinorah, Ophélie,Valentine, Pamina, Cherubino, Zerlina.—Cf. H. de Curzon, Croquis d'artistes (Paris, 1898).

Cary, Annie Louise, distinguished contralto singer in opera and concert; b. Wayne (Kennebec County, Me.), Oct. 22, 1842. Studied in Boston and Milan; début at Copenhagen; studied under Mme. Viardot-Garcia at Baden-Baden; engaged at Hamburg (1868), later at Stockholm. Has sung since then in theatres at Brussels, London, New York (1870), Petrograd (1875). Married C. M. Raymond in 1882 at Cincinnati, and retired at the height of her powers. She appeared in concert or oratorio in all leading cities of America.

Casals [käh-sähls'], Pablo, famous violoncellist; b. Vendrell, Catalonia, Spain, Dec. 30, 1876; until 11, pupil of his father; from 12–15, at Barcelona, of José Garcia ('cello) and J. Rodereda (comp.). From 1894–6 he studied in Madrid under the queen's patronage with Tomás Bretón (comp.) and assisted in the chamber-music class of Jesús de Monasterio, whom he succeeded in 1895. His first public appearance was in 1889; his professional début at the Concerts Lamoureux, Paris, 1898. Prof. of 'cello at Barcelona Cons., 1897; solo'cellist at Paris Grand Opéra, 1895–8. On concert-tours, in 1895–9, throughout western Europe; to the United States, 1901–2 and 1903–4; again, with almost sensational success, in 1914–16 (as soloist and in ensemble); to South America, 1903, 1904. It is safe to say that at present he has no superior, and but few equals. In 1914 he married the American singer, Susan Metcalf. —Comps.: La Vision de Fray Martin, symph. poem for orch., org., soli and ch.; another symph. poem for orch. (1902); a Miserere; orchl. pieces; pieces for pf. and 'cello, and for pf. and vln.; etc.

Casamora'ta, Luigi Fernando, b. Würzburg, May 15, 1807; d. Florence, Sept. 24, 1881. Student of law and music at Florence; co-editor of the Florentine 'Gazz. Mus.' from the start (1842). Failing as a comp. of ballet and opera, he devoted himself to vocal ch.-music and instrumental composition. He wrote Origine, storia e ordinamento del R. Istituto musicale fiorentino, of which Inst. he was a promoter and co-founder; also many critical and historical essays. His comps. embrace numerous vocal and instrl. works; he published (1876) a Manuale d'armonia.

Casella, Alfredo, b. Turin, July 25, 1883. Began to play the pf. at the age of four, and received his entire instruction from his mother until 1896, when he entered the Paris Cons.; studied there pf. with L. Diémer (first prize, 1899) and comp. with G. Fauré. Has made successful concert-tours (as soloist and in chamber-music) of France, Spain, Portugal, Italy, Germany, the Netherlands, Russia, etc.; has also appeared as visiting cond. with several of the larger European orchestras (Colonne, Lamoureux, Concert-Gebouw, etc.); in 1912 cond. of the 'Concerts Populaires' at the Trocadéro in Paris; prof. of advanced pf.-classes at the Paris Cons. from 1912–15; in 1915 he succeeded Sgambati as prof. of pf. at the Liceo musicale di S. Cecilia in Rome. Gen. sec. of 'Société musicale indépendente'; chevalier of the Crown of Roumania.—Has written for orch. Italia, a rhapsody; Prologue pour une tragédie; 2 symphs.; Notte di maggio, with ch.; considerable chamber-music (string-quartet, sonata for vcl. and pf., etc.); l'Adieu à la vie, a cycle of 4 Hindu lyrics from the Gitanjali of S. Tagore, and other songs; pieces for pf. (9 Pièces, sonatina, Pupazetti, etc.). Has orchestrated Balakirev's Islamey.—Le Couvent sur l'eau, a choreographic comedy, is MS.

Casella, Pietro, the oldest composer of madrigals, a personal friend of Dante, died before 1300.—Cf. C. Perinello, C. Appunti sulla vita, etc. (Trieste, 1904).

Casel'la, Pietro, b. Pieve (Umbria), 1769; d. Naples, Dec. 12, 1843. Wrote numerous operas for Naples and Rome; was maestro at several Naples churches and (1817–43) prof. at the R. Cons., Naples. His numerous masses, vespers, psalms, motets, etc., are said to lack originality.

Caslo'va, Marie, concert violinist; b. Ozark Mts., Mo., March 29, 1895. Studied with Geo. Heerich, St. Louis; then with Ottokar Ševčik (Prague), and Carl Flesch and Arrigo Serato (Berlin); début with Blüthner Orch., Berlin (Oct. 1, 1913); American début with N. Y. Symph. Orch. (Nov. 14, 1913); toured with Gadski; has appeared since with several of the larger symphony orchs. and in many recitals in the U. S. and Canada.

Cassiodo'rus, Magnus Aurelius, b. circa 470 at Syllaceum (Lucania). Of his work, De artibus ac disciplinis liberalium litterarum, the section treating of music, 'Institutiones musicae, is printed in Gerbert's 'Scriptores,' vol. i.

Castel', Louis-Bertrand, Jesuit; b. Montpellier, Nov. 11, 1688; d. Paris, Jan. 11, 1757. Struck by Newton's observation on the correspondence, in proportionate breadth, of the 7 prismatic rays with the string-lengths required for the scale re, mi, fa, sol, la, si, do, he attempted the construction of a 'Clavecin oculaire,' to produce color-harmonies for the eye as the ordinary harpsichord produces tone-harmonies for the ear. These expensive experiments led to no practical result. His 'Clavecin' is explained in an essay, Nouvelles expériences d'optique et d'acoustique (1735; Engl. transl., London, 1757; Germ. transl., Hamburg, 1739). His other treatises are of no special interest.

Castel'li, Ignaz Franz, b. Vienna, March 6, 1781; d. there Feb. 5, 1862. He was 'Court Theatre-Poet' at the Kärntnerthortheater; founder, and (1829–40) editor, of the 'Allgem. musikal. Anzeiger.' He wrote the libretto of Weigl's Schweizerfamilie, and other popular opera-books, and translated many foreign operas for the German stage. His Memoirs were publ. in 1861 in 4 vols.

Castelmary [-mah'rē], (stage-name of [comte] Armand de Castan), dramatic baritone; b. Toulouse, Aug. 16, 1834; d. New York, Feb. 8, 1897, on the stage of the Metropolitan Opera House, just after the 1st act of Martha. Début at Gr. Opéra; Paris, in 1864; he remained there till 1870; then went over to Italian opera, in which he had much success, particularly at Drury Lane, London, 1873, as Mephistopheles in Faust, Covent Garden, London, and New York. His repertory of bass and baritone rôles was immense.

Castil-Blaze. See Blaze, F.-H.-J.

Castillon [kăh-stē-yŏhn'], Alexis de (vicomte de Saint-Victor), b. Chartres, Dec. 13, 1838; d. Paris, March 5, 1873. St. with V. Massé, but, becoming dissatisfied, went to César Franck, under whose guidance he wrote a pf.-quintet. This he designated as op. 1, and destroyed all previous compositions. He is one of the first French composers of the last century to cultivate absolute music; one of the original founders of the 'Société nationale de musique' (1871).—Works: Psalm 84 for soli, ch. and orch.; overt., Torquato Tasso; 2 suites for orch.; Esquisses symphoniques; a concerto for pf. and orch.; a str.-quartet; a pf.-quartet; 2 pf.-trios; a sonata for pf. and vl.; pf.-pcs.; songs.

Castrucci [-strŏŏ'tchē], Pietro, violinist; b. Rome, 1689; d. Dublin, Feb. 29, 1752. A pupil of Corelli, he came to London (1715) as leader of Handel's opera-orch. He was a fine player on the 'violetta marina,' a stringed instrument invented by himself, and resembling the 'viol d'amore' in tone. In Orlando, Handel wrote an air accomp. on 2 'violette marine' 'per gli Signori Castrucci'—Pietro, and Prospero, his brother.—Publ. vln.-concertos, and 2 books of vln.-sonatas.—Prospero C., who died in London, 1760, and was a violinist in the Italian Opera-orch., publ. 6 soli for vln. and bass.

Catalani [-lah'nē], Alfredo, gifted dram. comp.; b. Lucca, July 19, 1854; d. Milan, Aug. 7, 1893. Taught by his father, a fine musician, and by F. Magi; wrote (1868) a Mass for 4-parts and orch., by which he gained admission without examination to the Paris Cons. Returned to Italy 1873; studied in Milan Cons. 2 years; then devoted himself to dramatic composition; he was the successor of Ponchielli as prof. of comp. in Milan Cons. (1886). —Works: Operas: La Falce (1 act, Milan, 1875); L'Elda (Turin, '80); Dejanice (Milan, '83); Ero e Leandro (Milan, 1885); Edmea (Milan, '86); Loreley [a new version of L'Elda] (Turin, '90); La Wally (La Scala, Milan, '92; N. Y. 1909); of his operas Dejanice, Loreley, and La Wally, met with brilliant success.— Also various orch.-pieces (e. g., Silenzio e contemplazione); symph. poem Ero e Leandro; chamber-music (also vocal), and pf.-pcs.

Catala'ni, Angelica, b. Sinigaglia, May 10, 1780; d. Paris, June 12, 1849. Renowned soprano stage-singer of fine, commanding presence; endowed with a voice of wide range (to g^3) and wonderful flexibility, she excelled in bravura singing. Taught at the convent of S. Lucia di Gubbio (Rome), she made her début in 1795 at the Fenice Th., Venice, passing to La Pergola, Florence (1799), and La Scala, Milan (1801). Engaged in 1801 at the Ital. Op., Lisbon, she married M. Valabrègue, an attaché of the French embassy; proceeded to Paris, where she gave only concert-performances, and (1806) to London (début King's Th., Dec. 15), where brilliant engagements brought in £16,700 within a year. After a sojourn in Great Britain of 7 years, she returned to Paris (1814), and undertook the management of the Théâtre Italien, without much success; so that she gave it up in 1817, travelled for 10 years, singing for the last time at Berlin in 1827, and at the York Festival in 1828. She retired to her country-seat near Florence.

Catel', Charles-Simon, b. l'Aigle, Orne, June 10, 1773; d. Paris, Nov. 29, 1830. Pupil of Gossec and Gobert at the Paris École R. du Chant (later merged in the Cons.), where he was app. (1787) accompanist and 'professeur adjoint'; in 1790, accomp. at the Opéra, and asst.-cond. (to Gossec) of the band of the Garde Nationale. 1795, on the establishment of the Conservatoire, he was app. prof. of harmony, and commissioned to write a Traité d'Harmonie (publ. 1802, and the standard at the Cons. for 20 years). With Gossec, Méhul, and Cherubini, he was made inspector of the Cons., resigning 1814. Member of the Acad., 1815.—Works: 11 operas (Sémiramis, 1802; Les Bayadères, 1810; Les Aubergistes de qualité, 1812; etc.); national festival cantatas, chamber-music; none of special originality. Cf. J. Carlez, C. Étude biographique et critique (Caen, 1895); F. Hellouin and J. Picard, Un Musicien oublié: C. (Paris, 1910).—See Q.-Lex.

Catela'ni, Angelo, b. Guastalla, March 30, 1811; d. S. Martino di Mugnano, Sept. 5, 1866. Pupil of Asioli (pf.) and M. Fusco (harm.); entered Naples Cons. in 1831 (Zingarelli), also private pupil of Donizetti and Crescentini. 1834, cond. of Messina opera; 1837, town maestro at Correggio; 1838, m. di capp. at cathedral and court of Modena; 1859, asst.-librarian of the Este Library. Having composed 3 operas (2 not produced; 1 succ.), he now devoted himself to musical history; wrote Notizie su padre Aaron e su Nicola Vicentino ('Gazz. Mus. di Milano,' 1851); Epistolario di autori celebri in musica (1852–4); Bibliografia di due stampe ignote di Ottaviano Petrucci da Fossombrone [discovered by Gaspari at Bologna] (1858); Della vita e delle opere di Orazio Vecchi (1858); ditto di Claudio Merulo da Correggio (1860); and Delle opere di Aless. Stradella, etc. (1866).

Catoir [kăh-twahr'], Georg Lvovitch, b. Moscow, April 27, 1861. While pursuing courses in mathematics at the Univ. of Berlin, he studied music with Klindworth (pianoforte) and Rüfer (comp.); then pupil of Liadov in Petrograd; now (1916) living in Moscow.—Works: Op. 5, Russalka, cantata; op. 7, symphony in C m.; op. 13, Mtsÿri, symph. poem; op. 14, string-trio; op. 16, string-quintet; op. 17, 4 preludes for pf.; op. 18, 3 poems of Tiutshev for female voices with pf.; op. 19, 3 songs for one voice; op. 20, Poème, a sonata for vln. and pf.; op. 21, concerto for pf. and orch.; op. 22, songs; op. 23, string-quartet.

Catru'fo, Giuseppe, dramatic comp.; b. Naples, April 19, 1771; d. London, Aug. 19, 1851. Pupil of the Cons. della Pietà de' Turchini. Officer in the French army till 1804; then settled in Geneva, where he wrote and produced 4 operas; went to Paris (1810), produced 10 more operas, and to London (1835). He publ. a Méthode de Vocalisation, solfeggî, church-music; cantatas; pf.-pieces; songs.

Caurroy [kŏh-rwăh'], François-Eustache du, sieur de St.-Frémin; b. Gerberoy, near Beauvais, February, 1549; d. Paris, Aug. 7, 1609. Singer, cond., and from 1599 superintendent 'de la musique du roi.' His works, mostly for church, were much valued by contemporaries.

Cavaillé-Col [kăh-văh-yā'-], Aristide, celebrated organ-builder; b. Montpellier, Feb. 2, 1811; d. Paris, Oct. 13, 1899. His father, Dom. Hyacinthe C.-C. (1771–1862), was also an organ-builder. Aristide went to Paris in 1833; built the organ at St.-Denis, and thereafter many famous organs in Paris (St.-Sulpice, Madeleine, etc.), the French provinces, Belgium, Holland, and elsewhere. He invented the system of separate wind-chests with different pressures for the low, medium, and high tones; also the 'flûtes octaviantes.' —Writings: Études expérimentales sur les tuyaux d'orgue (Report for the Académie des Sciences, 1849); De l'orgue et de son architecture ('Revue générale de l'architecture des Travaux Publics,' 1856), and Projet d'Orgue monumental pour la Basilique de Saint-Pierre de Rome (1875).—Cf. A. Peschard, Notice biogr. sur A. C.-C. et les orgues électriques (Paris, 1899).

Cavalieri [-văh-l'yā'rē], Emilio del, a Roman nobleman; b. circa 1550; d. Rome, March 11, 1602. He was 'Inspector-General of Art and Artists' to the Tuscan court at Florence, where he was one of the 'inventors' and most zealous promoters of the (then) new 'stilo rappresentativo'—i. e., the homophonic style, melody with accompanying harmonies. His chief work, La Rappresentazione di anima e di corpo (Rome, 1600), is regarded as the first oratorio; in his Il Satiro (1590), Disperazione di Filene (1590), and Giuoco della cieca (1595), are the germs of modern opera, despite the crudities of their harmonies and melodic monotony. In the Rappresentazione, too, occurs a 'basso continuato' with thorough-bass figuring; and the melody shows attempts at figuration; the work was published by Aless. Guidotti in 1600, with an explanatory preface. A facsimile edition of the libretto was publ. by D. Alaleona (Rome, 1912), and ditto of the orchl. score in Mantice's 'Collezione di prime fioriture del melodramma italiano' (ib., 1912).—Cf. D. Alaleona, Su E. C., etc. (in 'Nuova Musica,' Florence, 1905); L. Guidiccioni-Nicastro, La rappresentazione di anima e di corpo . . . notizie storiche (Leghorn, 1911).

Cavalie'ri, Katherina, b. Währing, Vienna, 1761; d. Vienna, June 30, 1801. Although she scarcely ever sang outside of Vienna, she has become known to fame from a passage in a letter of Mozart's, calling her 'a singer of whom Germany might well be proud.' For her he wrote the rôle of Constanze (Entführung), and the aria 'Mi tradì' in Don Giovanni at its Vienna production.

Cavalie'ri, Lina, dram. soprano; b. Rome, Dec. 25, 1874. Pupil of Mme. Mariani-Masi at Paris; début at Lisbon, Dec., 1900; then sang several seasons in Naples, Rome, Florence, Palermo, Warsaw, and Petrograd; 1906–7 at M. O. H.; 1908–9 at Manhattan Op. H., N. Y.; 1915–16 with Chicago Op. Co. On July 10, 1913, she was married to the tenor Lucien Muratore. Her voice is of magnificent quality, but the registers are not perfectly equalized; neither is her acting impressive; her success is due chiefly to her personal beauty and a fiery temperament.

Caval'li, Francesco, b. Crema, Feb. 14, 1602; d. Venice, Jan. 14, 1676. His real name was Pier Francesco Caletti-Bruni, his father, Giambatt. Caletti, called Bruni, being maestro at Crema; his protector was a Venetian nobleman, Federigo Cavalli, and, according to the prevailing fashion, he took the latter's name. Trained in Venice, he was a singer at S. Marco as 'Bruni' in 1617, as 'Caletti' in 1628, and in 1640 second organist, as 'Caletti detto Cavalli.' App. first organist in 1665, he became m. di capp. at S. Marco in 1668. A pupil of Monteverde, his chief works were dramatic (41 operas), which show a marked advance, both in breadth of form and power of expression, rhythmic and melodic, over his master. His Giasone (Venice, 1649) was applauded on all the chief stages of Italy; his Serse (Venice, 1654) was the opera chosen for the marriage festivities of Louis XIV in 1660, and his Ercole amante was written for the inauguration of the hall of the Tuileries (1662). C. was also a fine organist, and composed a noble Requiem, and much good church-music.—Cf. L. Galvani, I teatri musicali di Venezia nel secolo XVII (1878); H. Kretzschmar, Die venezianische Oper und die Werke Cavallis u. Cestis (in 'Vschr. f. M.-W.', 1892); E. Wellecz, C. und der Stil der venezianischen Oper von 1640–60 (in Adler's 'Studien zur M.-W.,' 1913).—See Q.-Lex.

Cavan, Marie (stage-name of Mary Edith Cawein), soprano opera-singer; b. New York, Feb. 6, 1889; studied in N. Y. with Rose Marie Heilig, and coached with Miss Harriet Ware; concert-début May 1, 1909, at Hotel Plaza, N. Y.; sang in choir of Trinity Methodist Ch.; in summer of 1910 coached by the baritone Charles Clark, at Paris, in singing German Lieder. An accidental meeting with Andreas Dippel (to whom she sang by request in Munich, and again in Carlsbad) led to an engagement for the Chicago-Phila. Opera Co., 1910–12. Operatic début as Irma in Louise at Chicago, Nov. 9, 1910. Other rôles are Frasquita (Carmen), Myrtale (Thaïs), Iras (Quo Vadis).

Cavos, Catterino, b. Venice, 1776; d. Petrograd, April 28, 1840. A pupil of Fr. Bianchi, he first produced two patriotic cantatas in Venice, and in 1798 went to Petrograd, where the success of his Russian opera Ivan Sussanin (1799) procured his app. as court conductor. He wrote in all 13 Russian operas; 1 in French, and 1 in Italian; besides 6 ballets, and vaudevilles, choruses, etc.

Caylus [kā-lüs'], Anne-Claude-Philippe de Tubières, comte de, b. Paris, Oct. 31, 1692; d. there Sept. 5, 1765. He treated of ancient music in his Recueil d'Antiquités égyptiennes, étrusques, grecques, romaines et gauloises (Paris, 1752 et seq.), also in his dissertation printed in the 'Mémoires de l'Académie d'inscr.', vol. xxi, p. 174.

Cecilia (Saint), a Christian martyr, who died for the faith at Rome, A. D. 230. On the Christian calendar, her feast-day is Nov. 22. She is the patron saint of music, more especially of church-music, and legend ascribes to her the invention of the organ.

Celega [chā-lā'găh], Nicolò, b. Polesella, Apr. 15, 1844; d. Milan, July, 1906. Pupil of Mazzucato at the Milan Cons.; comp. an opera, Marino, il cantore di Venezia (not prod.); a symph. poem performed at the Columbus festivals in 1892; a second symph. poem, Il Cuore di Fingal; songs; instrumental pieces; numerous pf.-transcriptions and fantasias on opera-themes, etc. His works were highly esteemed in Italy.

Celler [sĕh-lā'], Ludovic (pen-name of Louis Leclerq), b. Paris, Feb. 8, 1828. Publ. La semaine sainte au Vatican (1867), Molière-Lully: Le mariage forcé (Le ballet du roi) (1867), Les origines de l'opéra et le 'Ballet de la reine' (1868).

Cellier [sĕl-yā'], Alfred, born of French parents, Hackney, London, Dec. 1, 1844; d. there Dec. 28, 1891. Chorister at St. James' Chapel Royal; pupil of Thos. Helmore; 1866, cond. at Belfast of the Ulster Hall concerts and the Philharmonic. From 1871–5, cond. at the Prince's Th., Manchester; 1877–9 at the London Opéra Comique, and (with Sullivan) of the Promenade Concerts in Covent Garden. He then spent some years in America and Australia, and returned to London in 1887.—Works: The Masque of Pandora (Boston, U. S. A., 1881); the operettas Charity begins at home (1870); The Sultan of Mocha (1876); The Tower of London; Nell Gwynne; Bella Donna; The Foster-Brothers; Dora's Dream; The Spectre Knight (1878); After all (1878); In the sulks (1880); Dorothy (1886); The Carp (1886); Mrs. Jarramie's Genie (1887); and The Mountebanks (London, 1892); also a setting of Gray's Elegy (Leeds Fest., 1883), a symphonic suite, and some popular songs and part-songs.

Cero'ne [chĕh-], Domenico Pietro, b. Bergamo, 1566; d. after 1613. In 1592 he went to Spain, and became a singer in the court choir; in 1608 he joined the royal choir at Naples. Publ. Regole per il canto fermo (Naples, 1609), and El Melopeo y Maestro, tractado de música teórica y práctica (Naples, 1613, pp. 1200; a compendium of early mus. theory).

Cerreto [chär-rā'to], Scipione, composer, lutist, and theorist; b. Naples, 1551; d. there c. 1632. Publ. 2 valuable works: Della prattica musica vocale e strumentale, etc. (Naples, 1601), and Arbore musicale (Naples, 1601); a third, in MS., is Dialogo harmonico (two copies, 1628, 1631).

Certon [sär-tŏhn'], Pierre, a leading contrapuntist of the 16th century, was choirmaster of the Sainte-Chapelle at Paris. His works (masses, motets, psalms, magnificats, and chansons) were printed in the collections of Ballard, Attaignant, Susato, Phalèse, etc., between 1527–60. Cf. M. Brenet, Les Musiciens de la S.-Chapelle (Paris, 1910).—See Q.-Lex.

Cerù [chĕh-roo'], Domenico Agostino, b. Lucca, Aug. 28, 1817; d. (?); an engineer and musical dilettant, he publ. a biography of L. Boccherini (1864); a letter to his friend Andrea Bernadini, contrasting German with Italian music (1870); and the interesting Cenni storici dell'insegnamento della musica in Lucca, etc. (Lucca, 1871).

Červený [chär'-], V. F. [Wenzel Franz], celebrated inventor and improver of brass wind-instrs.; b. Dubeč, Bohemia, 1819; d. Jan. 19, 1896, at Königgrätz. In his 12th year he was a good performer on most brass instrs. Learned his trade with Bauer, a mus.-instr. maker in Prague. Worked, later, in Brünn, Presburg, Vienna, and Pest. Est. himself (1842) at Königgrätz. Invented the following instrs.: Cornon ('44), Contrabass ('45), Phonikon ('48), Baroxiton ('53), Contrafagotto in metal ('56), Althorn obbligato ('59), Turnerhorn, Jägerhorn, army Trombones ('67), Primhorn ('73), and after this last proved successful, the complete Waldhorn quartet (Primhorn, E♭ Alto, Waldhorn in F, Tenor in B♭, Basso I° in F, Basso II° in D♭), which he considered his highest achievement. Then followed the Subcontrabass and the Subcontrafagotto. He also made an entire family of improved Cornets ('Kaiserkornette'), also the 'Triumph' Cornet. His 'roller' cylinder-mechanism is an invention of the highest importance. He improved the Euphonion, the Russian Signal-horns, the Screw-drum, and the church kettledrums. His instrs. have taken first prizes in all exhibitions in Europe and America. His factory employs over 100 workmen. Since 1876 the firm has been 'V. F. Č. & Söhne.'

Cervet'to [chär-], Giacomo (real name Bassevi), distinguished 'cellist; b. Italy, circa 1682; d. London, Jan. 14, 1783, where he had lived since 1728, at first as a player, then manager at Drury Lane.—His son, Giacomo (James), who d. Feb. 5, 1837, was a fine 'cellist and concert-player; publ. soli for vln., and duets and trios f. vln. and 'cello.

Cesi [chā'zē], Beniamino, distinguished pianist; b. Naples, Nov. 6, 1845; d. there Jan. 30, 1907. Pupil of Naples Cons., studying comp. under Mercadante and Pappalardo, and taking private pf.-lessons of Thalberg. App., 1866, pf.-prof. at Naples Cons; 1885–91 at Petrograd Cons.; paralysis of the left hand forced him to give up his pianistic career, and he returned to Italy; for 2 years he was ed. of 'L'Archivio Musicale' (Naples). He gave very successful concerts in Italy, also at Paris, Cairo, Alexandria, etc. Publ. some sixty pf.-pcs. and songs; also a Method f. pf. (Milan, 1895–6–7). An opera, Vittor Pisani, has not been produced; wrote Storia del Pianoforte (1903).

Cesti [chĕh'stē], Marc' Antonio, a Franciscan monk and renowned dramatic comp.; b. Arezzo, Oct. [bapt. 15th], 1618; d. Venice, 1669. Pupil of Carissimi at Rome; in 1646 m. di capp. to Ferd. II de' Medici, at Florence; 1660, tenor singer in the Papal choir; 1666–9, asst.-Kapellm. to the Emperor Leopold I, at Vienna; then returned to Venice. His first opera, Orontea (Venice, 1649), was much applauded; other dramatic ventures were also successful: Cesare amante (Venice, 1651), La Dori (Venice, 1663) [selections publ. in vol. xii of 'Publ. d. Gesellschaft f. Musikforschung'], Il Principe generoso (Vienna, 1665), Il Pomo d'oro (Vienna, 1666; the score is in the Imp. Library at Vienna) [publ. complete in 'Denkm. d. Tonkunst in Österreich,' III, 2 and IV, 2]; Tito (Venice, 1666), Nettuno e Flora festeggianti (Venice, 1666), Semiramide (Vienna, 1667), Le disgrazie d'Amore (Vienna, 1667), Argene (Venice, 1668), Genserico, and Argia (Venice, 1669). Many of his cantatas are preserved in various European libraries; he transferred to the stage the cantata, which had been perfected for the church by his master, Carissimi. He also wrote madrigals, songs, etc.—Cf. H. Kretzschmar, Die venezianische Oper u. die Werke Cavallis und Cestis (in 'Vschr. f. M.-W.', 1892).—See Q.-Lex.

Chabrier [shah-br'yā'], (Alexis-)Emmanuel, b. Ambert, Puy de Dôme, Jan. 18, 1841; d. Paris, Sept. 13, 1894. Studied law in Paris; later harmony, etc., under Semet and Hignard, and pf. under Édouard Wolff. First opérette, l'Étoile (Paris, 1877); then l'Éducation manquée (Paris, 1879); 1881, chorusmaster under Lamoureux. In 1885 was produced La Sulamite (scene for soprano, female ch., and orch.); 1886, Gwendoline, grand opera in 3 acts (Brussels); 1887, the opera Le Roi malgré lui (Paris, Opéra-Com.). He left an unfinished opera, Briséis. He published pf.-music (e.g., the coll. Pièces pittoresques); a chorus, A la Musique; and for orchestra a Marche de fête; a rhapsody, España; Suite pastorale; Joyeuse Marche; Marche française. —Cf. O. Séré, E. Ch., in Mus. français d'aujourd'hui (Paris, 1911); G. Servières, E. Ch. (Paris, 1912).

Chadwick, George Whitfield, b. Lowell, Mass., Nov. 13, 1854. After some years' study of organ, etc., under Eugene Thayer at Boston, in 1876 he took charge of the musical department of Olivet College, Mich. During 1877–8 he studied in the Leipzig Cons. (Reinecke, Jadassohn), and his graduation-piece (overture to Rip van Winkle) was repeated at a Handel and Haydn concert in Boston in 1880. In 1879 he studied composition and organ-playing at Munich under Rheinberger; in 1880 he settled in Boston, becoming organist of the South Congreg. Ch., and teacher of harmony, comp., and instrum. at the N. E. Cons. of Music, of which he was app. Director in 1897, succeeding Faelten. He has received the hon. degree of A. M. from Yale; and for several seasons was conductor of the Worcester Mus. Festival.—C. is one of the leading American composers; a list of his chief works follows: Comic operas The Quiet Lodging (Boston, 1892) and Tabasco (ib., 1894); the lyric opera Judith (Worcester, 1900); music to the morality play Every Woman (1911); 3 symphonies: I, in C (MS.); II, in B♭; III, in F; a sinfonietta in D; 6 overtures: Rip van Winkle, Thalia, Melpomene, The Miller's Daughter, Adonais, Euterpe; 3 symphonic sketches for orch., Jubilee, Noël, and A Vagrom Ballad; Serenade in F; Suite in A; Cleopatra, symph. poem; Aphrodite, symph. fantasy; Suite symphonique; Variations for organ and orch. Chaliapine, Feodor. See SHALIAPIN.

Challier [shăhl-yā'], Ernst, b. Berlin, July 9, 1843, music-publisher there. His monographic catalogues of songs, duets, and trios, etc., are of interest.

Chamberlain, Houston Stewart, b. Portsmouth, Sept. 9, 1855. He received his earliest education at Versailles, and then studied at Cheltenham Coll., Gloucester. Because of ill health he was obliged to abandon his intention of following the military career (his father was a British admiral), and in 1870 he went to Stettin. His association with Prof. Kuntze there filled him with enthusiasm for Germanic culture and civilization, to the study of which he devoted many years. The results of these studies he published in a remarkable work, Die Grundlagen des 19. Jahrhunderts (Munich, 1899–1901; 10th ed. 1914; Engl. tr. by Lord Redesdale, London, 1910). The years 1879–81 he spent in Geneva, studying science at the Univ. (taking his degree with the diss. Recherches sur la sève ascendante) and music with A. Ruthardt. During his residence at Dresden (1885–9) he began his activities as contrib. to various German, French and English journals, writing with equal facility the three languages. From 1889–1908 he lived in Vienna. In the latter year he married R. Wagner's daughter, Eva, and has since lived in Bayreuth. Ch. was one of the most ardent and influential apostles of Wagner's art, a man of deep penetration and keen analytical power. His great Wagner biography is, in fact, rather a profound psychological study than a mere record of events. Besides books dealing with literature and philosophy, Ch. has publ. the following: Das Drama Richard Wagners (Leipzig, 1892; 5th ed. 1913; Fr. transl. 1894; Engl. transl. 1915;—still the best work on that subject); Richard Wagner. Echte Briefe an F. Praeger (Bayreuth, 1894; 2d ed. 1908); Richard Wagner (Munich, 1896; 2d ed. 1911; Engl. tr. 1897; Fr. tr. 1899); Die ersten 20 Jahre der Bayreuther Bühnenfestspiele (Bayreuth, 1896); Parsifalmärchen (Munich, 1900; 2d ed. 1913).

Chambonnières [shăhn-bŏhn-yär′], Jacques Champion (called "Champion de Chamb."), a cembalist of the 17th century (d. circa 1670), first chamber-cembalist to Louis XIV, and the teacher of the elder Couperins, d'Anglebert, Le Bègue, Hardelle, and others. Two books of his clavecin-pcs. were printed (1670). H. Quittard publ. his cplt. works (1911).—Cf. H. Quittard, Ch. (in 'Rev. Int. de Musique' 1898, no. 12).

Chaminade [shăh-mē-năhd′], Cécile-(Louise-Stéphanie), composer and pf.-virtuoso; b. Paris, Aug. 8, 1861, where she resides. A pupil of Lecouppey, Savard, and Marsick; finally (in comp.) of Benj. Godard.—Works: The ballet-symphonie Callirhoë (Marseilles, 1888, v. succ.); the symphonie lyrique Les Amazones (Antwerp, 1888); 2 Suites for orch.; Concertstück f. pf. w. orch.; she has publ. over 60 pf.-pcs., chiefly romantic in style (six Concert-studies, op. 35; Étude symphonique; Valse-Caprice; La Lisonjera; Arabesque, op. 61; Impromptu; Six Airs de ballet), and a great number of songs. Her piano-pcs. and songs enjoyed great popularity for a time.

Champein [shăhn-păn′], Stanislas, b. Marseilles, Nov. 19, 1753; d. Paris, Sept. 19, 1830. He studied under Peccico and Chavet in Paris; at 13 he became m. de musique at the Collegiate Ch. at Pignon, for which he wrote a magnificat, a mass, and psalms; in 1770 he went to Paris, where some sacred works, and 2 operettas, made his name known. Up to 1792 he produced 22 operas, the best of which were La Mélomanie (1781), Les Dettes (1787), and Le nouveau Don Quichotte (1789). From 1793–1804 he filled a government position; yet also wrote 15 operas, none of which was prod. After this he gradually lapsed into neglect and deep poverty, from which he was rescued by friends not two years before his death. Though one of the best-known stage-composers of his time, Champein's works are wholly forgotten. —See Q.-Lex.

Champion, Jacques. See CHAMBONNIÈRES.

Chanot [shăh-noh′], François, b. Mirecourt, 1787; d. Brest, 1823; son of an instrument-maker; became a naval engineer, was retired on half-pay, and during his forced inactivity invented a violin, made on the principle that the vibratory power would be increased by preserving the longitudinal wood-fibres intact as far as possible. Thus his violin had no bouts, but slight incurvations like a guitar; the sound-holes were almost straight, and the belly nearly flat; the strings were attached to the edge of the belly, instead of to a tail-piece. The violin was submitted to the Academy, whose report after testing it put it on an equality with those of Stradivari and Guarneri (!!). His brother, a luthier at Paris, manufactured a number of violins after this model; but gave it up when a few years had demonstrated its unpractical character.

Chantavoine [shăhn-tăh-vwăhn′], Jean, b. Paris, May 17, 1877. St. hist. of music with Friedländer in Berlin in 1898, and again from 1901-2; since 1903 mus. crit. of 'Revue Hebdomadaire'; while retaining this post, he fills a similar position on 'Excelsior' (since 1911); also (since 1911) one of the editors of 'L'Année Musicale'; editor of the series 'Les Maîtres de la Musique' (a collection of biogrs.), to which he himself has contrib. Beethoven (1906) and Liszt (1910; 3d ed. 1913). Has also written Musiciens et Poètes (Paris, 1912; contains an account of Liszt's early lost opera, Don Sanche, the score of which was found by Ch.); publ. first time score and pf.-arr. of Beethoven's 12 minuets for orch. (written 1799, discovered by R. von Perger in 1872).

Chapi y Lorente [chah'pē], Ruperto, b. Villena, Alicante, March 27, 1851; d. Madrid, March 23, 1909. Pupil of the Cons. of Madrid; then on a stipend from the Spanish Academy for further study in Rome (1874); wrote some operas (La hija de Jefte, La hija de Garcilaso, etc.), but discovered that his talent found more suitable expression in the lighter zarzuela; his work is noted for elegance, grace and exquisite orchestration; of one of his last zarzuelas (La Revoltosa) Saint-Saëns remarked, that Bizet would have been proud to sign his name to the score. Ch. wrote 155 zarzuelas and 6 operas.

Chapman, William Rogers, b. Hanover, Mass., Aug. 4, 1855. Chorus-leader and conductor, residing in New York. Founder and cond. of the Apollo (male vcs.) and Rubinstein (female vcs.) Clubs, and since 1903 cond. of the annual Maine Fest. at Bangor and Portland. Has written church-music, choral works, pf.-pcs., songs, etc.

Chappell & Co., London music-publishers, founded in 1812 by Samuel Chappell, J. B. Cramer (the pianist), and F. T. Latour. Cramer retired in 1819, Latour in 1826, and S. Chappell died in 1834, when his son William (1809–1888) became the head of the firm. In 1840 he established the 'Antiquarian Society'; he published A Coll. of National Engl. Airs (2 vols., 1838–9), Dowland's songs, and Popular Music of the Olden Time (2 vols., 1845–9); he left an unfinished History of Music (vol. i, London, 1874). His brothers, Thomas (1819–1902), and Arthur (1834–1904), were respectively the founder and conductor of the Monday and Saturday Popular Concerts.

Chapple, Samuel, b. Crediton (Devon), England, in 1775; d. Ashburton, Oct. 3, 1833; organist and pianist, blind from infancy. Org. at Ashburton 1795–1833.—Publ. 3 pf.-sonatas w. vln.-accomp.; 3 sets of six anthems in score; 12 psalm-tunes; 5 songs and a glee; 6 songs w. pf.; etc.

Chapuis [shăh-püē'], Auguste-Paul-Jean-Baptiste, b. Dampierre-sur-Salon (Haute-Saône), France, April 20, 1862. Pupil of Dubois (harm.), Massenet (cpt. and fugue), and César Franck (org., improv., and comp.) at Paris Cons., taking 1st prize in harmony (1877), 1st prize for org., etc. (1880), and the Rossini prize in 1885. From 1882–7, org. at Notre-Dame-des-Champs; since then at Saint-Roch. Since 1894, prof. of harm. at the Cons.; since 1895, Inspector-General of musical instruction in the Paris Schools.—Works: The 4-act lyric drama Enguerrande (Op.-Com., 1892; fiasco); Les Ancêtres, dram. legend for soli, chorus and orch.; Les jardins d'Armide, dramatic cantata; incid. music to Elen (1894); Tancred, 3-act lyric drama (Op.-Com., 1898?); an oratorio, Les Sept Paroles du Christ; Solemn Mass, for soli, ch. and orch.; several short masses w. org.; motets; Fantaisie for orch.; Sonata for vln. and orch.; a string-quartet; a pf.-trio; Pulchinelli, pf.-suite; a pf.-suite on the oriental scale; pcs. for 'cello and pf., vln. and pf., and pf. solo; 2 fantaisies for horn w. pf.; organ-music; numerous songs; choruses for children's, women's, men's and mixed voices.—Has also published a Traité d'Harmonie théorique et pratique.

Char [kahr], Friedrich Ernst [Fritz], b. Cleve-on-Rhine, May 3, 1865. Pupil of C. Kistler at Sondershausen Cons., and of Wüllner and Neitzel at Cologne (1883-6). Held various posts as operatic cond. (Ulm, Stettin, etc.). He wrote text and music of the very successful 3-act romantic opera Der Schelm von Bergen (Zwickau, 1895). Other works: Cantata Spielmann, for soli, ch. and orch.; Hymne for 8-part ch. with orch.; a pf.-concerto; pf.-pcs. Charpentier [shar-păhn-t'yā'], Gustave, b. Dieuze, Lorraine, June 25, 1860; st. Paris Cons. 1881–7, pupil of Massart (vln.), Pessard (harm.), Massenet (comp.), and took Gr. prix de Rome in 1887 with the cantata Didon. Succeeded Massenet in 1912 as member of the Academy. Always interested in the welfare of the working classes, he founded, in 1900, the society 'L'œuvre de Mimi Pinson,' which he organized during the great war as an auxiliary Red Cross Society.—First work, orch. suite, Impressions d'Italie; then the songs Les fleurs du mal and Quinze poèmes (some of the latter with ch. and orch.); Fausses Impressions, for ch. and orch.; Chant d'Apothéose, do.; Sérénade à Watteau, do.; and the operas Louise (Paris, 1900; N. Y., 1908) and Julien (Opéra-Com., 1913; N. Y., 1914); symphonic drama (or concert-opera) La Vie du Poète (Grand Opéra, 1892); symphonic poem Napoli (1891).—Cf. O. Séré, G. Ch., in Mus. français d'aujourd'hui (2d ed. Paris, 1911).

Charpentier, Marc-Antoine, b. Paris, 1634; d. there Feb. 24, 1704. A student of painting, he went to Italy, where Carissimi's music won him over to the subtler art. He studied with Carissimi, returned to Paris, and was app. m. de chap. to the Dauphin, but lost the post through Lully's influence, which so embittered him against the latter that he totally eschewed his style, although to his own prejudice. He became m. de chap. and music-teacher to Mademoiselle de Guise; then intendant to the Duke of Orleans, then m. de chap. of the Jesuit collegial church and monastery; and finally m. de chap., till his decease, of the Sainte-Chapelle. He composed 16 operas and kindred scenic works for the public stage, besides several 'tragédies spirituelles' for the Jesuits; also masses and motets, pastorales, drinking-songs, etc. Fétis considers that C. was Lully's superior in learning, though of inferior inventive power. His oratorio Le reniement de St.-Pierre was recently revived in Paris with considerable success.—See Q.-Lex.

Chatterton, John Balsir, renowned harpist; b. Norwich, 1805; d. London, Apr. 9, 1871. He was prof. of harp at the R. A. M., and court-harpist to Queen Victoria; publ. original solos for his instr. and transcriptions of popular airs.

Chaumet [shoh-mā′], William, b. Bordeaux, Apr. 26, 1842; d. Gajac, Gironde, Oct., 1903. Took the 'prix Cressent,' and the 'prix Rossini' for composition.—Works: The comic opera Le péché de M. Géronte (1873), dram. poem Idéa (Bordeaux, 1873), com. opera Bathyle (1877), dram. poem Hérode (Paris Cons., 1885), Mamzelle Pioupiou (1889); lyric drama Mauprat (MS.); La petite maison (1903); orch.-pcs., pf.-mus., songs, etc.

Chausson [shoh-sŏhn′], Ernest, b. Paris, Jan. 21, 1855; d. Limay, near Mantes, June 10, 1899. Pupil at the Paris Cons. of Massenet and César Franck; Secretary of the Société Nationale de Musique. Composer of distinguished individuality.—Works: Book and music of the 3-act lyric drama Le roi Arthus (Karlsruhe, 1900); 2-act opera Hélène; symphonic entr'acte-music to Les Caprices de Marianne; symphony in B♭; symphonic poem Viviane; orchl. pieces Un soir de fête, Solitude dans les bois; music to The Tempest (Shakespeare) and the Légende de Ste.-Cécile (Bouchor); a string-quartet; a pf.-concerto; a violin-concerto w. pf. and string-quartet; string-trio in G m.; Poème f. vln. with orch.; Hymne védique f. ch. and orch.; Le poème de l'amour et de la mer, and the tragic Chanson perpétuelle, both f. vocal solo w. orch.; etc. —In his dramatic music he belonged to the neo-French group of d'Indy and others with more or less pronounced Wagnerian affiliations. Cf. O. Séré, E. Ch., in Musiciens français d'aujourd'hui (2d ed. Paris, 1911).

Chauvet [shoh-vā′], Charles-Alexis, b. Marines, June 7, 1837; d. Argentan, Jan. 28, 1871. Pupil (1850–60) at Paris Cons. of Benoist (org.) and Ambr. Thomas (comp.); took first prize in organ-class in 1860. He was organist in some minor churches, and then (1869) at the new Église de la Ste.-Trinité. He was a wonderful improviser, and a highly gifted composer; his publ. works are chiefly organ-music.

Chavanne [shăh-vähn′], Irene von, dramatic alto; b. Graz, Apr. 18, 1868. St. at Vienna Cons. 1882–5 under Joh. Resz; eng. uninterruptedly since 1885 at the Dresden Court Opera; made 'Kammersängerin' in 1894. Her voice is equally remarkable for its beauty, volume and compass.

Chelard [shŭ-lahr′], Hippolyte-André-Jean-Baptiste, b. Paris, Feb. 1, 1789; d. Weimar, Feb. 12, 1861; son of a clarinettist at the Grand Opéra. Pupil of Fétis, then (1803) of Gossec and Dourlen at the Cons., taking the Grand prix de Rome in 1811. He prosecuted his further studies under Baini, Zingarelli, and Paisiello; in 1815 his first opera, La casa a vendere, was brought out at Naples. Returning to Paris, he entered the Opéra-orch. as a violinist, and gave music-lessons; after long waiting (1827), his opera Macbeth (text by Rouget de Lisle) was prod., but was a flat failure. Discouraged, he withdrew to Munich, where Macbeth, rewritten in great part, was so successful as to earn him the app. as court Kapellm. (1828). He went back to Paris in 1829; made a second failure with La table et le logement; opened a music-shop, which was ruined in the revolution of the next year. He now produced 2 more succ. operas, Der Student and Mitternacht, in Munich; conducted the German Opera in London (1832–3), which also failed; and again revisited Munich, where his best opera, Die Hermannsschlacht, appeared in 1835. From 1836–50 he was court Kapellm. at Weimar, bringing out 2 comic operas, Der Scheibentoni (1842) and Der Seekadett (1844). He lived in Paris 1852–4. A posthumous opera, L'Aquila romana, was given at Milan in 1864.

Chelius [kā′-], Oskar von, b. Mannheim, July 28, 1859. Pupil of F. Steinbach there, of Reiss in Kassel, and of Jadassohn in Leipzig; chose the military career; rose to the rank of major-general in 1911; in 1914 (at the outbreak of the war) military attaché of the German Embassy at Petrograd. Wrote the successful operas Haschisch (Dresden, 1897) and Die vernarrte Prinzess (Wiesbaden, 1905); Psalm 121; a requiem f. orch; a sonata f. vl. and pf.; pf.-pcs.; songs; etc.

Chelleri [kel′lĕ-rē], Fortunato (real family name Kel'ler), b. Parma, 1686; d. Kassel, 1757. His teacher was his uncle, F. M. Bassani (m. di capp. at Piacenza cath.). His first opera, Griselda (Piacenza, 1707), was followed by 15 more, written for various Italian stages. He settled in Kassel in 1725, and was app. court Kapellm., remaining there till his death, excepting a short sojourn in Stockholm. He wrote no more operas, but composed oratorios, masses, psalms, and chamber-music; he publ. a vol. of cantatas and arias (London, 1726), and another of sonatas and fugues f. pf. and f. org. (Kassel, 1829).—See Q.-Lex.

Chéri [shā-rē'], Victor (real name Cizos), b. Auxerre, Mar. 14, 1830; comm. suicide Paris, Nov. 11, 1882. Pupil of Paris Cons. (Massart, A. Adam); excellent conductor, in turn at the Variétés, the Châtelet, and the Gymnase.—Works: Comic opera Une Aventure sous la Ligue (Bordeaux, 1857); the music to several ballets and fairy-spectacles; a violin-concerto (MS.); etc.

Cherniavsky [chär-ñähv'skē], the name of three brothers, members of a famous trio, all born at Odessa.—Leo, violinist, b. Aug. 30, 1890, was exhibited as a prodigy while still studying with L. Auer; later he studied at Vienna, and in 1906 finished with Wilhelmj in London.—Jan, pianist, b. June 25, 1892, was taught by his father; began to concertize at the age of seven, and was heard by Mme. Essipov, who then became his teacher; finished with Leschetizky in Vienna.—Michail, 'cellist, b. Nov. 2, 1893, at first studied violin, but at the age of five took up the 'cello with Versbilovitch, finishing under D. Popper.—In 1900 they formed a trio, and for the first three years toured Russia with phenomenal success; 1904 tour of Germany, Holland and France; 1906 Vienna, London and the English provinces; 1908–9 and '11 South Africa; 1912 again London, and then, until 1914, India, New Zealand and Australia; 1916 Canada and the Western States of the U. S., appearing for the first time in New York on Jan. 16, 1917. So far they have toured 28 different countries.

Cherubi'ni [kā-], (Maria) Luigi (Carlo Zenobio Salvatore), b. Florence, Sept. 14, 1760; d. Paris, Mar. 15, 1842. To the age of 9 his father, cembalist at the Pergola Th., instructed him in music; his subsequent teachers were Bart. and Aless. Felici, then Bizarri and Castrucci, and finally he was sent by Duke Leopold II of Tuscany (the future Emperor L. III) to Milan, in 1779, to perfect himself in counterpoint under Sarti. At 13 he had already written a mass, and a stage-intermezzo for a society theatre; at 15 he composed another intermezzo, Il Giuocatore; during his 2 (4?) years with Sarti he confined himself to contrapuntal work and church-music; in 1780, Quinto Fabio (perf. at Alessandria della Paglia) opened the series of his dramatic works; its cool reception spurred him to renewed study, and Armida (Florence, 1782), Adriano in Siria (Leghorn, 1782), Messenzio (Florence, 1782), Quinto Fabio (revised; Rome, 1783), Lo Sposo di tre e marito di nessuna (Venice, 1783), Idalide (Florence, 1784), and Alessandro nelle Indie (Mantua, 1784) received public approbation. Invited to London in the autumn of 1784, he brought out 2 operas, La finta principessa (1785), an opera buffa which had fair success, and Giulio Sabino (1786), which was less fortunate; C. held the position of Composer to the King for one year, and in July, 1786, went to Paris, where he spent a year most agreeably; in 1788 he prod. Ifigenia in Aulide at Turin; and then settled in Paris. His first French opera, Démophon (Grand Opéra, 1788), was a failure, C. finding it impossible to adapt his style of flowing melody to the ill-turned verses of Marmontel, the librettist. Next year Léonard, the Queen's hairdresser, obtained a license to establish Italian opera in a little play-house called the Th. de la foire de St.-Germain; and here C. conducted, until 1792, the best works of Anfossi, Paisiello, and Cimarosa. During this period he developed, inspired by the text of his opera Lodoïska (Th. de Monsieur, 1791), a new dramatic style destined to work a revolution on the French stage; the increased breadth and force of the ensemble-numbers, the novel and rich orchestral combinations, and the generally heightened dramatic effect were imitated or expanded by a host of composers of the French school—Méhul, Berton, Lesueur, Grétry. C.'s next dramas, Eliza, ou le voyage au mont St.-Bernard (1794), and Médée (1797), were weighted by poor libretti. In 1795 C. was app. one of the Inspectors of the new Conservatoire. Composing steadily, he brought out l'Hôtellerie portugaise (1798), La Punition (1799), La Prisonnière (1799; pasticcio, w. Boieldieu), and in 1800, at the Th. Feydeau, Les deux journées (prod. in London, 1801, as The Water-carrier; in Germany as Der Wasserträger), his masterwork in opera. Cherubini had fallen into disfavor with Napoleon, whose opinion in matters musical he had slighted; but after the success of Les deux journées, he was able to produce at the Grand Opéra Anacréon, ou l'amour fugitif (1803), and the ballet Achille à Scyros (1804), neither of which, however, had good fortune. At this juncture C. was invited to write an opera for Vienna—a most welcome diversion, as his financial condition was the reverse of flourishing. Faniska, brought out in 1806 at the Kärnthnerthor Theatre, was an overwhelming success; a Vienna critic who ventured the prophecy that Beethoven's Fidelio would one day be equally (!) esteemed, was laughed at. Returning to Paris after the French occupation of Vienna, he wrote Pimmaglione for the Italian opera at the Tuileries (1808), but did not win the Emperor's favor, and now retired for a time to the château of the Prince of Chimay, where he occupied his leisure with botanizing. The request to write a mass for the church of Chimay turned the current of his thoughts; he composed the celebrated 3-part mass in F, the success of which was so marked, that C. thenceforward devoted more time to sacred than dramatic composition; though he still prod. Le Crescendo (1810), Les Abencérages (Opéra, 1813), Bayard à Mézières (1814), Blanche de Provence, and some minor pieces for the stage. On a visit to London, in 1815, he wrote for the Philharm. Soc. a symphony, an overture, and a Hymn to Spring. In this year he lost his place in the Cons. during the troublous times of the Restoration, but was recompensed by his appointment as superintendent of the Royal Chapel, as Martini's successor. In 1816 he was made prof. of composition at the Cons., and its Director in 1821, retiring in 1841 on account of advanced age.—Cherubini was one of the great modern masters of counterpoint, and his scores, particularly in his admirable sacred music, bear witness on every page to his skill and erudition. As an opera-composer, his main failing was the undue musical prolongation of scenes in which a swifter dramatic action is required. His own catalogue of his works (publ. 1843) includes 15 Italian and 14 French operas (and many vocal numbers occasionally introduced); 1 ballet; 17 cantatas and 'occasional' vocal works w. orch.; many detached airs, romances, nocturnes, duets, etc.; 14 choruses; 4 sets of solfeggî (over 160 numbers); 11 solemn masses, 2 requiems, many detached Kyries, Glorias, Credos, etc.; 1 Credo a 8 w. org.; 1 oratorio (op. 17; Florence, 1777); motets, hymns, graduals, etc., w. orch.; 1 Magnificat, 1 Miserere, 1 Te Deum (each w. orch.); 4 litanies, 2 Lamentations, 20 antiphones; etc.;—1 symphony, 1 overture, 11 marches, 11 dances, etc., f. orch.; 6 string-quartets, 1 string-quintet; 1 sonata f. 2 organs; 6 pf.-sonatas, 1 grand fantasia, 1 minuet, 1 chaconne, and other music f. pf.—Ch.'s Cours de Contrepoint et de Fugue (n. d.) was prepared for publication by his pupil Halévy. It appeared in a Ger. tr. by Stöpel (1830), in Engl. tr. by J. Hamilton (1837) and C. Clarke (1854). Two new Ger. eds. were recently prepared by G. Jensen (1896) and R. Heuberger (1911).

Chevé [shŭ-vā'], Émile-Joseph-Maurice, b. Douarnenez, Finistère, in 1804; d. Paris, Aug. 26, 1864. A physician of great merit, he became a zealous advocate of Galin's method of mus. instruction; married Nanine Paris (d. 1868), and publ. with her a Méthode élémentaire de musique vocale (Paris, 1844), in the preface to which he 'exposes' and attacks the 'defective' methods of the Conservatoire. They also publ. a Méthode élém. d'harmonie (Paris, 1846); and Mme. Chevé wrote a Nouvelle théorie des accords, servant de base à l'harmonie (Paris, 1844). He is the author of a long series of essays and articles by which he vainly sought to draw out the Cons. professors.

Chevillard [shŭ-vē-yahr'], Camille, b. Paris, Oct. 14, 1859. Pf.-pupil of Georges Mathias; took 2d prize at Cons. in 1880. Chiefly self-taught as a composer. From 1886–97, asst.-cond. of the Lamoureux Concerts, when he succeeded L. as conductor-in-chief; since 1907 professor of instr. ensemble classes at the Cons., and since 1913 chef d'orch. at the Grand Opéra. In 1903 he won the 'Prix Chartier' for chamber-music; now (1916) pres. of 'Société française de musique de chambre'; Officier de l'instruction publique; Chev. Légion d'Honneur.—Comps.: A symph. ballade; Le chêne et le roseau, symph. poem; and a symph. fantaisie, for orch.; theme and variations, and an Étude chromatique, for pf.; a pf.-quintet, quartet, trio; sonata for pf. and vln.; a sonata for vcl. and pf.; incidental music to Schuré's La Roussalka; songs with orch., L'Attente and Chemins d'Amour.—Cf. O. Séré, C. Ch., in Musiciens français d'aujourd'hui (2d ed. Paris, 1911).

Chiaromon'te [k'yah-], Francesco, b. Castrogiovanni, Sicily, July 20, 1809; d. Brussels, Oct. 15, 1886. Pupil of Ragusa, of Raimondi at Palermo, and of Donizetti at Naples. At first a tenor stage-singer, he made his composer's début with the opera Fenicia (Naples, 1844); became prof. of singing at the R. Cons.; was imprisoned 1848–50 as a revolutionist, and banished in 1850 during the successful production of a new opera, Caterina di Cleves. He was less succ. at Genoa and Milan, and proceeded (1858) to Paris, where he was app. chorus-master at the Th. Italien. Later he had a similar place in London (Ital. Opera); then (1862) settled in Brussels, and became prof. in the Cons. (1871). He wrote 5 other operas; an oratorio, Hiob (1884); and a good Méthode de Chant.

Chickering & Sons, a celebrated American firm of pf.-makers, establ. at Boston, Mass., in 1823, by Jonas Chickering (b. New Ipswich, N. H., April 5, 1798; d. Boston, Dec. 8, 1853), who served his apprenticeship under John Osborne, at Boston, from 1818. His son and successor, Col. Thomas E. Chickering (b. Boston, Oct. 22, 1824; d. there Feb. 14, 1871), was named Chevalier of the Legion of Honor in addition to taking the first prize for pianofortes at the Paris Exposition of 1867. His sons still carry on the manufactory, which is famous both for quality and quantity of its output.

Chignell, Robert, composer and baritone; b. Romsey, Hants, May 8, 1882. Won a scholarship at the R. C. M., where his teachers were G. Garcia (voice) and Sir C. V. Stanford (comp.); later continued vocal studies with C. W. Clark, whose assistant he was for a time; soloist with the Sheffield Choir on its tour of the world. Has written 2 symph. poems; Sérénade humoresque for orch.; Romanza for vl. and orch.; concerto for vl. and orch.; 2 scenas from Heine's Nordsee for bar. solo w. orch.; an opera, Romeo and Juliet (prelude perf. 1912).

Child, William, b. Bristol, 1606; d. Windsor, March 23, 1697; org. and (1660) chanter of the Chapel Royal, and a member of the King's private band; Mus. Bac. (1631) and Mus. Doc. (1633), Oxon.—Publ. psalms (1639; 2d ed. 1650); services, anthems, Court Ayres (secular vocal music), canons, catches, etc. (see colls. of Arnold, Boyce, Hilton, Playford, and others).—See Q.-Lex.

Chilesot'ti [kē-], Oscare, distinguished musician and mus. historiographer; b. Bassano, Italy, July 12, 1848. Graduate in law of Padua Univ. He is also a good flutist and 'cellist; self-taught in harmony. He lives at Milan, where he writes regularly for the 'Gazzetta Musicale,' and contributes to other periodicals; is especially interested in tablatures and the art of the 15th and 16th centuries, on which subjects he has lectured extensively in Italy.—Works: Biblioteca di Rarità musicali (1883, etc., 9 vols.), containing transcriptions from little known works of the early 17th century, and (vol. iv) Arianna by Benedetto Marcello; I nostri maestri del passato (Milan, 1882), biogr. notes on the greatest Italian musicians, from Palestrina to Bellini; Di G. B. Besardo e del suo Thesaurus harmonicus (Milan, 1886); Sulla lettera critica di B. Marcello contro A. Lotti. . . (Bassano, 1885); Sulla melodia popolare nel secolo XVI (Milan); L'evoluzione nella musica (appunti sulla teoria di H. Spencer) (Turin, 1911). For Lavignac's 'Encyclopédie de la musique' he wrote an elaborate essay on tablatures. He publ. in modern notation Roncalli's Capricci armonici on the Spanish guitar (Milan, 1881); and transl. Schopenhauer's Aphorismen and Die Welt als Wille u. Vorstellung into Italian.

Chipp, Edmund Thomas, leading English organist; b. London, Dec. 25, 1823; d. Nice, Dec. 17, 1886; Mus. Bac. (1859) and Mus. Doc. (1860), Cantab. After holding many positions as organist, he obtained the organ at St. Paul's, Edinburgh, in May, 1866, and that at Ely cathedral in Nov., 1866.—Works: Job, an oratorio; Naomi, a sacred idyll; and numerous church-comps. for voice and for organ.

Chlad'ni [klähd-], Ernst Florens Friedrich, b. Wittenberg, Nov. 30, 1756; d. Breslau, Apr. 3, 1827. At first a student and prof. of law at Wittenberg and Leipzig, he turned to physics, and made highly important researches in the domain of acoustics. He discovered the 'Tonfiguren' (tone-figures; i.e., the regular patterns assumed by dry sand on a glass plate set in vibration by a bow); and inv. the Euphonium (glass-rod harmonica) and Clavicylinder (steel-rod keyboard harmonica.) To introduce his ideas and inventions, he made long journeys and delivered many scientific lectures. His earlier publications, Entdeckungen über die Theorie des Klanges (1787), Über die Longitudinalschwingungen der Saiten und Stäbe, and a series of minor articles in various periodicals, were followed by the important works Die Akustik (1802; French, 1809); Neue Beiträge zur Akustik (1817); Kurze Übersicht der Schall- und Klanglehre (1827).

Chop, Max [pen-name 'Monsieur Charles'], b. Greuszen, Thuringia, May 17, 1862. A law-student turned musician, he has publ. several books of songs and ballades, 2 piano-concertos, a pf.-trio, 2 suites for orch.; lived 1885–8 in Berlin as a writer of musical feuilletons; then, until 1902, in Neu-Ruppin as music critic and editor of the 'Märkische Zeitung'; since 1902 again in Berlin. Always an admirer of Bungert, he has written a sketch of his life, analyses of his music-dramas, and is (since 1911) the editor of 'Der Bund,' the official organ of the Bungert Assoc. Publ. Zeitgenössische Tondichter (2 vols., 1888, 1890, each containing 12 sketches); analyses of Liszt's symphonic poems and Wagner's music-dramas (in Reclam's ed.); a sketch of August Bungert in vol iii of 'Monographien Moderner Musiker' (1903); Vademecum für den Konzertsaal (1904, et seq.); Führer durch d. Musikgeschichte (Berlin, 1912).

Chopin [shōh-păn'], (François-) Frédéric, pianist of distinction and an incomparable composer for piano; was born at Zelazowa Wola [Pol. Jeliasovaya-Volia], a village near Warsaw, on Feb. 22, 1810 [this date is from authoritative documentary evidence], and died at Paris, Oct. 17, 1849. His father, Nicolas C., teacher in the Warsaw gymnasium, was a native of Nancy, France; his mother, Justine (née Kryzanowska), was a Pole. Frédéric was brought up in his father's private school, among sons of the Polish nobility. His musical education was entrusted to the Bohemian pianist Albert Zwyny (pf.), and to the Director of the Warsaw School of Music, Joseph Elsner (harm., etc.). When but 9, he played in public a pf.-concerto by Gyrowetz, and improvisations. His first attempts in composition were dances (Polonaises, Mazurkas, and Waltzes); but he publ. (1825) as op. 1 a Rondo, and as op. 2 a Fantasie w. orch. While a youth, he appeared at irregular intervals as a pianist in several German towns—Berlin, Danzig, Dresden, Leipzig, and Prague. In 1829, already a composer of eminent individuality (his 2 pf.-concertos, several Mazurkas, Nocturnes, Rondos, etc., were then written), and a finished player, he set out for London, via Vienna, Munich, and Paris. His concert at Vienna, on Sept. 11, elicited the following criticism in the Leipzig 'Allg. Musikzeitung': "From the outset, Chopin took a place in the front rank of masters. The perfect delicacy of his touch, his indescribable mechanical dexterity, the melancholy tints in his style of shading, and the rare clearness of his delivery, are, in him, qualities which bear the stamp of genius. He must be regarded as one of the most remarkable meteors blazing on the musical horizon." His first concert in Paris was given at Pleyel's house, before an invited audience of musicians, in 1831. His reception was so cordial that he gave up the idea of going to London, and made Paris his home for life. Despite Kalkbrenner's finding fault with his fingering, and despite the dictum of Field (of all men!) that C.'s talent was 'of a sick-chamber order,' Chopin made a deep and lasting impression, not merely on gay Parisian society, of which he soon became the declared favorite, but on men like Liszt, Berlioz, Meyerbeer, Bellini, Adolphe Nourrit, Balzac, and Heine, to whose intimacy he was admitted as a cherished and equal companion. From the beginning he taught the piano; his instruction was eagerly sought, chiefly by members of the French and Polish aristocracy; von Lenz (see below) gives a charming glimpse of Chopin the teacher. He also gave yearly concerts to the musical élite, and played frequently in certain salons; but had an unconquerable aversion to miscellaneous concert-giving. His compositions took precedence of all others in the pianistic world. Schumann, in 1831, greeted his op. 2 (the Variations on 'Là ci darem la mano,' from Don Giovanni) with 'Hats off, gentlemen! A genius!' and wrote 8 years later, reviewing some of C.'s Preludes (op. 28), Mazurkas (op. 33), and Waltzes (op. 34): 'Er ist und bleibt der kühnste und stolzeste Dichtergeist der Zeit' [He is indeed the boldest and proudest poetic spirit of the time]. ('Neue Zeitschrift für Musik,' 1839; Schumann's 'Collected Works,' 3d ed., 1875; vol. ii, p. 95.) His position, both in society and the world of art, was assured; the devotion of his pupils and admirers bordered on fanaticism.

In 1836 Liszt introduced C. to George Sand (Mme. Dudevant); their mutual attachment formed an episode eventually most painful for the refined and sensitive nature of the artist, dominated by the coarse-fibred woman of the world. A severe attack of bronchitis in the autumn of 1838 overturned his usually normal health, and led C. to spend the ensuing winter in Majorca with Mme. Dudevant, who appears to have nursed him quite tenderly; but the Chopin thinly disguised as 'Prince Karol' in her unamiable novel, 'Lucrezia Floriani' (published shortly afterward), was not at all an engaging personality, and after C.'s malady had developed into consumption, they parted (about 1844). Disregarding his failing health, C. visited Great Britain in 1848, and again in 1849, giving concerts and accepting invitations which exhausted his remaining energies; and finally returned to Paris to die. He was buried at Père la Chaise, between Cherubini and Bellini.

Chopin represents the full liberation of the pianoforte from traditionary orchestral and choral influences—its authoritative assumption of a place as a solo instrument per se. By this is intended no depreciation of Beethoven or Weber, or even of the lesser Field; it means simply that C.'s music, as none before, breathes the piano-spirit, incarnates the piano-soul, revels in the pure piano-tone, and illustrates the intrinsic piano-style, without seeking or being swerved by what are called (since Liszt) 'orchestral' effects, tonal or technical. Not requiring of the piano the sonority of an orchestra, he may have seemed 'effeminate' beside the Titan, Liszt; yet his works, more especially the scherzos, ballades, preludes, nocturnes, even the concertos (pianistically considered), mark a boundary in piano-effect which has never been overpassed. In the small forms he chose, there lies a world of originality in constructive ingenuity, in melody and melodic ornament, in harmonic sequence and figuration, of national melancholy or proud reminiscence, of tender or voluptuous sentiment and poetic reverie.

His playing was notable for flawless accuracy and remarkable brilliancy of technique, sensuous charm in touch and tone, and a peculiar yieldingness in the tempo (rubato) which was at times almost exaggerated. He was a most exquisite interpreter of his own works, but did not much care to play other piano music; all in all, a remarkably self-centred 'composer-pianist.' A complete edition of Chopin's works in 14 volumes, edited by Liszt, Brahms, Bargiel, Franc'homme, Reinecke and Rudorff, was publ. by Breitkopf & Härtel. Other excellent editions are those of Chopin's personal pupil, C. Mikuli, of Ignaz Friedmann, and especially of R. Joseffy (with introductions by J. G. Huneker).

WORKS [74 with, and 12 without, opus-number]: (a) For pf. w. orch.: 2 concertos (E min., op. 11; F min., op. 21); Don Giovanni Fantasia, op. 2; Krakoviak, rondo, op. 14; E♭ Polonaise, op. 22; and a Fantasia on Polish airs;—(b) for pf. w. other instrs.: Duo concertant on themes from Robert le Diable, for pf. and 'cello; Introd. et Polonaise, op. 3, for pf. and 'cello; Sonata for pf. and 'cello, op. 65; a pf.-trio in G min., op. 8; and a Rondo for 2 pfs., in C, op. 73;—(c) for pf. solo: Allegro de concert, op. 46; 4 Ballades, op. 23, 38, 47, 52; Barcarolle, op. 60; Berceuse, op. 57; Bolero, op. 19; 3 Écossaises, op. 72; 12 Grandes Études, op. 10; 12 Études, op. 25; 3 Études; 4 Fantaisies, op. 13, 49, 61, 66; 3 Impromptus, op. 29, 36, 51; Marche funèbre, op. 72; 52 Mazurkas, op. 6, 7, 17, 24, 30, 33, 41, 50, 56, 59, 63, 67, 68; Morceau de concert sur la Marche des Puritains de Bellini; 19 Nocturnes, op. 9, 15, 27, 32, 37, 48, 55, 62, 72; 11 Polonaises, op. 3, 26, 40, 44, 53, 61, 71; 24 Préludes, op. 28; Prélude, op. 45; 3 Rondos, op. 1, 5, 16; 4 Scherzos, op. 20, 31, 39, 54; 3 Sonatas, op. 4, 35, 58; Tarentelle, op. 43; 13 Valses, op. 18, 34, 42, 64, 69, 70, and in B min.; Variations on Je vends des scapulaires, op. 12; Variation dans l'Hexaméron;—(d) vocal: 16 Polish Songs, for vocal solo w. pf., op. 74 (ed. with Engl. text, New York).

Chorley, Henry Fothergill, a versatile writer (dramatist, translator, art-critic, poet, novelist, and journalist); b. Blackley Hurst, Lancashire, Dec. 15, 1808; d. London, Feb. 16, 1872. Being from 1833–71 mus. critic of the London 'Athenæum,' and a great traveller, he heard all the best music of the day, and knew many mus. celebrities; but his literary and critical work shows that, although fair-minded, he was of mediocre musical ability.—Works: Musical Manners in France and Northern Germany (London, 1841, 3 vols.); Modern German Music (1854, 2 vols.); Thirty Years' Mus. Recolls. (1862, 2 vols.); an interesting Autobiography, Memoir, and Letters (1873, 2 vols., w. photograph; edited by H. G. Hewlett); Natl. Music of the World (1880, ed. by Hewlett; 3d ed. 1912). We may also mention Handel Studies (1859), and the mus. novel Prodigy: a Tale of Music (1866, 3 vols.); the libretti to the Amber Witch and the May Queen; and his translations of Gounod's Faust, Hérold's Zampa, and Mendelssohn's Son and Stranger.

Choron [koh-rŏhn'], Alexandre-Étienne, b. Caen, Oct. 21, 1772; d. Paris, June 29, 1834. A student of languages, and passionately fond of music, he became interested in mus. theory (Rameau) and through it in mathematics, which he studied with ardor till the age of 25; then devoting himself wholly to the theory and practice of music. By several years' serious application to the Italian and German theorists, he accumulated 'more information relative to the theory and practice of music than any French musician had till then possessed' [Fétis]. Becoming (1805) a partner in a music-publishing firm, he devoted his entire fortune to editing and publishing classic and theoretical works and compositions, diligently contributing new works of his own all the while. In 1811 he became corr. member of the Acad.; he was entrusted with the reorganization of the 'maîtrises' (training-schools for church-choirs), and was app. cond. of religious festivals. In 1816, Director of the Grand Opéra, and reopened the Conservatoire (closed in 1815) as the 'École royale de chant et de déclamation.' Losing his Directorship (1817) through intrigue, and on account of his favoring new works by unknown authors, he established, at first with a very moderate subsidy, the famous 'Institution de musique classique et religieuse,' for. forwarding which, and promoting mus. instruction among the masses, he labored indefatigably until the July Revolution (1830), when his subsidy was so reduced that he could no longer hope to carry out his plans; this was his death-blow.—His chief publs. are: Principes d'accompagnement des écoles d'Italie (1804); Principes de composition des écoles d'Italie (1808); Dict. hist. des musiciens (1810–11, 2 vols., with Fayolle) [in which he sank the remainder of his patrimony]; Méthode élémentaire de musique et de plain-chant (1811); Francœur's Traité général des voix et des instrs. d'orchestre (1813); transls. of Albrechtsberger's Gründliche Anweisung zur Composition and Generalbasschule (1814, 1815; new ed. 1830), and of Azopardi's Musico prattico (1816); Méthode concertante de musique à plusieurs parties (1818, written for his Conservatoire); Méthode de plain-chant (1818); Manuel complet de musique vocale et instrumentale, ou Encyclopédie musicale (1836–8; 6 vols. letterpress and 2 vols. plates; with La Fage).—Cf. Choudens [shoo-dăhn′], Antony (son of the mus.-publr.), b. Paris, 1849; d. there 1902. —Compositions: 2 operas, Graziella (Paris, 1877) and La Jeunesse de Don Juan; a coll., Dix mélodies (1870), increased in 1873 to Vingt mélodies (Un dernier baiser; À une étoile); also Essais symphoniques, pf.-pcs., etc.

Chouquet [shoo-kā′], Adolphe-Gustave, b. Havre, Apr. 16, 1819; d. Paris, Jan. 30, 1886. He lived in America as a music-teacher 1840–60; since then in Paris. He twice won the 'Prix Bordin'; in 1864 for a Hist. of Music, 14th to 18th cent., and in 1868 for Histoire de la musique dramatique en France depuis ses origines jusqu'à nos jours (publ. 1873). From 1871, custodian of the coll. of instrs. in the Cons.; in 1875 he publ. a catalogue of them. He wrote the words of several cantatas (e. g., Hymne de la paix, prize cantata for the Exposition of 1867).

Christia'ni, Adolf Friedrich, pianist; b. Kassel, Mar. 8, 1836; d. Elizabeth, N. J., Feb. 10, 1885. Went to London in 1855; then to America, teaching in Poughkeepsie, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, and (1877) New York. From 1880, director of a music-school at Elizabeth. Wrote The Principles of Mus. Expression in Pf.-playing (N. Y., 1886; Ger. ed. Leipzig, Das Verständiss im Klavierspiel).

Christia'ni, Elise, b. Paris, Dec. 24, 1827; d. Tobolsk, 1853. 'Cello-player (sensational début at Paris, 1845), for whom Mendelssohn wrote the Lied ohne Worte for 'cello.

Christ'mann, Johann Friedrich, b. Ludwigsburg, Württemberg, Sept. 10, 1752; d. Heutingsheim, May 21, 1817. Lutheran pastor, and amateur player on harpsichord and flute. Publ. considerable good music for voice, pf., vln., and flute; a 'Vollständige Sammlung' of hymns (with Knecht) containing many by himself; and an Elementarbuch der Tonkunst (Speyer, 1782; 2d part 1790).

Chrysan'der, Friedrich, musical historian, critic, and editor; b. Lübtheen, Mecklenburg, July 8, 1826; d. Bergedorf, Sept. 3, 1901. Dr. phil. (Rostock). From 1868–71, and 1875–82, editor of the 'Allg. musikal. Zeitung,' contributing many articles (Sketch of Hist. of Music-printing, 1879; papers on the Hamburg opera under Keiser, Kusser, et al., 1878–9); from 1885 he edited (with Spitta and Adler) a 'Vierteljahrsschrift für Musikwissenschaft.' He also edited two 'Jahrbücher f. musikalische Wissenschaft' (1863, 1867), with important papers by various writers. In 1853 he publ. two pamphlets, Über die Molltonart in Volksgesängen and Über das Oratorium; he also edited 'Bach's Klavierwerke' (1856), and 'Denkmäler der Tonkunst' (Carissimi's oratorios; the sonatas by Corelli were ed. by Joachim; and Couperin's Pièces de clavecin, by Brahms). Together with G. Gervinus he founded, in 1856, the 'Deutsche Händelgesellschaft' for the purpose of publ. a complete edition of the master's works from the original MSS., but before long the other members lost interest, and Ch. and G. really constituted the society. At their own expense they set up a little printing-shop at Bergedorf, near Hamburg; in 1859 King George of Hanover granted Ch. an annual subvention of 1000 thaler, which, after the annexation of Hanover by Prussia, in 1866, was continued by the Prussian government.

After the death of Gervinus, in 1871, Ch., with the assistance of one printer and one engraver, went on undismayed, until vol. 100 (the last) was completed in 1894. During the preparation of this monumental edition he made several protracted visits to London to study Handel's autograph scores and others, in the possession of V. Schölcher, containing corrections and remarks in H.'s own hand. Of the latter he subsequently acquired 80 volumes for the music libr. at Hamburg. The enormous amount of biographical material Ch. had collected led him to begin a life of H., of which, unfortunately, only the first two vols. and half of the third, bringing the life down to 1740, appeared (Leipzig, 1858–67). Max Seiffert has recently undertaken the responsible task of completing Ch.'s work. Some of the characteristics of the great H. edition are: 'A new German translation of the original Engl. text, emphasizing the relation between word and tone; the restoration of the original ornamentation of the arias; and, most important of all, the restoration of the original Handelian orchestration.'—Cf. H. Kretzschmar, Fr. Chr. (in Peters' 'Jahrbuch,' 1902).

Chrysan'thos of Madyton, Archbishop of Durazzo in Albania, previously a teacher of church-singing in Constantinople. In his works Introd. to the Theory and Practice of Church-Music (1821) and Great Theory of Music (1832), he much simplified the liturgical notation of the Byzantine Church.

Chwatal [shwäh'tähl], Franz Xaver, b. Rumburg, Bohemia, June 19, 1808; d. Elmen (Soolbad), June 24, 1879. In 1832, music-teacher in Merseburg, 1835 in Magdeburg. Wrote 2 Methods for pf. (op. 93, op. 135); male quartets; and over 200 pf.-pieces.

Chwatal, Joseph, brother of the preceding; b. Rumburg, Jan. 12, 1811. Organ-builder in Merseburg; invented several minor improvements in the organ-action.

Cifra [chē'-], Antonio, b. Rome, c. 1575; d. Loreto, circa 1636. A prolific composer, and one of the best of the Roman school; a pupil of Palestrina and B. Nanini. At first m. di capp. at the German College, 1610–20 at Loreto, for 2 years at the Lateran; and in 1822 in the service of Archduke Carl of Austria, returning to Loreto in 1827.—Publ. 5 books of motets; 3 of psalms; 5 of masses; 10 sets of concerti ecclesiastici (over 200 numbers); many more motets and psalms (in 2–12 parts); antiphones, litanies; madrigals; ricercari; Scherzi ed arie a 1, 2, 3, e 4 voci, per cantar nel clavicembalo, etc.; and other works, from 1600 to 1638:—See Q.-Lex.

Cilèa [chē-lā'ăh], Francesco, b. Palmi, Calabria, July 23, 1866. Pupil at Cons. of Naples (1879-89) of B. Cesi (pf.) and P. Serrao (comp.); prof. of pf. there, 1890–1; prof. harm. at Istituto Musicale at Florence 1897–1905; dir. Cons. at Palermo, 1913–16; since 1916 dir. Cons. at Naples. Member 'R. Accademia Musicale' at Florence (1898); Chevalier of Order of Crown of Italy (1893); Officer of same (1908).—Works: Pf.-trio (1886); Suite for orch. (1887); sonata for vcl. and pf. (1894); the operas Gina (Naples, 1889); Tilda (Florence, 1892); Arlesiana ([4 acts] Milan, 1897; rewritten in 3 acts, ib., 1898); Adriana Lecouvreur (Milan, 1902 [very succ.]; New Orleans, 1907); Gloria (Milan, 1907). His latest work is Poema Sinfonico for solo, ch. and orch. (Genoa, 1913).

Cimaro'sa [chē-], Domenico, eminent dramatic composer; b. Aversa, near Naples, Dec. 17, 1749; d. Venice, Jan. 11, 1801. The son of a poor mason and early orphaned, he attended the charity-school of the Minorites, his first music-teacher being Polcano, organist of the monastery. His talent was so marked that in 1761 he obtained a free scholarship in the Conservatorio di S. Maria di Loreto, where he was taught singing by Manna and Sacchini, counterpoint by Fenaroli, and composition by Piccinni. In 1770 his oratorio Giuditta was performed in Rome; in 1772 he celebrated his exit from the Cons. by producing his first opera, Le Stravaganze del Conte, at Naples, with mediocre results. But with La finta parigina, given next season with brilliant success at the Teatro Nuovo, Naples, he was fairly launched on a dramatic career singularly free from artistic reverses. His ease and rapidity of composition were phenomenal; in 29 years he wrote nearly 80 operas. His fame grew steadily; and even Paisiello had to look to his laurels. In 1774 C. brought out L'Italiana in Londra in Rome, and lived, until 1781, alternately in Rome and Naples, writing in each, following the custom of the period, one opera after another for the city in which it was to be performed. In 1781, as a tour de force, he brought out two operas in Naples, one in Rome, and two in Turin. His works became known far beyond the bounds of Italy, being performed not only by Italian opera-troupes in all European capitals, but also as translated into various foreign tongues. After Paisiello's return from Petrograd, where he had sojourned from 1776–85 as court composer, offers were made to C., who finally accepted them, setting out for Petrograd in July, 1789. His journey thither was like a triumphal progress; at the courts of Florence, Vienna, and Warsaw he was overwhelmed with attentions; and arrived at his destination Dec. 1, wayworn and suffering from the wintry weather, but confident of success. Here he produced 3 operas, and during the three years of his stay wrote 500 several pieces of music for the court and nobility. Although every effort was made to induce him to remain, the rigorous climate obliged him to leave Russia in 1792; towards the end of the year he arrived in Vienna, where Emperor Leopold engaged him at a salary of 12,000 florins as Kapellmeister. At Vienna, at the age of 43, he brought out his masterpiece, Il Matrimonio segreto, the success of which eclipsed not only that of his former works but those of all rivals, not excepting Mozart. It is probably the sole survivor, on the present-day stage, of all C.'s dramatic works; though several of his operas might well replace certain modish puerilities of the hour. C. remained long enough in Vienna to write two more operas; 1793 found him once more at home in Naples, where his Matrimonio segreto aroused unexampled enthusiasm, having 67 consecutive performances, the illustrious composer himself presiding at the cembalo for the first seven representations. In 1794 he visited Venice to bring out Gli Orazi e Curiazi; in 1796 and '98 he was in Rome, then returning to Naples, and all the time actively engaged in operatic composition. In 1798, too, he was seriously ill at Naples; and the year after, having openly taken part in the Neapolitan revolutionary demonstration on the entrance of the French army into the city, he was imprisoned and condemned to death by King Ferdinand, a sentence commuted to banishment. Going to Venice, he was at work on a new opera, Artemisia, when death suddenly overtook him. It was bruited abroad that he had been poisoned by order of Queen Caroline of Naples, as a dangerous revolutionist; the rumor was so persistent, and popular embitterment so great, that the Pope's body-physician, Piccioli, was sent to make an examination; according to his sworn statement, C. died of a gangrenous abdominal tumor. [The date of this statement, Apr. 5, 1801, was erroneously taken by CHAMPLIN as that of C.'s death.]

Comedy-opera was C.'s forte; in his happiest moments he rivals Mozart; even in 'opera seria' many of his efforts are worthy of a place on the repertory. The fluidity and fecundity of his melodic vein, his supreme command of form, and his masterly control of orchestral resources, excite astonishment and admiration. He was the peer of his great Italian contemporary, Paisiello. Of the 76 operas known as his, some of the finest are mentioned below: La finta parigina (Naples, 1773), L'Italiana in Londra (Rome, 1774), Il Fanatico per gli antichi Romani (Naples, 1777; a work noted for introducing, for the first time, vocal concerted music—trios and quartets—into the dramatic action), Il Matrimonio per raggiro (Rome, 1779), Cajo Mario (Rome, 1780), Artaserse (Turin, 1781), Il Convito di pietra (Venice, 1782), La Ballerina amante (Naples, 1782), Le Trame deluse (Naples, 1786), L'Impresario in angustie (Naples, 1786), Giannina e Bernadone (Naples, 1788), La Vergine del sole (Petrograd, 1791), Il Matrimonio segreto (Vienna, 1792), Le Astuzie femminile (Naples, 1794). He also produced 2 oratorios; several cantatas; masses a 4, w. instrs.; psalms, motets, requiems, arias, cavatinas, solfeggî, and a great variety of other vocal works; 7 symphonies; etc.—Cf. P. Cambiasi, Notizie sulla vita e sulle opere di D. C. (Milan, 1901); F. Polidoro, La vita e le opere di D. C. (in 'Atti dell' Accademia Pontiniana', vol. xxxii, 1902).—See Q.-Lex.

Cipolli'ni [chē-], Gaetano, dramatic composer; b. Tropea (Catanzaro), Italy, Feb. 8, 1857. Pupil of Francesco Coppa. Besides a great quantity of vocal Romanze, and pf.-pcs., he has written Gennerello, 3-act melodr. (T. Manzoni, Milan, 1891); Ai bagni di mare, operetta (Naples, 1892); Il piccolo Haydn, 1-act lyric comedy (T. Sociale, Como, (1893); Ninon de Lenclos, 3-act lyr. com. (T. Lirico Internazionale, Milan, 1895); and (in MS.) Simeta, 5-act opera.

Cisneros [this-nā'rŏhs], Eleonora de (née Broadfoot), dramatic mézzo-soprano; b. New York, Nov. 1, 1880, and trained there by Mme. Murio-Celli; studied later with Jean de Reszké and Angelo Trabadello in Paris; eng. (by Grau) for the Metr. Op. H., she first appeared in Jan., 1900, at a Sunday concert; operatic début same season at the Phila. Acad. of Music as Amneris in Aida. In 1901 she married Count Francesco de Cisneros of Havana, and went abroad for wider experience; eng. at the Regio Th., Turin, made début as Amneris in Dec., 1902, and later sang for a season at Milan in Il Trovatore (Azucena), with such success that she continued in that rôle in various Italian cities for more than six months. Next year, in Trieste, she sang the contralto rôles in Falstaff and Die Meistersinger; next season (summer of 1903) at Rio Janeiro in Aida, La Gioconda (Laura), and Carmen; followed by ten appearances at Lisbon in revivals of Semiramide (Arsace), Nabucco, Mercandante's Il Giuramento, etc. Sang at Covent Garden, London, autumn of 1903, also the following spring season, and has sung there for five seasons; in 1905, sang at the Vienna Opera, in German, the rôles of Amneris, Azucena and Ortrud, and refused offer of a 5-year contract; début at La Scala, Milan, that winter, and created there the Countess in Tchaikovsky's Pique-Dame; and Candia in the d'Annunzio-Franchetti opera La Figlia di Jorio. Sang at New York during first two seasons of the Manhattan Opera House (Hammerstein); concert-tour of Belgium and Germany, summer and early fall of 1908, and in the winter created in Italian the rôle of Clytemnestra in Strauss's Elektra at La Scala. Winter of 1909–10 at the San Carlo Th., Naples, singing Eboli in the revival of Don Carlos; etc. Season of 1910–11 with the Chicago-Phila. Opera Company; début Chicago as Amneris, Nov. 3, 1910. Accompanied Melba on operatic tour of Australia, summer and autumn of 1911; since 1910, member Chicago Op. Co.; in 1914 she sang at the newly estab. Champs-Elysées Op. in Paris; 1915–16 with the Havana Op. Co. Her repertory embraces about 50 rôles, others being Kundry, La Cieca (La Gioconda), Herodias (Salome), Nancy (Martha), Anne Boleyn (Henry VIII), Poppæa (Quo Vadis); favorites are Azucena, Amneris, Laura, Brünnhilde (Walküre), and Eboli. Her voice is a rich mezzo-soprano with a compass from g to $c^3#$.

Claas'sen, Arthur, b. Stargard, Prussia, Feb. 19, 1859. After graduating from the Danzig Gymnasium, he entered the Music School at Weimar in 1875, studying under Müller-Hartung, A. W. Gottschalk, and B. Sulze. As early as 1878 his compositions excited Liszt's interest. From 1880–84, conductor at theatre in Göttingen, of the Feichtinger Opera Co., and at Nowak's Victoria Th., Magdeburg. In 1884 C. was chosen, on Dr. Damrosch's recommendation, conductor of the Brooklyn (N. Y.) 'Arion,' which he conducted for 25 years, establishing his reputation as one of the foremost choral conductors; for several seasons also cond. of the N. Y. 'Liederkranz'; first cond. of numerous large festivals. In 1910 he settled in San Antonio, Texas, and became a powerful factor in stimulating the appreciation of music in the South through the founding of the San Antonio Symph. Soc. and the Mozart and Beethoven societies (choral); conductor of 31st Texas State Mus. Fest.—Publ. works: Festival Hymn for soli, ch. and orch.; Waltz-Idyll for full string-orch.; many songs and choruses, among which latter Der Kamerad took 1st 'composition prize' at the N. Y. Singing Festival.—In MS., many orchestral scores, incl. the symph. poem Hohenfriedberg; a Suite for orch.; The Battle, for soli, ch. and orch. (perf. at Seidl's Madison Sq. Garden Concerts); etc.

Clagget, Charles, b. London, 1755; d. there 1820. Violinist, leader in a Dublin theatre; inventor of instruments (an organ without pipes, a chromatic trumpet, and a chromatic French horn), described in his Musical Phenomena (London, 1793, 4to), and exhibited in London, 1791.

Clau'ssen, Wilhelm, b. Schwerin, 1843; d. there Dec. 22, 1869. Gifted composer, pupil of Stern Cons., Berlin, and Ary Schäffer; he was the first to win the Meyerbeer Scholarship (with an overture). Posthumous pf.-pcs. and songs were publ.

Clausz-Szarva'dy [shar-], Wilhelmine, fine pianist; b. Prague, Dec. 13, 1834; d. Paris, Sept. 2, 1907. She studied in the Proksch Inst.; début 1849; settled (1852) in Paris, where her refusal to play the brilliant bravura pieces then in vogue at first retarded appreciation of her worth. But when, two years later, Berlioz and Mme. Ungher-Sabatier became interested in her, her splendid interpretation of the classic masters (especially Bach and Beethoven) won general recognition; made frequent tours of France, Germany and England. She was one of those great artists who completely merge their personality into that of the composer. Married F. Szarvady [d. Paris, March 1, 1882] in 1857.

Clavé [klăh-vā'], José Anselmo, b. Barcelona, Apr. 21, 1824; d. there Feb., 1874. The founder of the male singing-societies in Spain, after the model of the French 'orphéons.' At the first singing fest. in Barcelona (1860) he directed a chorus of 200 voices; four years later 2000 singers, representing 57 organizations, formed the fest. chorus. Some of his songs and choruses enjoyed immense popularity; also wrote a few zarzuelas.

Clay, Frédéric, composer; b. (of English parents) Paris, Aug. 3, 1840; d. Great Marlow, n. London, Nov. 24, 1889. Pupil of Molique at Paris, and of Hauptmann at Leipzig. His first operettas, The Pirate's Isle (1859) and Out of Sight (1860), were given privately at London; after them he brought out, at Covent Garden and other London theatres, Court and Cottage (1862), Constance (1865), Ages ago (1869), The Gentleman in Black (1870), Happy Arcadia (1872), Babil and Bijou (1872), The Black Crook (1873), Cattarina (1874), Princess Toto (1875), Don Quixote (1875), Oriana, The Golden Ring (1883), The Merry Duchess (1883); incid. mus. to 'Twelfth Night' and other plays; 2 cantatas, The Knights of the Cross (1866) and Lalla Rookh (1877); part-songs, songs, etc.

Clegg, Edith, b. London; a fine contralto; studied at Guildhall Sch. of Mus., and with H. Klein in London; later with J. Bouhy in Paris; estab. her reputation as a concert singer at several of the great Engl. festivals; also repeated engagements with the Philh. Soc.; début in opera, London, 1906, creating the part of Sophia in Liza Lehmann's The Vicar of Wakefield; has also sung at Covent Garden; toured Germany with success as a lieder-singer.

Clemens, Charles Edwin, b. Plymouth, England, March 12, 1858. Organist; pupil of Drs. Weeks and Martin, and E. Pauer, at the R. C. M. At 11, org. at Christ Ch., Davenport; at Berlin, 1889–96, org. of the English church and also to Empress Friedrich; he taught in the Scharwenka Cons., and publ. his well-known text-book on Pedal Technique (2 vols., 1894). Settled 1896 in Cleveland, Ohio; org. and choirm. at St. Paul's Ch., 1896–1911; since 1911 org. at Euclid Ave. Presby. Ch.; cond. of the Singers' Club; since 1902, prof. at the Women's Coll., Western Reserve Univ. Successful recitals at Cleveland and elsewhere; engaged at the Temple of Music at the Pan-American Exposition, Buffalo. In 1903 he publ. (New York) his Modern School for the Organ, which rivals the Pedal Technique in pedagogical favor.

Cle'mens, Jacob, called 'Clemens non Papa,' to distinguish him from Pope Clement VII (who was a good player on several instrs., and died 1534); eminent Netherland contrapuntist of the 16th cent., in the time between Josquin and Palestrina. He was first Kapellm. to the Emperor Charles V, at Vienna.—Works: 11 masses, many motets, chansons, etc., publ. by P. Phalèse (Louvain, 1555–80); 4 books of Sooter Liedekens, i. e., psalms set to popular Netherland tunes, publ. by T. Susato (Antwerp, 1556–7); and numerous miscellaneous pieces in collections of the period.—He probably died circa 1557. See Q.-Lex.

Clément [klā-măhn'], Charles-François, b. in Provence, 1720; settled in Paris as pf-teacher. Publ. Essai sur l'accomp. du clavecin (1758), and a supplement, Essai sur la basse fondamentale, etc. (1762); they appeared in a 2d ed. united under the former title. He also prod. 2 operettas, a book of harpsic.-pcs. w. vln., and issued a monthly 'Journal de clavecin' (1762–65).

Clément, Edmond, b. Paris, March 28, 1867. Pupil of Warot at the Cons. in 1887; first prize, 1889; début at Op.-Comique, Nov. 29, 1889, as Vincent in Gounod's Mireille. His success was instantaneous, and he was eng. at once as first tenor; remained there uninterruptedly for 21 years (until 1910), with frequent leave for extended tours; has sung in the principal theatres of France, Belgium, Spain, Portugal, England and Denmark; 1909–10 at M.O.H.; 1911–13 with Boston Op. company; in the spring of 1913 he made an extended and very successful concert-tour of U. S. and Canada; Officier de l'Instruction Publique and Knight of the Order of Danebrog. His voice is a light tenor of very agreeable quality, with a range of two octaves; both as actor and singer he secures remarkable results with a minimum of effort; his art is characterized by a subtle and peculiar refinement and distinction. He has created the chief tenor parts in the following operas (all at the Op.-Comique): Bruneau's l'Attaque du Moulin (1893), Saint-Saëns' Phryné (1893), Cui's Le Flibustier (1894), Godard's La Vivandière (1895), Dubois' Xavière (1895), Hahn's l'Île du Rêve (1898), Erlanger's Le Juif polonais (1900), Saint-Saëns' Hélène (1904), Dupont's La Cabrera (1905), Puccini's Madama Butterfly (1906), Vidal's La Reine Fiammette (1908); his favorite rôles are Don José (Carmen), Werther, Des Grieux (Manon), Rodolphe (La Bohème), Gerald (Lakmé).—During his convalescence from a wound received in the great war (1915) he gave a series of concerts, the proceeds of which (amounting to 125,000 francs) he donated to various war-charities.

Clément, Félix, b. Paris, Jan. 13, 1822; d. there Jan. 23, 1885. He studied music secretly, and at the age of 21 adopted it as his profession. He devoted himself especially to historical studies; filled several positions as organist and teacher, and finally became org. and choirmaster at the Ch. of the Sorbonne. In 1849 the government chose him to direct the musical solemnities at the Sainte-Chapelle; and the comps. then executed (music of the 13th cent.) were publ. in score as 'Chants de la Sainte-Chapelle,' in the same year (3d ed. 1875). He was active in establishing the 'Inst. for Church-music.'—Writings; Méthode complète du plain-chant (1854; 1872); Méthode de musique vocale et concertante; Histoire générale de la musique religieuse (1861); Les Musiciens célèbres depuis le XVI^e siècle (1868; 1879); Dict. lyrique, ou histoire des opéras (1869, 4 supplements up to 1881; new, augm. ed. by A. Pougin, 1897 and 1904); Méthode d'orgue, d'harmonie et d'accompagnement (1874; 2d ed. 1894); etc.

Cle'ment, Franz, b. Vienna, Nov. 17, 1780; d. there Nov. 3, 1842. At the age of 12, his father accomp. him on a 4-years' concert-tour through Germany and England; 1802–11, he was Kapellm. at the Th. an der Wien, Vienna, later leader at Prague, under C.M. v. Weber; 1813–18, again at the Th. a. d. Wien, and then travelled for several years with Mme. Catalani.—Works: 6 concertos and 25 concertinos for vln.; also overtures, quartets, pf.-concertos, the opera Le Trompeur trompé, etc.

Clement y Cavedo, b. Gandia, Spain, Jan. 1, 1810; d. (?). Org. at Algamesi and Valencia; 1840–52, teacher of music at Guéret, France; settled in Madrid, and publ. an elem. mus. text-book, Gramática musical. In 1855, by order of Espartero, he submitted a plan for reorganizing the School of Music.—Comps.; A magic opera, a zarzuela, ballads, songs, etc.

Clemen'ti, Muzio, celebrated pianist and composer; was b. at Rome, Jan. 24, 1752, acc. to obituary notice; but Reichardt's 'Mus. Almanach' for 1796 gives April 12, 1746; d. at his country-seat at Evesham, England, March 10, 1832. His father, a goldsmith ('orefice'), was a devoted amateur of music, and had his son taught carefully, from tender years, by Antonio Buroni, m. di capp. in a Roman church. From 1759 the org. Condicelli gave him lessons in organ-playing and harmony. So rapid was their pupil's progress, that when but 9 he obtained a position as organist, in competition with other and maturer players. Until 14 years of age he pursued his studies in Italy, G. Carpani (comp.) and Sartarelli (voice) being his next instructors. At a piano-concert which C. gave in 1766, an English gentleman named Beckford was so delighted with his talent that he obtained the father's permission to educate the boy in England. C. lived and studied till 1770 in his patron's house in Dorsetshire; then, a thoroughly equipped pianist and musician, he took London by storm. In 1773 his op. 2 (3 pf.-sonatas dedicated to Haydn, and warmly praised by K. Ph. E. Bach) was published; they may be considered as finally establishing the form of the pf.-sonata. From 1777-80 he conducted, as cembalist, the Italian Opera. In 1781 he began a pianistic tour, giving concerts at Paris, Strassburg, Munich, and Vienna; here, on Dec. 24, 1781, he met Mozart in 'friendly' rivalry (N.B. Mozart's letters make no pretence of concealing his dislike of the 'Italian' composer and player); though the palm of final victory was awarded to neither, yet C. tacitly admitted, by changing from a mechanically brilliant to a more suave and melodious piano-style, the musicianly superiority of Mozart. In Vienna his op. 7, 9 and 10 were publ. by Artaria. Excepting a concert-season at Paris, in 1785, C. now remained in London for 20 years (1782–1802). He not only made his mark, and incidentally amassed quite a fortune, as a teacher, pianist, and composer, but also (after losses through the failure of Longman & Broderip, the instrument-makers and music-sellers) established a highly successful piano-factory and publishing-house of his own (now Collard & Collard). With his pupil Field, C. set out for Petrograd in 1802, passing through Paris and Vienna; their tour was attended by brilliant success, and Field was so well received in Petrograd that he accompanied his master no further. The latter resided for several years alternately in Berlin, Dresden, and Petrograd; then, after visiting Vienna, Milan, Rome, and Naples, he again settled in London. The business-man in C. now gained the upper hand; he no longer played in public, but devoted himself to composition and the management of his prosperous mercantile ventures. He never again went far from London, except during the winter of 1820–21, which he spent in Leipzig. —As a teacher C. trained many distinguished musicians; Field, Cramer, Moscheles, Kalkbrenner, Alex. Klengel, Ludwig Berger, Zeuner, even Meyerbeer, all owed much to his instructions. His compositions include symphonies (which failed in competition with Haydn's), and overtures for orchestra; 106 pf.-sonatas (46 w. vln., 'cello, or flute); 2 duos for 2 pfs.; 6 4-hand duets; fugues, preludes and exercises in canon-form, toccatas, waltzes, variations, caprices, Points d'orgue . . . (op. 19); an Introduction à l'art de toucher le piano, avec 50 leçons, etc.; by far the greater part of which are wholly forgotten. But his great book of Études, the Gradus ad Parnassum (publ. 1817), is a living reminder that he was one of the greatest of piano-teachers. Bülow's excellent selection of 50 of these études has been outdone by Vogrich's unique 'Complete Edition,' arranged progressively (New York, 1898).

Biographies of C. have been written by Giov. Frojo: M. C., la sua vita, le sue opere e sua influenza sul progresso dell' arte (Milan, 1878); by O. Chilesotti in I nostri maestri del passato (Milan, 1882); F. Clément has a sketch in his Les Musiciens célèbres depuis le XVI^e siècle (Paris, 1878); M. Unger, M. C.'s Leben (Langensalza, 1914); also J. S. Shedlock in The Pianoforte Sonata (London, 1895).—See Q.-Lex.

Clemm, John [Johann Gottlieb Klemm], b. Dresden, 1690; learned organ-building under A. Silbermann, and settled in Philadelphia, Pa., in 1736; lived for a time in New York, where he built the first organ for Trinity Church (finished Aug., 1741); removed to Bethlehem, Pa., where he died in 1762. He is said to have been the first trained and competent organ-builder in America.—His son, John Clemm, Jr., was the first organist at Trinity Ch., New York City. [From A. H. Messiter: History of the Choir and Music of Trinity Church (New York, 1907).

Cleo'nides, a Greek writer on music, lived in the first half of the 2d century, A. D. His treatise Eisagogè harmoniké (Introductio harmonica), based upon the theories of Aristoxenus, was for a long time ascribed to the mathematician Euclid, because it had been publ. under the latter's name by Pena (Paris, 1557) and Meibom (Amsterdam, 1652), although it had been printed with the real author's name by Valla (Venice, 1497). A new crit. ed. was publ. by K. von Jan in 'Musici scriptores graeci.'

Clérice [klā-rēs'], Justin, b. Buenos Aires, Oct. 16, 1863; d. Toulouse, Sept., 1908. Pupil of Paris Cons. (1882, Delibes and Pessard). Coppet, Edward J. de, a notable patron of art and founder of the Flonzaley Quartet; b. New York, May 28, 1855; d. there Apr. 30, 1916. A man of wealth and refined artistic tastes, he engaged various artists for private quartet performances at his residence. When he realized that for the attainment of a perfect ensemble constant practice was indispensable, he commissioned A. Pochon, in 1902, to find four men of the highest artistic standing who were willing to devote their entire time to quartet-playing. In the summer of the following year Adolfo Betti, Alfred Pochon, Ugo Ara and Ivan d'Archambeau (1st vln., 2d vln., vla. and vcl., resp.) began to practise at Flonzaley, Mr. de C.'s summer residence near Lausanne, Switzerland; in the spring of 1904 they made their first European tour, arousing admiration for the absolute perfection of their ensemble; in the fall of the same year they came to the U. S., but played only privately at the house of their patron, and a few times for charities in which Mr. de C. was interested; on Dec. 5, 1905, they gave their first public concert in America (Carnegie Chamb.-Music Hall, N. Y.) with overwhelming success. Since then they have regularly appeared in America and Europe, recognized as an unsurpassed, perhaps even unrivaled, ensemble. Throughout these years they have continued the private concerts at Flonzaley and the N. Y. home of Mr. de C. None of the members accepts separate engagements; nor does any one teach, or do anything foreign to the purpose for which the quartet was organized. Since Mr. de C.'s death his son André has continued the original policy.—Cf. D. G. Mason, E. J. de C., in 'Mus. Quart.', Oct., 1916.

Cop'pola, Pietro Antonio [Pierantonio], dramatic composer; b. Castrogiovanni, Sicily, Dec. 11, 1793; d. Catania, Nov. 13, 1877. A pupil of the Naples Cons. for a short time, but chiefly self-taught, he was a contemporary and a not wholly fortunate rival of Rossini. He produced some 15 operas from 1816–1850, without real success until the fifth, Nina pazza per amore (Rome, 1835; thence to many chief cities of Europe; and at Paris as Eva); from 1839–43 he was cond. of the Lisbon Royal Opera. Other successful operas were Gli Illinesi (Turin, 1835); Enrichetta di Baienfeld (Vienna, 1836); La Bella Celeste degli Spadari (Milan, 1837); Giovanna I^ma^ (Lisbon, 1841); Inès de Castro (ib., 1842); Il Folletto (Rome, 1843). He also wrote masses, litanies, and other church-music.

Coquard [kŏh-kahr'], Arthur, b. Paris, May 26, 1846; d. Noirmoutier, Vendée, Aug. 20, 1910. Priv. pupil of César Franck, 1862–6; prof. of music at the Nat. Inst. of the 'Jeunes Aveugles'; music critic for 'Le Monde', and 'Écho de Paris.'—Comps.: 2-act opera, l'Épée du roi (Angers, 1884); 3-act com. op., Le Mari d'un jour (Paris, 1886); 2-act (spectacular) lyric drama l'Oiseau bleu (Paris,1894); 4-act lyr. dr. La Jacquerie (Monte Carlo and Paris,·1895); 4-act opera Jahel (Lyons, 1900); 3-act opera La troupe Jolicœur (Opéra-Com., 1902); an oratorio, Jeanne d'Arc; several secular cantatas.—He publ. (Paris, 1892) De la musique en France depuis Rameau, which received a prize from the Académie des Beaux-Arts.

Corbett, William, English violinist; b. 1669 (?); d. London (?), 1748. A member of the Queen's band, he lived in Rome from 1711–40; he gave occasional concerts, and was a collector of musical books and instrs., bequeathing the latter to Gresham College. Publ. many sonatas, and concertos for various instrs.; wrote incid. music to Henry IV and Love Betrayed; also songs.

Cordans, Bartolommeo, composer; b. Venice, 1700; d. Udine, May 14, 1757; entered the order of the Franciscans at an early age, but obtained Papal dispensation later to leave it. From 1729–31 he brought out 3 fairly succ. operas at Venice; in 1735 he became maestro at Udine cathedral, and composed an immense amount of church-music, much of which was purposely destroyed, yet in the cathedral archives 60 masses, over 100 psalms, many motets, etc., are preserved in MS.

Cordel'la, Giacomo, b. Naples, July 25, 1783; d. there May 2, 1847. Pupil of Fenaroli and Paisiello, and a very prolific dramatic composer, 19 of his operas having been produced, chiefly in Naples. He was prof. of solfeggio at Naples Cons., m. di capp. at several convents in Naples, and long director of music at the San Carlo Th. Also wrote masses, cantatas, etc.

Corder, Frederick, b. Hackney, London, Jan. 26, 1852. Pupil of R. A. M., and in 1875 won the Mendelssohn Scholarship; from 1875–8 studied with Ferd. Hiller at Cologne; became cond. of Brighton Aquarium Concerts in 1880, and greatly improved their quality; since 1886 prof. of comp. at R. A. M. and also (since 1889) curator there. In 1905 he founded the 'Society of British Composers.' As a teacher he has been remarkably successful, most of the prominent British composers of to-day having been his pupils; one of the most zealous apostles of Wagner, he made (together with his wife) the first Engl. translations of the Ring dramas, Meistersinger and Parsifal for the original scores publ. by Schott; also contributor to Grove's Dictionary. —Works: The operas Morte d'Arthur (1877, not prod.), Nordisa (Liverpool, 1887; prod. by C. Rosa Op. Co. also in London and the provinces w. great succ.), Ossian (1905, not prod.); the operettas Philomel (an op. satire, 1880), A Storm in a Tea-cup (1880), The Nabob's Pickle (1883), The Noble Savage (1885); the cantatas The Cyclops (1881), The Bridal of Triermain (Wolverhampton Fest., 1886), The Blind Girl of Castel-Cuillé (1888), The Sword of Argantyr (Leeds Fest., 1889); for orch., Evening on the Sea-Shore (idyll, 1876), Im Schwarzwald (suite, 1876), Ossian (overt., 1882), Nocturne (1882), Prospero (overt., 1885), Roumanian Suite (1887), Pippa Passes (orchl. poem, 1897), A Fairy Tale (1913); incid. music to The Tempest (1886), The Termagant (1898), The Black Tulip (1899); Dreamland, ode for ch. and orch. Comp.* (London, 1891); The Orchestra, and how to write for it (ib., 1895; 2d ed. 1902); Modern Mus. Composition (ib., 1909); Musical Encyclopædia (ib., 1915).—Cf. 'M. T.,' Nov., 1913 (p. 713).

Corder, Paul, son of Frederick C.; b. London, Dec. 14, 1879. Entered R. A. M. in 1895, studied pf. with Oscar Beringer and Tobias Matthay, comp. with his father; studied vln., viola, horn, clarinet, etc. App. prof. of harm. and comp. at R. A. M. 1907; elected assoc. R. A. M. in 1905.—Works: op. 2, Grettir the Strong, 1-act opera (not prod.); op. 3, The Moon Slave, terpsichorean fantasy; op. 4, Cyrano de Bergerac, overt.; op. 7, Dross, mus.-drama without words; op. 8, Morar, orch. fantasia; op. 9, The Dryad, ballet; op. 14, Prelude and Fugue: op. 18, Sea-Songs; op. 19, 2 Choral Songs. A 3-act opera, Rapunzel, is now nearly finished (1916).

Corel'li, Arcangelo, admirable violinist and composer; born Fusignano, n. Imola, Italy, Feb. 12, 1653; d. Rome, Jan. 13, 1713. His violin teacher was G. Benvenuti in Bologna; counterpoint he learned with Matteo Simonelli. Little is known of his life until 1681, when, after travelling in Germany and holding a position in Munich, he settled in Rome under the patronage of Cardinal Pietro Ottoboni, in whose house he lived. His talents, combined with a winning personality, made him a favorite in the highest social circles of Rome; his concerts in the cardinal's palace were considered the chief musical events of the day. In 1683 his op. 1 was published. As a teacher his fame grew apace; pupils flocked to him from all sides, among them Battista Anet, Geminiani, Locatelli, and G. and L. Somis. The King of Naples made repeated overtures to C. to enter his service: at length, yielding to his solicitations, C. went to Naples, and gave a very successful concert before the court; but his second attempt failed to please the king, he himself made some awkward slips, and soon thereafter returned to Rome covered with mortification. Here a mediocre violinist, Valentini, had been well received by the public meantime; and Corelli, imagining himself supplanted and neglected, went into a decline and died 'aged 59 years, 10 months, and 20 days.' He was buried in the Church of Santa Maria della Rotonda; his statue is in the Vatican.—C.'s merit was twofold; understanding the character of his instrument, he laid the foundation of good violin-technique: to him are attributed the systematization of the science of bowing and the regulation of the shifts and the introduction of chord-playing. His compositions are still regarded as classics. His greatest effort was the Concerti grossi, which appeared only six weeks before his death. Of the works publ. under Corelli's name, all but the following six, which are given under their original titles, are probably spurious: 12 Suonate a tre, due violini e violoncello, col basso per l'organo. Op. 1, Roma, 1683; 12 Suonate da camera a tre, due violini, violoncello, e violone o cembalo. Op. 2, Roma, 1685; 12 Suonate a tre, due violini e arciliuto, col basso per l'organo. Op. 3, Bologna, 1690; 12 Suonate da camera a tre, due violini e violone o cembalo. Op. 4, Bologna, 1694 (in Amsterdam as Balletti da camera); 12 Suonate a violino e violone o cembalo. Op. 5, Roma, 1700 (later arr. by Geminiani as Concerti grossi); Concerti grossi con due violini e violoncello di concertino obbligato, e due altri violini, viola e basso di concerto grosso ad arbitrio, che si possono raddoppiare. Op. 6, Roma, 1712. All these were variously reprinted at the time; more recent editions are by Pepusch (Walsh: London; op. 1–4, and op. 6); by Joachim (in Chrysander's 'Denkmäler'; op. 1 and 2), and by Alard and David (some numbers from op. 5).—See Q.-Lex.

Corey, Newton J., b. Hillsdale, Mich., 1861. Began to play pf. early, but had irregular instruction until 1874, when he took up the organ seriously; org. at Hillsdale Coll. until 1880; then went to Boston, and studied with J. C. Parker, B. J. Lang, W. F. Apthorp and G. W. Chadwick; filled various positions as org. until 1891, when he settled in Detroit as org. of the Fort St. Presb. Ch., which pos. he still holds to-day (1916); also mus. ed. of 'Saturday Night;' since 1898 reg. monthly contrib. to 'The Étude'; Sec. of Detroit Orch. Assoc. He has given numerous recitals, and is a very successful lecture-recitalist.

Cornelius [-nā'-], Peter, composer and writer; b. Mayence, Dec. 24, 1824; d. there Oct. 26, 1874. A nephew of the painter

Peter von Cornelius, he at first embraced the profession of an actor; but after an unsucc. début he changed his mind, studied cpt. with Dehn at Berlin (1845–52), and then joined Liszt's following in Weimar, as a champion of Wagner, contributing frequent articles to the 'Neue Zeitschrift für Musik.' The failure of C.'s opera, Der Barbier von Bagdad (Weimar, 1858), through factious opposition, so disgusted Liszt that he left Weimar; the opera later (1886–7) met with deserved success in Dresden, Coburg, Hamburg, and other cities. C. now (1859) went to Wagner at Vienna, and followed him to Munich (1865), where he was app. reader to King Ludwig II, and prof. of harm. and rhetoric at the R. Music School. A second opera, Der Cid, was prod. at Weimar in 1865; a third, Gunlöd (from the Edda) remained unfinished [completed by Lassen, and prod. at Strassburg in 1892]. He publ. Lieder-Cyclus (op. 3), Duets for sopr. and bar. (op. 6), Weihnachtslieder (op. 8), Trauerchöre for male ch. (op. 9). Many of these enjoy considerable vogue. A vol. of 'Lyrische Poesien' was issued in 1861; C. also wrote the libretti of his operas, and was a fine translator. A complete ed. of his works was issued by Breitkopf & Härtel (1905–6): I, Songs. II, Choruses. III, Der Barbier von Bagdad. IV, Der Cid. V, Gunlöd (completed and orchestrated by W. von Baussnern). His literary works were publ. by the same firm (1904–5): I, II, Letters and pages from his diary, ed. by his son Carl. III, Essays on music and art, ed. by E. Istel. IV, Complete poems, coll. and edited by A. Stern.—Cf. A. Sandberger, Leben u. Werke des Dichter-Musikers P. C. (Leipzig, 1887); E. Istel, P. C. (Leipzig, 1904); E. Sulger-Gebing, P. C. als Mensch u. Dichter (Munich, 1908).

Cornell', John Henry, b. New York, May 8, 1828; d. there March 1, 1894. Organist, composer, writer; st. in New York, Germany and England. Organist in several N. Y. churches (1848, St. John's Chapel; 1868–77, St. Paul's Church; 1877–82, Old Brick Ch.). His sacred compositions are highly esteemed; of his writings the more important are: Primer of Modern Musical Tonality, Practice of Sight-Singing, Theory and Practice of Musical Form (after L. Bussler), Easy Method of Modulation, Manual of Roman Chant, and Congregational Tune Book. The Introit Psalms as prescribed by the First Prayer-book of Edward VI, set to Original Chants (N. Y., 1871); a Te Deum; part-songs; songs w. pf.; etc. Also numerous translations.

Cornet, Julius, b. 1793 at S. Candido in the Tyrol; d. Berlin, Oct. 2, 1860. He was a pupil of Salieri; became a famous stage-tenor, then director of the Hamburg Th.; from 1854–8, of Court Opera in Vienna, and finally of the Victoria Th., Berlin. Author of Die Oper in Deutschland.—His wife, Franziska (1806–1870), was a brilliant singer.

Corona'ro, Antonio, brother of Gaetano and Gellio; b. Vicenza, 1860; has prod. the operas Seila (Vicenza, 1880) and Falco di Calabria (ib., 1903).

Corona'ro, Gaetano, violinist and comp.; b. Vicenza, Italy, Dec. 18, 1852; d. Milan, Apr. 5, 1908. Pupil of Faccio at the Milan Cons. till 1873; studied for some months in Germany, and on returning, successfully prod. a choral work w. orch., Un Tramonto (Milan, Cons. Th., 1873); was for several years prof. of harmony in the Milan Cons., and, after A. Catalani's death in 1894, prof. of comp. there. He wrote the operas La Creola (Bologna, 1878), Malacarne (Brescia, 1894), Un curioso accidente (Turin, 1903); also some instrumental music.

Corona'ro, Gellio Benvenuto, b. Vicenza, Nov. 30, 1863; pianist and comp. (protégé of Sonzogno); début as pianist at the age of 8; and at 9, org. in Vicenza; at 13, theatre-cond. at Marosteca; at 15, chorus-master; in 1882 he entered the Liceo Rossini at Bologna, where his teachers were Busi, Parisini and Mancinelli; graduated 1883, carrying off the first prize with a 1-act opera, Jolanda, which was prod. at the Cons.—Works: Opera Jolanda (Milan, 1889); 1-act dramatic sketch Festa a Marina [took 1st prize in 1892, offered by Sonzogno] (Venice, 1893; mod. succ.); operetta Minestrone Napoletano (Messina, 1893; succ.); 2-act op. seria Claudia (Milan, 1895; unsucc.); Bertoldo (Milan, 1910). Also wrote 2 masses, a madrigal a 5, a string-quartet, songs, pf.-pieces, and an album for organ.

Cor'ri, Domenico, b. Rome, Oct. 4, 1744; d. London, May 22, 1825. He was a pupil of Porpora (1763–7); settled in London in 1774, brought out 2 operas, Alessandro nelle Indie (1774) and The Travellers (1806), and founded, with his son-in-law Dussek, a music-business (1797), which failed. He publ. The Singer's Preceptor (1798), Musical Dictionary (1798), The Art of Fingering (1799), and a Mus. Grammar; also arias, duets, sonatas, and rondos.—See Q.-Lex.

Cor'si, Jacopo, b. circa 1560; a Florentine nobleman and patron of art, in whose house, as in that of his friend Bardi, were held the memorable meetings of Peri, Caccini, Emilio del Cavaliere, Galilei, the poet Rinuccini, and others, whose efforts inaugurated the era of modern operatic composition. Corsi, the host, was himself a skilful player on the gravicembalo, and not only aided in the performance of the new music, but also composed two numbers of Rinuccini's Dafne.

Thuille (comp.) from 1899–1902; repetitor at the opera in Schwerin, 1903; chor.-master at the Nationalth. in Berlin, 1904; first cond. in Ratisbon, 1905, and in Nuremberg, 1906; upon Mottl's recommendation appointed Hofkapellm. of court opera in Munich, at the same time cond. of the 'Lehrer-Gesangverein' and the 'Akademischer Gesangverein,' 1907–11; engaged by Beecham in 1911 for the Wagner and Strauss perfs. in London; in 1912 first cond. at the Kurfürstenoper in Berlin; since 1913 first Hofkapellm. in Karlsruhe.

Cortot [kŏhr-toh'], Alfred-Denis, b. (of a Fr. father and a Swiss mother) Nyon, Switzerland, Sept. 26, 1877. Pupil at the Paris Cons. of Decambes, Rouquou and Diémer, winning the 1st prize for pf. in 1896; the same year he made his début in Paris, with Beethoven's C m. concerto, at one of the Colonne concerts, and won signal success; in 1898 he went to Bayreuth, studied Wagner's works with J. Kniese, and acted as repetitor at the festivals from 1898–1901. Returning to Paris, he began a most active propaganda for the works of Wagner, who at that time was practically unknown to the general public; on May 17, 1902, he cond. the French première of Götterdämmerung at the Th. du Château d'Eau, and in the same year estab. the 'Assoc. de Concerts A. Cortot,' which he dir. for two years, educating the public to an appreciation of Wagner; in 1904 he cond. the second perf. of Tristan und Isolde, shortly after Lamoureux had directed the Fr. première (Nouveau Th., Dec. 14). After he had thus contributed his share to the French Wagner movement, he returned to the pf., making numerous tours of France, Germany, Austria, the Netherlands, Spain, Switzerland, Russia, Italy and England, meeting everywhere with emphatic success. Together with J. Thibaud and P. Casals he formed a trio, which soon enjoyed a European reputation; since 1907 he has been prof. at the Paris Cons., in charge of the adv. pf.-classes; is Chev. de la Lég. d'Honneur, and of the Order of 'Isabella la Católica.'

Coss'mann, Bernhard, famous 'cellist; b. Dessau, May 17, 1822; d. Frankfort, May 17, 1910. Pupil of Espenhahn and Drechsler; also of Theodor Müller and Kummer (in Dresden). Member of the Grand Opéra Orch., Paris, in 1840; London (1841); Op.-Com., Paris, till 1846; Gewandhaus, Leipzig, 1847–8, as solo 'cellist, also studying comp. under Hauptmann; at Weimar (with Liszt) in 1850; in 1866, prof. at Moscow Cons.; lived from 1870–8 at Baden-Baden; thereafter, prof. of 'cello at Frankfort Cons.—Works: Concertstück; Pièces de salon; fantasias on operatic motives.

Cos'soul, Guilherme Antonio, b. Lisbon, April 22, 1828; d. there May 26, 1880. An excellent 'cellist; app. prof. at the Cons. in Lisbon, 1861; from 1863, director. Wrote the 1-act comedies A cisterna de Diabo (Lisbon, 1850), O Arieiro (ib., 1852), O Visionaro do Alamtejo (ib., 1852); 2 masses, 2 Te Deums, and other ch.-music; 6 overtures for orch.; a pf.-trio; pieces for vcl.; do. for harp.

Cos'ta, Sir Michael (properly Michele), dram. comp. and celebrated conductor; b. Naples, Feb. 4, 1808; d. Brighton, April 29, 1884. His father, Pasquale C. [a composer of church-music, and pupil of L. Leo], was his first teacher; he then studied in the Cons. under Tritto, Zingarelli (comp.), and Crescentini (singing). After bringing out 4 successful operas at Naples, he was sent to Birmingham, Engl., by Zingarelli, to conduct the latter's psalm Super flumina Babilonis, but through some misunderstanding was required to sing the tenor part, instead of conducting. But he remained permanently in England; was eng. (1830) as m. al cembalo at the King's Th., London, in 1832 as musical director, and in 1833 as director and conductor. During this time he produced the three ballets Kenilworth (1831), Une heure à Naples (1832), and Sir Huon (1833, for Taglioni). In 1846 he became cond. of the Philh. and of the new Ital. Opera; in 1848, of the Sacred Harmonic Society. From 1849 he was the regular cond. of the Birmingham Festivals; from 1857, of the Handel Festivals. He was knighted in 1869; in 1871 he was app. 'director of the music, composer, and conductor' at H. M.'s Opera. Besides the oratorios La Passione (Naples, 1825), Eli (Birmingham, 1855), and Naaman (ib., 1864), he produced the operas Il Sospetto funesto (Naples, 1826); Il Delitto punito (1827); Il Carcere d'Ildegonda (Naples, 1828); Malvina (Naples, 1829; revived as Malek Adel in Paris, 1838); and Don Carlos (London, 1844); also 2 cantatas, a mass, 3 symphonies, etc.

Cos'ta, P. Mario, b. Taranto, July 26, 1858; nephew of Michele C.; has written much chamber-music, and many popular songs, mostly in Neapolitan dialect (Luna Nova, Oje Caruli, Serenata Medioevale, A Napulitana etc.); also 2 pantomimes, Le Modèle rêvé, and l'Histoire d'un Pierrot (Paris, 1893; succ.).

Cot'ta, Johann, b. Ruhla, Thuringia, May 24, 1794; d. as pastor at Willerstedt, n. Weimar, March 18, 1868. Composed the folk-song, Was ist des Deutschen Vaterland?

Cottlow, Augusta, concert-pianist; b. Shelbyville, Ill., April 2, 1878. She received her first instruction from her mother; at six she began to play in public, and at seven played an entire recital in Chicago; then st. in Chicago with C. Wolfsohn (pf.) and F. G. Gleason (harm.); début w. orch. there in 1888; within the next six years she was heard in the principal cities of the U. S. in recital and w. orch.; went to Berlin in 1896, and studied for a year with Busoni (pf.) and O. B. Boise (theory); then made very successful tours of Germany, Holland, England and Russia; returned to the U. S., making her American début as a mature artist at the Worcester Fest. of 1900; soloist with Boston Symph. Orch., 1902; after several tours of the U. S., meeting with flattering receptions, she returned to Berlin, where she settled permanently. In 1912 she married Edgar A. Gerst of Berlin.

Cot'to [Cotto'nius], Johannes, an early writer (11th to 12th cent.); his treatise Epistola ad Fulgentium contains valuable information of the beginnings of notation and solmisation (printed by Gerbert in 'Scriptores,' vol. ii).

Couperin [koo-prăn'], a family, of French musicians, renowned for two centuries. Those first known to fame were 3 brothers, Louis, Charles, and François, of Chaume, in the department of Brie.

Couperin, Armand-Louis, son of Nicolas; b. Paris, Feb. 25, 1725; d. there Feb., 1789. His virtuosity on the organ was extraordinary; he was org. in turn to the king, of St.-Gervais, St.-Barthélemy, of Ste.-Marguerite, and one of the 4 organists of Notre-Dame. His comps. (sonatas, a trio, motets, and other church-music) are correctly written, but not inspired, music.—His wife, Élisabeth-Antoinette (née Blanchet), was also a remarkable organist and clavecinist, playing in public at the age of 81 (in 1810).

Couperin, Charles, b. 1638; d. 1669; succeeded his brother Louis, in 1665, as org. at St.-Gervais.

Couperin, François (Sieur de Crouilly), b. 1631, d. 1698; a pupil of Chambonnières in harm. and clavecin-playing; was org. at St.-Gervais, 1679–98.—Works in MS.: Pièces d'orgue consistantes en deux messes, etc.

Couperin, François (surnamed le Grand, on account of his superiority in organ-playing), son of Charles C.; b. Paris, Nov. 10, 1668; d. there Sept. 12, 1733. He was taught by the organist Louis-Jacques Thomelin; succeeded his uncle François as org. at S.-G. in 1698; in 1701, was appointed 'claveciniste de la chambre du roi, et organiste de sa chapelle.' Chrysander, in the Preface to the complete edition of C.'s comps. for clavecin (London; prepared by Chrysander), writes, "C. is the first great composer for the harpsichord known in the history of music. The eminent masters who preceded him—Merulo, Frescobaldi, and many others —applied their art quite as much to the organ as to the harpsichord; whereas Couperin, though he played both instruments, wrote for the latter only. He stands, therefore, at the commencement of the modern period, and must be regarded as clearing the way for a new art. Among his younger contemporaries, and, in part, his pupils, were Scarlatti, Händel and Bach. Couperin's method of writing music was very peculiar. It was his constant aim to set down the music with the greatest possible fullness, exactly as he played it on his instrument. Even the manifold embellishments are most accurately indicated. All this gives to his music a more technical appearance than has that of any other master of the period."—Works: 4 Livres de pièces de clavecin, publ. Paris, 1713, 1716, 1722, and 1730, respectively (reprinted in vol. iv of 'Dkm. der Tonkunst'); the 3d also contains 4 concerts à l'usage de toutes sortes d'instruments, Les Goûts réunis, ou Nouveaux Concerts . . . (1724); L'Apothéose de l'incomparable L.———[Lulli] (no date); Trios; Leçons des ténèbres à une et deux voix (no date); L'art de toucher du clavecin (1717). —Cf. H. Quittard, Les Couperins (Paris, 1913).—See Q.-Lex.

Couperin, Gervais-François, son of Armand-Louis, and the last of this illustrious family, succeeded his father as org. of St.-Gervais, and in other posts. His ability was mediocre, both as a comp. and player. He was still living in 1823.

Couperin, Louis, b. 1630, d. 1665 as org. of St.-Gervais, Paris; he was also 'dessus de viole' (violinist) to Louis XIII. He left, in MS., 3 suites of pcs. for clavecin.

Couperin, Nicolas, son of François the elder; b. Paris, Dec. 20, 1680; d. 1748 as org. of St.-Gervais.

Couperin, Pierre-Louis, son of Armand-Louis, was his father's assistant-organist; d. 1789.

Couppey. See LE COUPPEY.

Courtois [koor-twăh'], Jean, French contrapuntist in the first half of the 16th century, was m. de chap. at Cambrai cath. in 1540, when a 4-part motet of his, Venite populi terræ, was perf. before Charles V of Spain. A mass, Domine quis habitabit, is in the Munich Library (MS. 51); motets and psalms have been published.—See Q.-Lex.

Courvoisier [koor-vwăh-z'yā], Karl, violinist; b. Basel, Nov. 12, 1846; pupil of David and Röntgen at Leipzig Cons. (1867–9), and of Joachim in Berlin (1869–70). In 1871 he was for a short time a member of the Thalia Th. orch., Frankfort; he remained in that city till 1875, conducting, and studying singing with Gustav Barth; then became conductor of the Düsseldorf Theatre orch., resigning in 1876 to devote himself to teaching and to conducting choral societies. Since 1885 he has resided in Liverpool as a singing-teacher.—Comps.: A symphony, 2 concert-overtures, and a vln.-concerto (MS.); minor pieces have been publ.—He has written an admirable essay, Die Violintechnik (1878; English transl., The Technics of Violin-playing, by H. E. Krehbiel; 2d ed. New York, 1896); an École de la vélocité for vln., and a Méthode de Violon (London, 1892).

Coussemaker [kooss-măh-kär'], Charles-Edmond-Henri de, eminent musicograph; b. Bailleul, Nord, April 19, 1805; d. Bourbourg, Jan. 10, 1876. 'His musical aptitude was such that at 10 he could play any piece upon the piano at sight.' While studying law at Paris, he took private lessons with Pellegrini in singing, and with Payer and Reicha in harm., continuing studies in cpt. with V. Lefebvre, at Douai, after becoming a lawyer. At this time (1831–5) he found leisure to compose music of the most varied description, all of which, excepting a score of romances, and 2 sets of songs, is unpubl. But perusal of the 'Revue musicale' (then edited by Fétis) excited his interest in historical musical research, which thenceforward formed the chief aim of his literary labors, pursued with equal ardor during successive terms as judge in Hazebrouck, Dunkerque, and Lille. He publ. Mémoire sur Hucbald (Paris, 1841); Notices sur les collections mus. de la bibliothèque de Cambrai . . . (1843); Essai sur les instrs. de musique au moyen âge (in Didron's 'Annales archéologiques,' illustrated); Histoire de l'harmonie au moyen âge (1852); Trois chants historiques (1854); Chants populaires des Flamands de France (1856); Drames liturgiques du moyen âge (1861); Les harmonistes des XII^e^ et XIII^e^ siècles (1864); a grand work, intended for a supplement to Gerbert, entitled 'Scriptores de musica mediiævi, nova series' (1864–76, 4 vols.; new ed. by U. Moser, Graz, 1908); L'art harmonique aux XII^e^ et XIII^e^ siècles (1865); Œuvres complètes d'Adam de la Halle (1872). —Cf. A. Desplanques, Étude sur les traveaux d'histoire et d'archéologie de M. E. de C. (Paris, 1870).

Cov'erly, Robert, composer; b. Oporto, Portugal, Sept. 6, 1863. He studied counterpoint, orchestration, and violin, under Weist Hill, Ludwig, and Jacquinot, in London; has lived in New York since 1884; composer of numerous songs and pf.-pieces. A march, The Passing Regiment, achieved immense popularity.

Coward, Henry, b. Liverpool, Nov. 26, 1849. Graduate of the Tonic Sol-fa College; Mus. Bac., Oxon., 1889; Mus. Doc., 1894. Lecturer on music, Firth College; singing-teacher at the Girls' High School, Sheffield; cond. of the Amateur Instr. Soc., and of the Mus. Union, at Sheffield, which he took on a most succ. tour around the world; chorus-master of the Sheffield Festival since 1896; also cond. of the Barnsley 'Cecilia' (1897), and of choral societies at Huddersfield (1901) and Chester (1902); since 1904, instructor of music at Sheffield Univ.—Works: Cantatas Magna Charta (1882), Queen Victoria (1885), The Story of Bethany (1891), The King's Error (1894), Heroes of Faith (1895); also The Fairy Mirror, for female voices, with tableaux vivants; and Tubalcaïn for ch. and orch.; anthems, songs, Sunday-school songs, hymns, etc. Edited a coll. of Methodist Hymns (1901).—Cf. 'M. T.', Jan., 1902.

Coward, James, excellent organist; b. London, Jan. 25, 1824; d. there Jan. 22, 1880. Chorister in Westminster Abbey; org. at the Crystal Palace 1857–80; cond. of the Western Madrigal Society 1864–72, and of the Abbey and the City Glee Clubs; also org. of the Sacred Harmonic Society, and of the Grand Lodge of Freemasons.—Works: Anthems; part-songs; 10 Glees a 4 and 5 (1857); 10 Glees (1871); songs, etc.

Cowen, Sir Frederic Hymen, b. Kingston, Jamaica, Jan. 29, 1852. His evident talent for music caused his parents to bring him to England to study, at the age of 4. He was a pupil of Benedict and Goss in London; st.

1865–7 at Leipzig under Hauptmann, Moscheles, Reinecke, Richter, Plaidy; 1867–8 in Berlin under Kiel; cond. of the London Philh. from 1887–92 (succeeding Sullivan); again from 1900–7; mus. director of the Melbourne Centennial Exhibition (1888–9); cond. of the Liverpool Philharm. from 1896–1914; Sir Charles Hallé's successor as cond. of the Manchester Concerts (1896–9); cond. Handel Triennial Fest. (Crystal Palace) from 1903–12; of Cardiff Fest. (1902–10). Received the degree Mus. Doc. (hon. c.) from Cambridge (1900) and Edinburgh (1910); knighted 1911. —Works: Two operettas, Garibaldi, and One too many (1874); four operas, Pauline (1876), Thorgrim (1890), Signa (Milan, Dal Verme Th., 1893; London, 1893), and Harold, or the Norman Conquest (4 acts; London, 1895); three oratorios, The Deluge (1878), Ruth (1887), and The Veil (1910); eight cantatas, The Rose Maiden (1870), The Corsair (1876), St. Ursula (1881), The Sleeping Beauty (1885), St. John's Eve (1889), The Water-Lily (1893), The Transfiguration (1895), John Gilpin (1904); also a Song of Thanksgiving (Melbourne, 1888), All hail the glorious reign (1897), Collins' Ode to the Passions (Leeds, 1898), Coronation Ode (1902); six symphonies, 1. in C min. (1869), 2. in F (1872), 3. Scandinavian, in C min. (1880), 4. Welsh, in B♭ min., 5. in F, 6. Idyllic, in E; three orchl. suites, The Language of Flowers, In the Olden Time, and In Fairyland; Sinfonietta in A for orch.; pf.-concerto in A min.; 2 overtures for orch.; pf.-trio in A min.; pf.-quartet in C min.; pf.-pieces; over 250 songs. Has publ. his memoirs as My Art and My Friends (London, 1913), and an amusing glossary of musical terms, Music as she is wrote (London, 1915). —A 6-page sketch of C. is in the London Musical Times for November, 1898.

Cowles, Walter Ruel, instructor, comp.; b. New Haven, Conn., Sept. 4, 1881. Grad. Yale Univ., A.B. 1906; Mus. Bac. 1907; st. with Horatio Parker, Sam. S. Sanford and H. Stanley Knight. Instr. at St. George's Sch., Newport, R. I. (1907–10); then studied at the 'Schola Cantorum,' Paris (orchestration with Widor); instr. of pf. at Yale Mus. Sch. since 1911.—Works: Concerto in C m. for pf. and orch.; 2 pieces for orch.; sonata for pf. and vln.; a pf.-trio; songs and pf.-pcs.

Crabbé, Armand, dramatic baritone; b. Brussels, April 23, 1884. Pupil of Désiré Demest at the Brussels Cons. 1902–4, taking second prize with such distinguished success that he was immediately eng. at the Th. de la Monnaie, where his début was made as the Watchman in the Meistersinger, and where, in the first season, he created the rôle of the Friar in Massenet's Jongleur de Notre-Dame (also sung by him for the first time at Covent Garden, M. O. H., Philadelphia, Boston, etc.). His professional début, however, had previously been made in concert, at the Kursaal, Ostende. He was eng. at the Monnaie from 1904 to 1908, then throwing up his contract to join Hammerstein's Manhattan Opera, New York, singing there until the sale of the undertaking, when he signed with the Chicago Grand Opera company (manager Dippel) for the season of 1910–11, and created the rôle of Pico in Victor Herbert's opera Natoma at Philadelphia (1911). He has sung at Covent Garden since 1905; also sang Escamillo at Berlin in 1909, but was obliged to decline a second invitation to sing the Jokanaan in Salome. His favorite rôles are Beckmesser, Scarpia (Tosca), Amonasro (Aida), Athanaël (Thaïs); other chief rôles are Silvio (Pagliacci), Alfio (Cavalleria), Marcus (Princesse d'auberge), and Valentin (Faust). His voice, originally a basso cantante, is now a pronounced baritone of resonant timbre and with a range of two octaves (A to a^1).

Cramer [krah'-], Johann Baptist, the famous pianist and pedagogue, eldest son of Wilhelm C., was b. Mannheim, Feb. 24, 1771; d. London (where he was brought when but a year old), April 16, 1858. His first teaching on the violin and pf., and in harmony, was by his father; he also studied with Benser and Schroeter, with Clementi (1779–81), and C. F. Abel (thorough-bass, 1785), though in comp. he was chiefly self-taught. As a concert-pianist, he began his travels in 1788, playing in the European capitals, and returning to London, which he considered his home, at intervals. In 1828 he established a music-publishing house (now Cramer & Co.), in partnership with Addison; he conducted it until 1842, and it still flourishes. From 1832–45 he spent much time in Paris.—Cramer publ. a great Method for pf. (Grosse Praktische Pfte.-Schule) in 5 parts, the last of which, the celebrated 84 Studies (op. 50), is now the best known of all his works (Bülow has publ. a fine selection of fifty, revised and annotated; Ad. Henselt issued a different selection, w. acc. of 2d pf.), and is deservedly a standard work in pianistic pedagogics. Part II of the same 'Method' (Die Schule der Fingerfertigkeit), 100 Daily Studies (op. 100), is also valuable, through in a less degree. Other works: 7 pf.-concertos (op. 10, 16, 26, 37, 48, 51, 56); 105 pf.-sonatas; pf.-quartet (op. 28), pf.-quintet (op. 61), and numerous other pf.-compositions, hardly any of which are known to the present generation.—Cf. J. Pembaur, Anleitung zu gründlichem Studium u. Analysieren der 84 Clavier-Etüden von J. B. C. (Leipzig, 1901).

Cra'mer, Karl Friedrich, b. Quedlinburg, March 7, 1752; d. Paris, Dec. 8, 1807.

He lost his position as prof. at Kiel, in 1794, because of open sympathy with the French Revolution.—Publ. Flora (pf.-pieces and songs); Polhymnia (operas in pf. score); and the 'Magazin für Musik' (1783–9), all with critical prefaces; also a Kurze Übersicht der Geschichte der französischen Musik (1786), and German translations of Rousseau's writings.

Cra'mer, Wilhelm, violinist; b. Mannheim, 1745; d. London, Oct. 5, 1799. Pupil of the elder Stamitz, and Cannabich; was a member of the Mannheim orch. from 1761–72, and became cond. of the King's Band in London, and leader at the Opera, Pantheon, Antient Concerts and Professional Concerts. He conducted the Handel Festivals (1784 and 1787), and the Gloucester Festival (1799.)—Works: 8 vln.-concertos; 12 string-quartets; trios; solo-pieces for vln.

Cranz, August, music-publishing firm in Hamburg, founded 1813 by August Heinrich Cranz (1789–1870). His son, Alwin (b. 1834), is the present head. In 1876 he bought the firm of C. A. Spina of Vienna, and in 1886 the firm of C. A. Böhme of Hamburg. His son Oskar entered as partner in 1896. In 1897 the firm removed to Leipzig. Branches were established in Vienna (1876), Brussels (1883), and London (1892).

Cray'winckel [krī-], Ferdinand Manuel Martin Louis Barthélemy de, b. Madrid, Aug. 24, 1820; pupil of Bellon at Bordeaux; m. de chap. of St.-Bruno, Bordeaux, where he lived after 1825. His numerous masses, and other church-works, are of a high order.

Crecquillon (Créquillon) [krā-kē-yŏhn'], Thomas, b. near Ghent (?); d. Béthune, 1557. Distinguished contrapuntist; maestro to Charles V of Spain abt. 1544–47; later canon at Namur, Termonde, and Béthune. His works, which rank with the best of that period, consist of masses, motets, cantiones, and French chansons a 4, 5, and 6.—See Q.-Lex.

Crescentini [krä-shĕhn-tē'nē], Girolamo, one of the last and finest of the Italian artificial mezzo-sopranos; b. Urbania, n. Urbino, Feb. 2, 1766; d. Naples, April 24, 1846. He studied singing with Gibelli at Bologna, and made a highly successful début at Rome in 1783; subsequent successes in the other European capitals earned him the surname of 'Orfeo Italiano' (Italian Orpheus). He sang at Leghorn, Padua, Venice, Turin, London (1786), Milan, and Naples (1788–9). Napoleon, having heard him in 1805, decorated him with the Iron Crown, and engaged him from 1806–12; Cr. then retired from the stage and left Paris, on account of vocal disorders induced by the climate; in 1816 he became prof. of singing in the R. Cons., Naples. "Nothing could exceed the suavity of his tones, the force of his expression, the taste of his ornaments, or the large style of his phrasing" [Fétis]. He also publ. several colls. of Ariette (Vienna, 1797), and a Treatise on Vocalization in Fr. and Ital., with vocal exercises (Paris, 1811).—See Q.-Lex.

Creser, William, b. York, Sept. 9, 1844. Pupil of his father, in whose choir at St. Johns Ch. he sang; studied later with G. A. Macfarren (org. and comp.); as early as 1856 he occasionally acted as Sir J. Barnby's substitute at Holgate Rd. Ch.; app. org. at Holy Trinity, Micklegate, in 1859, and later succeeded Barnby; then filled various other positions; 1891–1902 org. at the Chapel Royal, St. James'; since 1902 examiner of Trinity Coll. of Music, in which capacity he has made frequent visits to mus. institutions throughout the British colonies; Mus. Bac., Oxon., 1869; Mus. Doc., Oxon., 1880. His wife (née Amelia Clarke) was a well-known mezzo-sop.—Works: An oratorio, Micaiah; the cantatas Eudora (Leeds, 1882), The Sacrifice of Freia (ib., 1889), The Golden Legend, Tegner's Drapa; a mass; 2 Psalms; Old English Suite for orch.; chamber-music (str.-quartet in A m., pf.-trio in A; sonata for vln. and pf., etc.); organ-music.

Cressent [krĕh-sähn'], Anatole, b. Argenteuil, April 24, 1824; d. Paris, May 28, 1870. A lawyer, and an educated amateur of music, he left 100,000 fr. (to which his heirs added 20,000), the interest to be awarded triennially ('Prix Cressent'), one-half to the author of the best libretto and one-half to the composer of the best opera. William Chaumet was the first to win the prize, in 1875, with the comic opera Bathyle.

Cristo'fori, Bartolommeo (wrongly called Cristofali and Cristofani), famous as the inventor of the first practical hammer-action for keyboard-instruments; was b. Padua, May 4, 1655; d. Florence, Jan. 17, 1731. He was at first a leading maker of clavicembali in Padua; he removed to Florence abt. 1690. According to an article by Maffei, publ. 1711 in the 'Giornale dei Letterati d'Italia,' C. had up to that year made 3 'gravecembali col piano e forte,' these having, instead of the usual jacks plucking the strings with quills, a row of little hammers striking the strings from below. The principle of this hammer-action was adopted, in the main, by Gottfried Silbermann, the Streichers, and Broadwood (hence called the 'English action'). Following the designation by its inventor, the new instrument was named Piano-forte.—In 1716, Cr. was app. instr.-maker to Prince Ferdinando de' Medici; on the latter's death, he was made custodian of the court collection of instrs., by Cosimo III.—Cf. F. Casaglia, Per le onoranze a B. C. (Florence, 1876).

Crivel'li, Arcangelo, b. Bergamo, April 21, 1546; d. May 4, 1617; 1583, tenor singer in the Papal Chapel. — Works: Masses, psalms, and motets; only a few of the last were published.

Crivel'li, Domenico, son of Gaetano; b. Brescia, June 7, 1793; d. London, Feb. 11, 1857; pupil of Zingarelli. Called to London by his father, he wrote the opera buffa La Fiera di Salerno, ossia la Finta capricciosa; taught for a time at the R. Coll. di Musica at Naples, then settled in London as a singing-teacher. Publ. The Art of Singing, and New Solfeggios for the cultivation of the Bass Voice.

Crivel'li, Gaetano, celebrated tenor; b. Bergamo, 1774; d. Brescia, July 10, 1836. Sang in Brescia 1793, in Naples 1795, in Milan (La Scala) 1805, and thereafter on all principal stages of Italy; 1811–17, at the Th. Italien, Paris (as Garcia's successor); 1817–18, in the zenith of his fame, at London. At La Scala (1819–20) his voice deteriorated; he sang for the last time (?) at Florence in 1829.

Crivel'li, Giovanni Battista, comp. of the Lombardy school; b. Scandiano, Modena; d. Modena, 1682. Org. at Reggio cath.; then m. di capp. to the court of Ferrara; held a similar post, in 1651, at the court of Francesco I at Modena, and (1654) at the Ch. of S. Maria Maggiore, Bergamo.—Publ. Mottetti concertati (1626) and Madrigali concertati (1633).

Croce [kroh'chĕ], Giovanni dalla, b. Chioggia (hence surnamed 'il Chiozzotto') abt. 1560; d. Venice, May 15, 1609. A pupil of Zarlino; chorister at S. Marco, where he succeeded Donato as m. di capp. in 1603. He was one of the most eminent Venetian composers.—Publ. works: Sonatas a 5 (1580); 2 vols. of motets a 8 (1589, 1590; vol. ii reprinted 1605 w. organ bass; both vols. do. in 1607); 2 vols. madrigals a 5 (1585, 1588); Triacca musicale (caprices, or humorous songs in Venetian dialect, a 4–7; went thro' 4 editions—1597, 1601, 1607, 1609, and was his most popular and famous work; it includes the contest between the cuckoo and the nightingale, umpired by the parrot); madrigals a 5–6 (1590–1607); Cantiones sacrae a 8, w. basso cont. for org. (1622; a 2d vol. was publ. in 1623); Canzonette a 4 (1595); masses a 8 (1596); Lamentations a 4 (1603) and 6 (1610); Magnificats a 6 (1605), Vesper psalms a 8 (1589), etc. A selection of his church-music was publ. in London, 1608, as Musica sacra, Penetentials for 6 voyces, with English words. Several of his works have been repr. in Proske's 'Musica Divina' and Haberl's 'Repertorium.'—Cf. F. X. Haberl, G. C., in 'Kchm. Jahrb.,' 1888.—See Q.-Lex.

Croes [kroos], Henri-Jacques de, b. Antwerp, Sept. 19, 1705; d. Brussels, Aug. 16, 1786. Violinist and asst.-cond. at St.-Jacques, Antwerp; in 1729, musical director to the Prince of Thurn and Taxis, at Ratisbon. Went to Brussels in 1749, conducted the choir of the Royal Chapel till 1755, and was then app. m. de chap. to Charles of Lorraine. —Works: Masses, motets, anthems, and other church-music; also symphonies, sonatas, etc.

Croft (or Crofts), William, b. Nether-Eatington, Warwickshire, Engl., Dec. 30, 1678; d. Bath, Aug. 14, 1727 (buried in Westm. Abbey). A chorister in the Chapel Royal, under Dr. Blow; Gentleman of Ch. R., 1700, and (with J. Clarke) joint-org. of same in 1704, and sole org. in 1707. Succeeded Blow as org. of Westm. Abbey, Master of the Children, and Comp. to the Chap. R., in 1708.—Works: Divine Harmony [anthems] (1712); Musica sacra [30 anthems a 2–8, and a burial service in score] (1724; in 2 vols.; the first English work of church-music engraved in score on plates); Musicus apparatus academicus (2 odes written for his degree of Mus. Doc., Oxon., 1713); overtures and act-tunes for several plays; vln.-sonatas; flute-sonatas, etc.—See Q.-Lex.

Cross, Michael Hurley, b. Philadelphia, April 13, 1833; d. there Sept. 26, 1897. Pupil of Dr. Meignen (harm. and comp.), B. Cross (pf. and org.), C. Honimann (vln.), and L. Engelke ('cello). Org. of St. Patrick's in 1848; then at several other churches; at the cathedral for 18 years, and for 17 years (until his death) at Holy Trinity Episcopal Ch. He was director of several local societies, and of others in New York and Brooklyn. For 20 years his name was connected with musical progress in Philadelphia.

Crossley, Ada (Jessica), distinguished concert-singer (mezzo-sop.); b. Tarraville, Gippsland, Australia, March 3, 1874. Pupil of Fanny Simonson (voice) in Melbourne, for two years, and of Zelmann (pf. and harm.) in 1892–93; having sung in several churches, she made her concert-début with the Melbourne Philharm. Soc. in 1892; came to London in 1894, studied four months with Santley, and later with Mme. Marchesi in Paris; London début at Queen's Hall, May 18, 1895; her success was so emphatic, that she sang by command five times before Queen Victoria within the next two years; has appeared as soloist at all important Engl. festivals; her tour of Australia in 1904 was a succession of triumphs; has also made successful tours of the U. S. and South Africa. In 1905 she married Dr. Francis F. Muecke, but continues her professional career.

Crotch, William, b. Norwich, Engl., July 5, 1775; d. Taunton, Dec. 29, 1847. His extraordinary precocity may be measured by the well-authenticated statement (BURNEY, 'Philosophical Transactions' of 1779), that when two and a-half years old he played on a small organ built by his father, a master-carpenter. In Oct., 1779, he was brought to London, and played in public. At the age of 11 he became assistant to Dr. Randall, org. of Trinity and King's Colleges at Cambridge; at 14, comp. an oratorio, The Captivity of Judah (perf. 1789); from 1788–90 he studied for the ministry, but then returned to music, becoming org. of Christ Ch., Oxford; graduated as Mus. Bac., Oxon., in 1794 (Mus. Doc., 1799), and in 1797 succeeded Hayes as prof. of music in the University, and org. of St. John's Coll. He lectured in the Music School 1800–4, and in the Royal Institution, London, in 1804, '5, '7, and again from 1820; in 1822, was appointed Principal of the new R. A. M.—Works: 2 oratorios, Palestine (1812), and The Captivity of Judah (1834; a wholly different work from the first-mentioned juvenile production); 10 anthems; glees, fugues, 3 organ-concertos; pf.-sonatas; an ode, Mona on Snowdon calls; a glee, Nymph, with thee; a motet, Methinks I hear the full celestial choir (these last 3 very popular); other odes (or 'cantatas'); also wrote Elements of Mus. Comp., etc. (1812; 1833; 1856): Practical Thorough-bass; Questions on his 'Elements'; etc.—See Q.-Lex.

Crouch, Frederick Nicholls, b. London, July 31, 1808; d. Portland, Me., Aug. 18, 1896. Studied with Bochsa ('cello), and entered R. A. M. circa 1822 (teachers: Crotch, Attwood, Howes, Lindley, and Crivelli). At 9 he was 'cellist in the Royal Coburg Th.; played in Queen Adelaide's private band till 1832; was a teacher and singer in Plymouth, and 'cellist in various theatres. Went to New York in 1849; in Philadelphia (1856) as conductor of Mrs. Rush's Saturday Concerts; served in the Confederate Army, and settled in Baltimore, Md., as a singing-teacher.—Works: 2 operas; many collections of songs, some being original (among these latter the well-known ballad Kathleen Mavourneen).

Crowest, Frederick J., b. London, Nov. 30, 1850. Joined editorial staff of Cassell, Petter & Galpin in 1886; has held various editorial positions; since 1901 general manager and editor of Walter Scott Publishing Co., Ltd.—Writings: The Great Tone-Poets (1874); Book of Musical Anecdote (1878; 2 vols.; rev. ed. 1902, as Musicians' Wit, Humour and Anecdote); Phases of Musical England (1881); Musical History and Biography in the Form of Question and Answer (1883); Advice to Singers; Musical Groundwork; Cherubini (in 'Great Musicians' Series); Dictionary of British Musicians (1895); The Story of British Music (vol. i, 1895); Catechism of Musical History (10th thousand 1904); Story of Music (1902; in America Story of the Art of Music); Verdi: Man and Musician (1897).

Crü'ger, Johannes, a noted and still popular composer of church-chorals; b. Gross-Breesen, near Guben, April 9, 1598; d. Berlin, Feb. 23, 1662. A student of divinity at Wittenberg in 1620, he had received thorough musical grounding at Ratisbon under Paulus Homburger, and from 1622 until his death was organist of the St. Nicolaus Ch., Berlin. Besides writing fine chorals (Jesu, meine Freude, Jesus, meine Zuversicht, Nun danket alle Gott, etc.; see Langhecker's monograph on C.'s chorals [1835]), he publ. the following collections: Neues vollkömmliches Gesangbuch Augspurgischer Confession . . . (1640); Praxis pietatis melica . . . (1647); Geistliche Kirchenmelodeyen . . . (1649); Dr. M. Luthers wie auch andrer gottseliger christlicher Leute Geistliche Lieder und Psalmen (1657); Psalmodia sacra . . . (1558); the valuable theoretical works Synopsis musica (1630; enlarged 1634); Praecepta musicae figuralis (1625); and Quaestiones musicae practicae (1650).

Cruvel'li (properly Crü'well), two sisters, celebrated contralto stage-singers: (1) Friederike Marie, b. Bielefeld, Westphalia, Aug. 29, 1824; d. there July 26, 1868; a 'natural' singer, who created a furore in London (1851), but failed eventually, from a lack of proper training, and died heart-broken; (2) Johanne Sophie Charlotte, b. Bielefeld, March 12, 1826; d. Monaco, Nov. 6, 1907. Though not well trained, she had a voice of extraordinary beauty, and her début (Venice, 1847) was a triumph; she sang in London in 1848, and went to Paris in 1851, winning great success in Italian opera (Verdi's Ernani), which aided her to obtain full recognition in London. In 1854 she was engaged for the Paris Grand Opéra at a yearly salary of 100,000 francs; but her vocal defects became exaggerated. In 1856 she married Comte Vigier, and retired from the stage.

Cucuel [kü-küel'], Georges, b. Dijon, Dec. 14, 1884; pupil at the Sorbonne of R. Rolland; docteur ès lettres, 1913; went to Italy (1914) on a government stipend for musical research. Has publ.: La vie parisienne des princes de Wurtemberg-Béliard (1912), Études sur un orchestre (1913), La Pouplinière et la musique de chambre au XVIII^e siècle (1913), Les créateurs de l'opéra français (1914).

Cui [kwē], César Antonovitch, b. Vilna, Russia, Jan. 6, 1835. Dramatic composer, pupil of Moniuszko and Balakirev. (His profession is military engineering; he is prof. of fortification at the Petrograd Engineering Acad., with the rank of lieutenant-general.) From 1864–8 he was musical critic of the 'Gazette,' and a strong advocate of the neo-German school; in 1878–9 he publ. a series of articles in the Paris 'Revue et Gazette musicale,' on La musique en Russie. With Rimsky-Korsakov, Mussorgsky, et al., he represents the Russian school of so-called 'Innovators' (Novatoren).—Works: The operas The Mandarin's Son (Petrograd, 1859), The Prisoner of the Caucasus (ib., 1859; rewritten 1881), William Ratcliffe (ib., 1869), Angelo (ib., 1876), Le Flibustier (Paris, Op.-Com., 1894), The Saracen (Petrograd, 1899), Mlle. Fifi (ib., 1903), Matteo Falcone, (Moscow, 1908), The Captain's Daughter (Petrograd, 1911); A Feast in Time of Plague, written originally as a dramatic cantata, was produced as a 1-act opera (Moscow, 1901); for orchestra C. wrote Op. 1, Scherzo; op. 2, ditto; op. 12, Tarantella; op. 18, Marche solennelle; op. 20, Suite miniature; op. 38, Suite No. 2; op. 40, Suite No. 3, A Argenteau; op. 43, Suite No. 4, 'In modo populare'; op. 25, Suite concertante, for vln. and orch.; op. 36, 2 pieces for vcl. and orch.; 25 choruses for male, female and mixed voices, with instr. accomp., and a capp.; over 200 songs (Russian, German and French); numerous pieces for pf. (Valses, Polonaises, Impromptus, Miniatures, etc.; some also are arranged for orch.); op. 45, string-quartet, in C m.—Cf. Comtesse Mercy-Argenteau, C. C. Esquisse critique (Paris, 1888); P. Weimarn, C. C. as Song-writer (Petrograd, 1897; in Russian).

Culbertson, Sasha, remarkable violinist; b. U. S. (?), Dec. 29, 1893. He received his first instruction on the violin from Suchorukov, and at the age of 9 entered the Rostov Cons.; 1905–8, pupil of Ševčik in Prague; sensational début at Vienna, 1908; made tours of Germany and England, meeting everywhere with extraordinary success. In spite of his youth many critics have compared him to Paganini, inasmuch as he accomplishes technical feats regarded ordinarily as impossible.

Culp [kŭlp], Julia, b. Groningen, Oct. 6, 1881. She received her first musical instruction on the violin, and made such progress that before her fourteenth year she appeared in public in her native town. When she discovered that she had an unusual voice (contralto), she lost interest in her instrument, and became a pupil of Cornelia van Zanten at the Cons. in Amsterdam (1897); two years later she went to Berlin, and, although meeting with success in her first recital there, determined on further study with Etelka Gerster. She then made her real début in Magdeburg, in 1901, at a concert with Busoni; at her next recital in Berlin, in 1902, she received an ovation, and her subsequent tours of Germany, Austria, the Netherlands, France, Spain and Russia were a series of uninterrupted triumphs, establishing her fame as one of the greatest of lieder-singers. Her American début took place at New York, Jan. 10, 1913, and before the end of the season she had been heard with all the large symphony orchestras and in numerous recitals; her reception everywhere was but a repetition of her European triumphs; since then she has visited the United States every season. Her tastes and sympathies are universal, for she interprets with equal mastery works of widely different periods and styles. She was among the very first to champion the cause of Hugo Wolf, and has done much toward winning due recognition for his songs. In the interpretation of his works she had for several seasons as her accompanist—or, rather, assisting artist—Dr. Heinrich Potpeschnigg, the intimate friend of Wolf. For some time Erich Wolff was her pianist; since his death (1913) she has appeared with Coenraad Bos.—In private life Mme. C. is Mrs. Erich Merten, and lives in Berlin.

Culwick, James C., b. W. Bromwich, Staffordshire, 1845; d. Dublin, Oct. 5, 1907. Pupil of T. Bedsmore; asst.-org. at Lichfield Cath., and organist at various churches until 1881, when he was app. to the Chapel Royal at Dublin, where he remained till his death; also prof. of pf. and theory at Alexandra College, and cond. of the Harmonic Soc. and Orpheus; Mus. Doc. (hon. c.) from Dublin Univ., 1893. He wrote a dramatic cantata, The Legend of Stauffenberg (1890); Psalm 104, for soli, chorus and orch.; a pf.-quartet in E♭; sonata in D, for organ; a concert-overture for orch.: pf.-pieces (suite, ballade, sonatina, etc.); several anthems and church-services; author of Rudiments of Music (1880; 2d ed. 1882), The Study of Music and Its Place in General Education (1882), The Works of Sir R. Stewart (1902).

Cummings, William Hayman, b. Sidbury, Devon, Engl., Aug. 22, 1831; d. London, June 10, 1915. Chorister in London at St. Paul's (under Hawes), and at the Temple Ch. (under Hopkins); organist of Waltham Abbey; tenor singer in the Temple, Westminster Abbey, and Chapel Royal; prof. of singing at the R. College for the Blind, Norwood, London; in 1882, conductor of the Sacred Harmonic Society; in 1896, elected principal of Guildhall School of Music; degree Mus. Doc. (hon. c.) conferred by Univ. of Dublin, 1900. He was a cultivated singer, and a profound antiquarian; was the founder of the Purcell Society, edited its first publications, and was the author of a biography of Purcell (London, 1882); also published a Primer of the Rudiments of Music (1877), and a Biogr. Dictionary of Musicians (1892); contrib. to Grove's Dictionary. His library of 4,500 volumes contained many rare autographs. His compositions include a cantata, The Fairy King, sacred music, glees, part-songs, songs, etc.

Cunningham, Claude, concert-baritone and lieder-singer; b. Manchester, Va., March 26, 1880. While pursuing his studies at the Ohio State Univ., he also had his voice cultivated; he abandoned medicine, continued his vocal studies in New York with T. J. Toedt, then in Paris with Sbriglia and Granier; début in New York, Nov. 1, 1903, at the first concert of Mme. Patti's last tour of America; he appeared with the diva throughout her five-months' tour, and he claims that this close association was equivalent to years of experience; since then he has been a favorite concert-singer, having been heard with all the important orchestras and at the great festivals; has made succ. tours of England (1904) and Germany (1908); in 1908 and 1914 he won much applause in his joint recitals (duets) with Mme. Rider-Kelsey; at the Amer. première of Elgar's Kingdom (1907) he created the part of Peter; his repertory includes the standard oratorios, Elijah and Samson and Delilah being his favorites. He has refused various offers for operatic engagements, because he believes that the concert-field offers music of a higher type. His voice has a rich, sympathetic quality and ranges from G–b^{1}♭. Interesting observations explaining C.'s attitude toward art are found in his book The World-Spirit, and Other Essays (1916).

Curci [koor'chē], Giuseppe, b. Barletta, June 15, 1808; d. there Aug. 5, 1877. Pupil of Furno, Zingarelli, and Crescentini at Naples Cons. from 1823; here he wrote 2 masses a 4 w. orch., and several operas. At Turin he prod. the opera Il Proscritto (1837); at Venice Don Desiderio (1837), and L'Uragano; lived in Vienna for some years as a famous singing-teacher; travelled in Germany and Belgium; taught in Paris 1848–56, where Il Baccelliere was produced; and then returned to Barletta. Also publ. considerable sacred music, solfeggî, and a text-book, Il bel canto.

Curry, Arthur Mansfield, b. Chelsea, Mass., Jan. 27, 1866. Studied with Franz Kneisel (vln.) and Ed. MacDowell (comp.). At present (1916) teacher of harm. at New England Cons.; taught in Berlin (1914).—Works: Blomidon, overt. for orch.; Atala, fantasie after Châteaubriand (1912); The Winning of Amarac, for reader w. ch. of women's vcs. and orch.; Elegie, overture for orch.; also songs, pf.-pieces, and part-songs.

Cursch-Bühren, (Franz) Theodor, b. Troppau, Jan. 10, 1859; d. Leipzig, March 11, 1908. Pupil of Succo in Berlin and Oscar Paul in Leipzig. After two years as conductor at Worms, Trier, etc., he settled in Leipzig (1898) as editor of the 'Chorgesang' and critic for the 'Tageblatt.'—Works: The Singspiele Das Rosel vom Schwarzwald, Ein Tag im Pensionnat, Die Wilddiebe, Die Schmiede im Walde, Ein Studentenstreich, Emol As (a parody on Strauss' Salome); male choruses; orchl. and pf.-pieces.

Curschmann [kŏŏrsh'], Karl Friedrich, b. Berlin, June 21, 1804; d. Langfuhr, n. Danzig, Aug. 24, 1841. Originally a law-student, he devoted himself from 1824 to music, studying under Hauptmann and Spohr at Kassel, where his 1-act opera Abdul und Erinnieh was prod. in 1828. Subsequently he settled in Berlin as a singer (also making tours in Germany, France, and Italy) and extremely popular song-writer; his 'Gesammelte Lieder' (Berlin, 1871) comprise 83 songs for single voice, and 9 duets and trios. Other works: Romeo, scena and aria (op. 6); 2 Canons a 3 (op. 7).— Cf. G. Meissner, K. F. C. (Bautzen, 1899).

Curti [kŏŏr'tē], Franz [Francesco], b. Kassel, Nov. 16, 1854; d. Dresden, Feb. 6, 1898. At first a medical student at Berlin and Geneva (he was a dentist by profession), he took up the study of music in Dresden, under Kretschmer and Schulz-Beuthen.—Operas: Hertha (Altenburg, 1887); Reinhard von Ufenau (ib., 1888); Erlöst (Mannheim, 1894, 1 act); melodrama Schneefried (ib., 1895); 1-act Japanese fairy-opera Lili-Tsee (ib., 1896; New York, 1898); Das Rösli vom Säntis (Zurich, 1898). Also Die Gletscherjungfrau for soli, ch. and orch.; and music to Die letzten Menschen, by W. E. Kirchbach.

Curtis, Natalie, writer and lecturer on folk-music; b. New York City. Studied in New York under Arthur Friedheim; also at Nat. Cons., New York City; then with Busoni in Berlin, Alfred Giraudet in Paris, Kapellm. Wolf in Bonn, and Julius Kniese at the 'Wagner-Schule' in Bayreuth. Indians; author and lecturer.—Works: The Indian's Book (1907; a collection of 200 songs of 18 different tribes); Songs of Ancient America; songs from A Child's Garden of Verse; etc.

Curwen, Rev. John, b. Heckmondwike, Yorkshire, Engl., Nov. 14, 1816; d. Heaton Mersey House, near Manchester, May 26, 1880. In 1844 he was pastor at Plaistow, Essex. Becoming interested in Miss S. A. Glover's 'Tonic Sol-fa' system of teaching, he labored to improve it, founded associations in 1853, and the Tonic Sol-fa College in 1862, resigning his pastorate in 1867 to devote himself entirely to propagating the system. He later established the 'Tonic Sol-fa Reporter,' and a publishing-house, in London.—

His numerous publications relate chiefly to Tonic Sol-fa (issued by Novello).—Cf. J. S. Curwen, Memorials of J. C. (London, 1882).

Curwen, John Spencer, son of the Rev. John C.; b. Plaistow, Sept. 30, 1847; d. London, Aug. 6, 1916. Pupil of his father and G. Oakey; later of G. A. Macfarren, Sullivan and Prout at the R. A. M. Active promoter of the Tonic Sol-fa system, and of vocal teaching in the schools; Pres. of the Tonic Sol-fa College in 1880; frequent contributor to the 'Tonic Sol-fa Reporter' ('Musical Herald'). Cuzzo'ni [kŏŏts-], Francesca, renowned dram. contralto; b. Parma, 1700; d. Bologna, 1770. She was a pupil of Lanzi; sang with great success in Italy (Venice, 1719), and 1722–6 in London under Handel's direction in his operas, when she was supplanted by Faustina Bordoni, and went over to the opposition, singing until 1827 in bitter rivalry with the Bordoni. She then married the pianist and composer Sandoni; was eng. at Vienna, in Italy, and Holland (where she was imprisoned for debt), and again appeared in London (1748), but wholly without success. It is said that she then returned to Italy, earned her living in her old age by covering silk buttons, and died in abject poverty.

Czartoryska [tchar-tŏh-rü'skăh], Marcelline (née Princess Radziwill), b. Vienna, May 18, 1817; d. at her castle, n. Cracow, June 8, 1894. Lived from 1848 in Paris; a distinguished pianist (pupil of Czerny).

Czernohor'sky [chär-], Bohuslav, born Nimburg, Bohemia, Feb. 26, 1684; d. Graz, July 2, 1740. A Minorite monk, he was choirmaster at S. Antonio, Padua, and circa 1715 organist at Assisi (Tartini was one of his pupils). Returning to Bohemia, he was Kapellm. at the Teinkirche, Prague, and (1735) at St. James'. His comps. are sung in all Bohemian churches. Many MSS. were lost at the burning of the Minorite monastery (1754). An offertory a 4, and several organ-fugues and preludes, were published by O. Schmid in 'Orgelwerke altböhmischer Meister.'

Czerny (Černý) [chär'nē], Karl, an eminent pianist and pedagogue; b. Vienna, Feb. 21, 1791; d. there July 15, 1857. His father, Wenzel C., was his first teacher; later he had lessons of Beethoven, of whom he was an especial favorite; he also learned much from association with Clementi and Hummel. As a pianist and teacher he became celebrated at an early age; but a European tour arranged for 1804 had to be given up on account of the troublous times, and C. soon renounced playing in public, devoting himself to teaching and composing. Except pleasure-trips to Leipzig (1836), Paris and London (1837), and Lombardy (1846), he remained all his life in Vienna. As a teacher his success was remarkable from his 16th year; Ninette von Belleville (Mme. B.-Oury), Liszt, Döhler, Thalberg, Jaëll, and many other pupils, testify to his proficient training. As a composer, he publ. over 1,000 works, of which his pf.-studies were of lasting value: Die Schule der Geläufigkeit (op. 299), Die Schule des Legato und Staccato (op. 335), Tägliche Studien (op. 337), Schule der Verzierungen (op. 355), Die Schule des Virtuosen (op. 365), Die Schule der linken Hand (op. 399), Die Schule des Fugenspiels (op. 400), Die Schule der Fingerfertigkeit (op. 740), etc., etc.— Other compositions, many in MS., were of a varied description: Church-music, such as masses, requiems, graduals, offertories; symphonies, overtures, concertos, string-quartets and trios, songs, etc.; besides innumerable arrangements. He wrote an Umriss der ganzen Musikgeschichte (Mayence, 1851), and an autobiography.

Has also publ. Studien bei Bülow (1898); Betrachtungen über Franz Liszt (1898); Geschichte des Klavierkonzerts (as a program-book to Busoni's concerts); essays on Alkan; critical articles in the 'Kunstwart,' 'Klavierlehrer,' 'Bayreuther Blätter,' etc.

Dam'rosch, Frank, son of Leopold D.; b. Breslau, June 22, 1859. Pupil of Pruckner, Jean Vogt, and von Inten (pf.) and of his father and Moszkowski (comp.). 1882–5, cond. of Denver (Col.) Chorus Club, and (1884–5) Supervisor of Music in public schools, also org. at different churches. 1885–91, Chorusmaster at Metr. Opera House, New York, and till 1887 cond. the Newark Harmonic Society; in 1892 he organized the People's Singing-Classes (an enterprise, for the popularization of choral singing, which has borne good fruits), for which he publ. in 1894 a Popular Method of Sight-Singing (G. Schirmer, N. Y.); from 1897–1904 he was Supervisor of Music in the N. Y. City Public Schools; cond. 'Musurgia' (1891–1900), 'Orpheus' and 'Eurydice' clubs of Phila. (1897–1905), 'Oratorio Society' (1898–1912), 'Mendelssohn Glee Club' (1904–9). In 1893 he founded the 'Musical Art Society,' a chorus of 60 trained voices for the performance of a cappella music; in 1898 the 'Symph.-Concerts for Young People' (these last two he still [1916] conducts). In 1905 he organized a splendidly equipped cons., the 'Institute of Musical Art,' of which he is still the director; has also conducted various other associations. —D. has publ. a few vocal numbers (songs, choruses). He received the degree of Mus. Doc. (hon. c.) from Yale Univ. in 1904.

Dam'rosch, Dr. Leopold, b. Posen, Oct. 22, 1832; d. New York, Feb. 15, 1885. Conductor and violinist, a pupil of Ries, Dehn, and Böhmer; took the degree of Dr. med. (M. D.) at Berlin University in 1854, but then, against his parents' wishes, embraced the career of a musician; he appeared at first as a solo violinist in several German cities, later as a conductor at minor theatres, and in 1855 procured, through Liszt, the position of solo violinist in the Grand Ducal orch. at Weimar. While here he was intimate with Liszt and many of his most distinguished pupils, and also won Wagner's life-long friendship. Here, too, he married the singer Helene von Heimburg (b. Oldenburg, 1835; d. N. Y., Nov. 21, 1904). In 1859–60, D. was cond. of the Breslau Philh. Concerts; gave up the post to make tours with v. Bülow and Tausig; organized the Breslau Orchestral Soc.(still flourishing; present cond. [1916] Dr. Dohrn) in 1862. Besides this, he founded quartet soirées, and a choral society; conducted the Society for Classical Music, and the theatre orch. (for 2 years); and frequently appeared as a solo violinist. In 1871 he was called to New York to conduct the Arion Society, and made his début, on May 6th, as conductor, composer, and violinist. In New York his remarkable capacity as an organizer (which had aroused active opposition in Breslau by his strong leaning towards the new German school) found free scope; besides bringing the 'Arion' to the highest pitch of efficiency and prosperity, he founded the Oratorio Society in 1873, and the Symphony Soc. in 1878, the latter's concerts succeeding those of the Thomas Orch. at Steinway Hall. In 1880 Columbia Coll. conferred on him the degree of Mus. Doc.; in 1881 he conducted the first great Mus. Fest. held in N. Y., with an orch. of 250 and a chorus of 1,200; in 1883 he made a highly successful western tour with his orch.; in 1884–5 he cond. a season of German opera at the Metropolitan Opera House (giving Tannhäuser, Lohengrin, Walküre, etc.), which will ever remain memorable in the mus. annals of America as the beginning of the final triumph of Wagner's art in the new world.—Works: 7 cantatas; symphony in A; music to Schiller's Joan of Arc; marches for orch.; 3 violin-concertos (in D min., F♯ min., and G); several pieces for vln. and orch., and for solo voice and orch.; choruses for mixed voices and male voices; duets; many songs.

Villot; The Music of the Future] (1873), Beethoven (1880), Über das Dirigiren (1885); and wrote many articles for mus. papers, and gave lectures on Beethoven, Mozart and Chopin; comp. pf.-pcs., and songs. D. visited the United States several times.

Dann'reuther, Gustav, violinist, brother of Edward; b. Cincinnati, July 21, 1853; studied 1871–4 at the Hochschule für Musik, Berlin, under de Ahna and Joachim (vln.), and Heitel (theory); lived in London till 1877, and then joined the Boston (Mass.) Mendelssohn Quintette Club, travelling through the U. S., Canada and Newfoundland until 1880, when he settled in Boston as a member of the newly formed Symphony Orch. From 1882–4 he was director of the Buffalo (N. Y.) Philh. Society (a chamber-music organization), and during this period gave 60 chamber-concerts. In 1884 he founded the 'Beethoven String-Quartette' of N. Y. (renamed 'Dannr. Q.' in 1894). Was for 3 years leader of the N. Y. Symphony and Oratorio Societies under Walter Damrosch. Since 1899 he has devoted himself exclusively to chamber-music (in which his quartet is one of the best in New York) and private teaching; since 1907 also instructor in music at Vassar College.—He has published a set of Chord- and Scale-Studies for young players.

Dan'zi, Franz, b. Mannheim, May 15, 1763; d. Karlsruhe, April 13, 1826. Son and pupil of Innocenz D. ['cellist in the Elector's orch.]; studied comp. with Abbé Vogler. He joined the orch. on its removal to Munich in 1778; in 1779 he prod. a melodrama, Cleopatra, at Mannheim; in 1780 an operetta, Azakia, at Munich. He became asst.-Kapellm. in 1798; was from 1807–8 Kapellm. at Stuttgart, then at Karlsruhe.—Dram. works: Cleopatra; Azakia; Der Triumph der Treue (Munich, 1781); Die Sylphe (1782); Der Kuss (1799); Die Mitternacht-Stunde (1801); Der Quasimann; Elbondokani; Iphigenia in Aulis (1807); Malvina; Turandot (Karlsruhe, circa 1815).—1 oratorio, 2 cantatas; masses; the 128th Psalm for 4 parts and orch.; symphonies, quintets, quartets, concertos, sonatas. He was an excellent singing-teacher, and wrote vocal exercises, choruses, songs, etc.—Cf. E. Reipschläger, Schubaur, Danzi und Poissl als Opernkomponisten (Rostock, 1911). —See also Q.-Lex.

Da Ponte, Lorenzo, b. Ceneda, n. Venice, March 10, 1749; d. New York, Aug. 17, 1838. Prof. of rhetoric at Treviso; court poet at Vienna until 1792, where he wrote the libretti of Mozart's Don Giovanni and Così fan tutte; lived in London as a teacher of Italian, and poet to the Italian opera; went to New York in 1805. After disastrous business ventures, with intervals of teaching, he became interested in various operatic enterprises. In his last years he was teacher of Italian at Columbia College. Publ. Memorie (4 vols., N. Y., 1823–7).—Cf. A. Marchesan, Della vita e delle opere di L. da P. (Treviso, 1900).

Daquin [dăh-kăn'], Louis-Claude, b. Paris, July 4, 1694; d. there June 15, 1772. Pupil of Marchand, and at 6 played on the clavecin before Louis XIV; at 12 became org. at St.-Antoine, where his playing attracted crowds. From 1727 till death he was organist at St.-Paul, winning the position in competition with Rameau.—Publ. a book of Pièces de clavecin, another of Noëls (reprinted by Guilmant in 'Archives des maîtres de l'orgue'), and a cantata, La Rose; left in MS. organ-pieces and other compositions.

Darcours, Charles. See RÉTY.

Dargomyzhsky [-müzh'-], Alexander Sergievitch, composer and pianist; b. in the government of Toula, Russia, February 14, 1813; d. Petrograd, Jan. 17, 1869. From 1817 he lived in Petrograd; his teacher was Schoberlechner. At 20 he was a brilliant pianist; from 1831–5 he held a government position, but then devoted himself exclusively to music, studying assiduously for 8 years; visited Germany, Brussels, and Paris in 1845, and at Moscow (1847) prod. an opera, Esmeralda (written 1839), with great success. From 1845–55 he publ. over 100 minor works (vocal romances, ballads, airs, and duos; waltzes, fantasias, etc.); in 1856 he brought out his best opera, Russalka, at Petrograd; in 1867, at Moscow, an opera-ballet, The Triumph of Bacchus (written in 1847); a posthumous opera, Kamenoï Gost ('The Stone Guest,' after Pushkin's poem Don Juan), was scored by Rimsky-Korsakov, and produced at Petrograd in 1872; of Rogdana, a fantasy-opera, only a few scenes were sketched. At first a follower of Rossini and Auber, D.'s studies of more modern works rendered him an enthusiastic disciple of neo-German ideas; in The Stone Guest, vocal declamation (recitative) supplants the aria, and musical form generally is abandoned.—D. was elected President of the Russian Mus. Soc. in 1867. His orchestral works (Finnish Fantasia, Cossack Dance, Baba-Jaga, etc.) enjoy wide popularity.—Cf. N. Findeisen, A. S. D. His Life and Work (Moscow, 1904 [in Russian]); S. B. Fried, A. S. D. (Petrograd, 1913 [in Russian]).

Da'ser (Das'ser, Das'serus), Ludwig, b. Munich, circa 1525; d. Stuttgart, March 27, 1589. Predecessor of Orlandus Lassus as Kapellm. at Munich to Duke Albert V of Bavaria; held that post until 1559.—Publ. works: A Passion a 4 (1578), and a few motets in the Orgeltabulaturbuch of J. Paix.—MSS., in Royal Library at Munich, of 11 masses, 4 motets, 3 Nunc dimittis, hymns, etc.

Daube [dow'bĕ], Johann Friedrich, b. Kassel (Augsburg?), 1730; d. Vienna, September 19, 1797. Chamber-musician to the Duke of Württemberg, later secretary to the Augsburg Acad. of Sciences. Publ. Generalbass in drei Accorden . . . (Leipzig, 1756; the '3 chords' are the tonic triad, the subdom. with added sixth, and the dom. seventh-chord; Marpurg attacked this work in the 'Hist.-krit. Beiträge,' vol. ii); Anleitung zum Selbstunterricht in der Composition . . . (Vienna, 1798, in 2 parts).

Daublaine et Callinet [doh-blān' ā kăhl-lē-nā']. Firm of Paris organ-builders, founded 1838 as 'Daublaine et Cie.' Daublaine was the business partner, Callinet the practical mechanician, Danjou (q. v.) an intelligent and progressive theorist. After a quarrel in 1843, Callinet demolished the new work partly finished for the organ of St.-Sulpice, dissolved the partnership, and entered Cavaillé's workshops. The firm-name became 'Ducroquet et Cie.' in 1845, and 'Merklin, Schütze et Cie.' in 1855. The principal factory is at Lyons, with a Paris branch.

Daudet [doh-dā'], Alphonse, the distinguished novelist and dramatist; b. Nîmes, May 13, 1840; d. Paris, Dec. 16, 1897. He wrote the libretti for Bizet's l'Arlésienne, Poise's Les Absents, and Pessard's Le Char; his Sapho, dramatized (but clumsily), was set to music by Massenet.—His Arlésienne has been Italianized, as an opera-libretto, by L. Marenco; and this L'Arlesiana, set to music by Francesco Cilèa, was brought out successfully at Milan, 1897.

Dauney, William, b. Aberdeen, Oct. 27, 1800; d. Georgetown, Demerara, July 28, 1843. In the Advocates' Libr. at Edinburgh he discovered what is now known as the 'Skene MS.', a collection of 114 Engl. and Scotch dances, ballads and songs (written in tablature between 1614-20), containing the oldest known (and probably orig.) versions of John Anderson my Jo, The Flowers of the Forest, etc. D. transcribed these into modern notation, and publ. them, in 1838, as Ancient Scottish Melodies from a MS. of the reign of James VI, together with a Dissertation illustrative of the history of music of Scotland.

Dauprat [doh-prăh'], Louis-François, a celebrated horn-player, teacher, and comp. for horn; b. Paris, May 24, 1781; d. there July 16, 1868. At first a choir-boy in the maîtrise of Notre-Dame, his teacher in the Cons. was Kenn; in 6 months he joined the band of the 'Garde Nationale', and in 1799 the band of the 'Garde des Consuls', with which he passed through the Egyptian campaign. From 1801–5 he studied theory at the Cons. under Catel and Gossec, and studied again with Reicha from 1811–14; 1806–8, first horn at the Bordeaux Th.; succeeded Kenn in the Opéra-orch., and Duvernoy (as cor solo), retiring in 1831. He was chamber-mus. to Napoleon (1811), and Louis XVIII (1816); in 1816 he was app. prof. of horn in the Cons., resigning the post in 1842.—Publ. Méthode pour cor alto et cor basse; horn-concertos, and chamber-music with horn-parts. In MS. he left symphonies, a Method of Harmony, a Théorie analytique de la musique, etc.

Dauriac [doh-r'yăhk'], Lionel-Alexandre, b. Brest, Finisterre, Nov. 19, 1847. Grad. from the École Normale Supérieure of Brest, 1867; Docteur ès Lettres, Paris, 1878 (with the dissertations Des Notions de Matière et de Force dans les Sciences de la Nature and De Heraclito Ephesio); in 1871 instr. of Philosophy at the lycée of Pontivy; do. at Brest, 1872–9; at Lyons, 1879–81; adj.-prof. Philosophy Univ. of Toulouse, 1881–2; prof. at Univ. of Montpellier, 1882–99; honorary prof. since 1900; cond. at the Sorbonne, 1896–1903, a course on Mus. Esthetics and Psychology; Chevalier of Legion of Honor; Officier de l'Instruction Publique; Laureate of the Acad. of Moral and Political Sciences (awarded Prix Gegner, 1916); 1st Pres. of Paris section of I.M.S.; since 1907, Hon. Pres. Besides many works dealing with philosophy, he has publ. the following concerning music: Introduction à la Psychologie du Musicien (Paris, 1891), La Psychologie dans l'opéra français (ib., 1897), Essai sur l'esprit musical (ib., 1904), Rossini, biographie critique (ib., 1906), Le Musicien-poète Richard Wagner (ib., 1908), Meyerbeer (ib., 1913).

Daussoigne-Méhul [doh-swähñ'mā-ül'], Louis-Joseph, b. Givet, Ardennes, June 10, 1790; d. Liège, March 10, 1875. Pupil of Catel and Méhul at the Cons.; took the Grand prix de Rome in 1809; after writing 4 operas, which were rejected, he at length produced his 1-act Aspasie at the Grand-Opéra (1820) with moderate success. He did still better with Valentine de Milan, a 3-act opera left unfinished by Méhul, which he completed; but his former ill-success had discouraged him. In 1827 he accepted the directorship of Liège Cons., which he retained, with great benefit to the school, until 1862. B. was an associate of the Royal Acad., Brussels, and publ. mus. essays on its reports of meetings. He brought out a cantata w. full orch. in 1828, and a choral symphony (Une journée de la Révolution) in 1834.

Dauvergne [doh-värñ'], Antoine, b. Clermont-Ferrand, Oct. 4, 1713; d. Lyons, Feb. 12, 1797. He received his first instruction from his father, went for further study to Paris, in 1739, and was app. vlnst. in the R. orch. (1741); 1755 app. comp. to the R. orch.; 1762 cond. of 'Concerts Spirituels'; after 1769 as cond. and manager of various enterprises, until his retirement to Lyons in 1790. He introduced into France the forms of the Italian intermezzo, substituting spoken dialogue for the recitative, and thus was the originator of a style that soon became typical of French dram. composition. He wrote 15 operas, the first of which was prod. at Paris in 1753 (Les Troqueurs), and is regarded as the first 'opéra comique'; wrote also 2 books of symphs.; 12 sonatas for vln. w. basso cont.; trios for 2 vlns. w. b. c.; 15 anthems, and several Airs.—See Q.-Lex.

Davenport, Francis William, b. Wilderslowe, n. Derby, Engl., 1847; st. law at Oxford, but preferred music, and became the pupil (later son-in-law) of Sir G. A. Macfarren. In 1879, prof. at the R. A. M., and at the Guildhall School of Mus. in 1882.—Works: 2 symphonies (1. in D minor, won 1st prize at Alex. Palace, 1876; 2. in C major); overture for orch., Twelfth Night; Prelude and Fugue for orch.; 6 pieces for pf. and 'cello; Pictures on a Journey, a series of pf.-pieces; part-songs and songs; also wrote Elements of Music (1884), and Elements of Harm. and Cpt. (1886).

Davey, Henry, b. Brighton, Nov. 29, 1853. Entered Leipzig Cons. in 1874, devoting himself chiefly to theoretical studies: lived for several years in Brighton as teacher. Publ. The Student's Musical History (London, 1891; 2d ed. 1899), a preparation for the larger History of English Music (London, 1895), a valuable work, the result of original research covering the modern period beginning with Purcell. D. is contrib. to several mus. journals, and to the Dict. of Nat. Biogr.

David [dah-vēd'], Adolphe-Isaac, born Nantes, 1842; d. Paris, June 24, 1897. Composer.—Works: 3 pantomimes, La statue du Commandeur and Pierrot surpris (both succ. in 1891 at the 'Nouveautés'), and Le fiancé de cire (Paris, 1894); also a comic opera, Diana de Sparre (Nantes); many pf.-pieces (La Pluie, etc.).

David, Ernest, b. Nancy, July 4, 1844; d. Paris, June 3, 1886. From 1862 he studied music under Fétis; was a contributor to several musical journals; publ. an essay in 1873, La Musique chez les Juifs, and wrote with Lussy an Histoire de la notation musicale depuis ses origines (1882). Also publ. La vie et les œuvres de J. S. Bach (1882).

David [dah-vēd'], Félicien (-César), distinguished composer; b. Cadenet, Vaucluse, Apr. 13, 1810; d. St.-Germain-en-Laye, Aug. 29, 1876. Of remarkably precocious talent, he was taught in the maîtrise of Saint-Sauveur at Aix from 1817–25. He had a beautiful voice, and composed hymns, motets, and other music. He then studied in the Jesuit college for 3 years; became asst.-cond. in the th. at Aix, and in 1829 m. de chap. at St.-Sauveur; but an unconquerable longing to widen his musical horizon drew him to Paris (1830), where he submitted specimens of composition to Cherubini, and was admitted to the Cons., studying harm. with Reber and Millot, and cpt. and fugue with Fétis. In 1831, when the meagre allowance given him by a rich and avaricious uncle had been withdrawn, he joined the socialistic movement of the Saint-Simonists at Ménilmontant; here he composed a series of 4-part hymnes for men's voices (later publ. with the words, as the Ruche harmonieuse). On the dispersion of the society in 1833, D. went to Marseilles with a group of the brotherhood, giving concerts on the way; they proceeded to Constantinople, Smyrna, and Egypt, where they finally dispersed; and, with an imagination powerfully stimulated by his long sojourn in the East, D. returned alone to Paris in 1835. He now publ. a collection of Mélodies orientales; they met with small success, and he retired to the house of a friend in the country, giving himself up to study and composition (2 symphonies, 24 small string-quintets, 2 nonets for wind, romances, etc.). In 1838 his 1st symphony (in F) was prod.; and at last (1844) he reaped the fruit of so many years' toil and study, his symphonic ode Le Désert being received, at its first performance in the hall of the Cons., with 'delirious' applause, and a series of repetitions given at the Salle Ventadour for a month, to crowded houses. The oratorio Moïse au Sinai followed in 1846, but, like a second symphonic ode Christophe Colomb, and l'Éden (a 'mystery' in 2 parts, Grand Opéra, 1848), met with a cool reception. However, his opera La Perle du Brésil (Th.-Lyrique, 1851) was brilliantly successful; a second, La fin du monde, was rejected by the Grand Op., and later (though after long rehearsals) by the Th.-Lyrique; the Grand Op. took it up in 1859 as Herculanéum, and for this opera the great state prize of 20,000 frs. was awarded to D. in 1867. Lalla Rookh (1862) and Le Saphir (1865) were given at the Opéra-Comique (the former with great success, the latter with scarcely a 'succès d'estime'). D. now abandoned dram. comp., withdrawing his last opera, La Captive. In 1869 he was elected Académicien, taking Berlioz's chair, and succeeding him also as librarian of the Cons.—Besides the above works, he wrote 12 melodies for 'cello; Les Brises d'Orient, pf.-pieces; Les Minarets, 3 pf.-pieces; Les Perles d'Orient, 6 melodies for voice and pf.; etc.—Biography by A. Azevedo: F. D., sa vie et son œuvre (Paris, 1863); R. Brancour, F. D. (Paris, 1911); J. G. Prod'homme, F. D. d'après sa correspondance inédite (in 'Mercure Musical,' nos. 2, 3; 1907); C. Bellaigue, F. D., in Études musicales et nouvelles silhouettes (Paris, 1898).

Da'vid, Ferdinand, eminent violinist and pedagogue; b. Hamburg, Jan. 19, 1810; d. on a mountain-trip near Klosters, Switzerland, July 18, 1873. From 1823–4 he studied with Spohr and Hauptmann at Kassel; played in the Gewandhaus, Leipzig, in 1825; and in 1827 became a member of the Königstadt Theatre orch. in Berlin. In 1829 he was first violin in the private quartet of a wealthy and influential amateur (Baron von Liphardt) at Dorpat, whose daughter he married; he remained in Russia till 1835, winning fame by frequent concerts in Petrograd, Moscow, Riga, etc. At Mendelssohn's instance he was app. leader of the Gewandhaus orch., 1836. In this position and in the wider field of activity opened by the establishment of the Cons. in 1843, D. found ample opportunity for the development of his remarkable gifts. While he lived, the Leipzig Cons. was looked upon as the finishing-school of violinists; over the playing of the Gewandhaus orch. he presided with the rigor of a martinet, and the tradition of his teachings is still a living force in that chosen band. Obeyed with fear and trembling as a drill-master, and admired as a virtuoso 'combining the sterling qualities of Spohr's style with the greater facility and piquancy of the modern school,' he was revered as the teacher of the most distinguished violinists of the time, among them being Wilhelmj and Joachim. As a quartet-player he was nearly unrivalled; as an orchl. leader he had a wonderful faculty of inspiring the players with his own enthusiasm. His student editions of classical works embrace nearly all compositions of standard violin-literature; noteworthy is the Hohe Schule des Violinspiels, containing chiefly French and Italian masterpieces of the 17th and 18th centuries. Mendelssohn was his warm friend, frequently asking his advice and deferring to his judgment; a remarkable instance of this being M.'s violin-concerto, during the writing of which D. was continually consulted.—Works: 1 opera, Hans Wacht (Leipzig, 1852); 2 symphonies; 5 vln.-concertos; a sextet, a quartet, and other chamber-music; variations, capriccios, rondos, and other vln.-pieces; Bunte Reihe, pieces for pf. and vln. (transcribed for pf. by Liszt); his Violinschule is still unexcelled.—Cf. J. Eckard, F. D. u. die Familie Mendelssohn (Leipzig, 1889).

Da'vid, Peter Paul, son of Ferd. D.; b. Leipzig, Aug. 1, 1840; was leader of the Karlsruhe orch. 1862–5, and for many years teacher of violin at Uppingham, Engl.; now (1916) living in Oxford.

David, Samuel, b. Paris, Nov. 12, 1836; d. there Oct. 3, 1895. Pupil, in Cons., of Bazin and Halévy; Grand prix de Rome, 1858, for cantata Jephtha; 1859, prize for work for male ch. and orch., Le Génie de la terre, perf. by chorus of 6,000 singers. 1861, prof. at Collège de Sainte-Barbe; 1872, music-director in Jewish Synagogues of Paris.—Operas (all given in Paris): 1-act operetta La Peau de l'ours (1858); Mademoiselle Sylvia, 1 act (1868); Tu l'as voulu, 1 act (1869); Le bien d'autrui (1869); Un Caprice de Ninon (1871); La Fée des Bruyères, 3 acts (1878). Not performed: Les Chevaliers du poignard, Une Dragonnade, La Gageure, l'Éducation d'un Prince, Les Changeurs, Absalon, and I Maccabei (in Italian). Also, an 'ode-symphonie,' Le Triomphe de la Paix (1878, his best-known work); 4 symphonies, several choruses, many songs, and a theoretico-practical work, L'Art de jouer en mesure (Paris, 1862).

Da'vidov, Karl, 'cellist; b. Goldingen, Kurland, March 17, 1838; d. Moscow, Feb. 27, 1889. Pupil of H. Schmidt in Moscow ('cello), and C. Schubert at Petrograd, later studying comp. with Hauptmann at Leipzig. His début at the Gewandhaus (1859) was so successful that he was eng. as first 'cello, and also succeeded Fr. Grützmacher as teacher in the Cons. In 1862 he was app. solo 'cellist to the Russian Emperor, and in the orch. of the Russian Music Soc.; and also in the Petrograd Cons., becoming Director in 1876 (resigned 1887).—Works: Concertos, a ballade, and a song without words, for 'cello; pf.-pieces; chamber-music (pf.-quintet; str.-quartet); a symph. poem, The Gifts of Terek; songs, etc.—Cf. V. Hutor, K. D. und seine Art, das Violoncell zu behandeln (Moscow, 1899).

Davies, Benjamin Grey (generally known as Ben), b. Pontardawe, near Swansea, S. Wales, Jan. 6, 1858. Pupil 1880–3 of Randegger at R. A. M., winning the bronze, silver and gold medals, and the Evill prize for best declamatory Engl. singing; début at Birmingham, Oct. 11, 1881, in The Bohemian Girl; the next three years, with the Carl Rosa Opera Co.; then with several other troupes, mostly in light operas. His success in oratorio at the Norwich Fest. of 1890 caused him to abandon the stage (he appeared only one more season in Sullivan's Ivanhoe and Messager's Basoche), and to devote himself to concert-work, in which he has been very successful; his repertory includes most of the oratorios, cantatas, and concert-work performed in Britain. First visit to America in summer of 1893, and several tours since.

Davies, David Ffrangcon, baritone; b. Bethesda, Carnarvonshire, Dec. 11, 1860. Took degree of M.A. at Oxford and received orders in the Church of England; then studied at Guildhall School, London, and under Wm. Shakespeare. Début in concert Manchester, Jan. 6, 1890; was for some time with the Carl Rosa Company in English opera and created the rôle of Cedric in Sullivan's Ivanhoe (1891). But he has become famous as concert and oratorio singer, having appeared frequently at the principal English festivals. In 1896 he made his first visit to the U. S., and has since then made eleven tours; 1898–1901 he lived in Berlin, meeting with unqualified success on the part of the German public; since 1903 prof. of singing at the R. A. M. He is the author of Singing of the Future (London, 1906).

Davies, Fanny, pianist; b. Guernsey, June 27, 1861; pupil of Reinecke and Paul (pf.) and Jadassohn (theory) in Leipzig Cons. (1882–3), and of Frau Schumann 1883–5 at the Hoch Cons., Frankfort; also of Dr. Scholz in fugue and composition. London début at the Crystal Palace, Oct. 17, 1885; since then she has made succ. tours in England, Germany France and Italy; hon. member of the Acad. of St. Cecilia in Rome. Her répertoire includes over 30 concertos and almost 500 other compositions.

Davies, (Henry) Walford, b. Oswestry, Sept. 6, 1869. At 12 he became chorister in St. George's chapel, Windsor; 1885–90, pupil and asst. of Sir Walter Parratt, and likewise org. of the Park chapel, Windsor. From 1890–4 he held a scholarship in comp. at the R. C. M.; 1890–1, org. and choirmaster at St. Anne's, Soho; 1891–8, org. of Christ Church, Hampstead; in 1898 succeeded E. J. Hopkins as org. of the Temple Church; 1903–7, cond. Bach Choir; 1901–13, cond. London Church Choir Assoc.; 1910–13, examiner for mus. degrees at Oxford and Cambridge; since 1899 contrib. to 'Mus. Record'; and has also appeared frequently as lecturer since 1907. He is a Mus. Bac. (1892); Mus. Doc., Cantab. (1894); LL.D. (hon. c.), Leeds, 1904; in 1894 he qualified as Associate of the R. C. M. for composition; and in 1895 succeeded Rockstro as prof. of cpt. there; also I. R. C. O.—Works: An oratorio, The Temple (1902); 3 symphs., in D (1895), Lift up your hearts, sacred symph. (1906), in G (1912); the cantatas Hervé Riel (1896), Three Jovial Huntsmen (1900), Everyman (1904), Ode on Time (1908), Five Sayings of Jesus (1911), Song of St. Francis (1912); Noble Numbers, a choral suite (1909); 2 overts., Dedication (1893) and Festal (1910); 2 suites for orch., Parthenia (1911), Wordsworth (1913); Holiday Tunes for orch. (1907); Conversations, suites for pf. and orch. (1914); Prospice, for bar. and str.-quartet (1898); Songs of a Day, suite for voices and instrs. (1908); Short Requiem a capp. (1915); considerable chamber-music (3 pf.-quartets, 2 str.-quartets, 3 sonatas for vln. and pf., 1 sonata for horn and pf.); church-music; songs and part-songs; etc.

Davis, John David, b. Edgbaston, Oct. 22, 1869. In spite of musical precocity he was destined for a commercial career, and sent to Frankfort, in 1885, to perfect his German, but studied at the Raff Cons.; the next year, for the purpose of mastering French, he was sent to Brussels, but again entered the Cons., studying with Wallner, de Greef and Kufferath; settled in 1889 as a teacher in Birmingham; 1893–1904, instr. at the Midland Inst.; since 1905 prof. comp. at G. S. M.—Works: For orch., Coronation March (1902); Variations and Finale (1905); The Cenci, symph. ballad; The Maid of Astolat, symph. poem (1910); Miniatures, a suite; overt., Germania; Prelude to Maeterlinck's l'Intruse; str.-quartet in G m.; 2 sonatas for vln. and pf.; a sonata and other works for pf.; songs and part-songs.

Davison, Arabella. See GODDARD.

Davison, James William, b. London, Oct. 5, 1813; d. Margate, March 24, 1885. Pupil of W. H. Holmes (pf.) and Sir G. A. Macfarren (theory). Musical critic; editor of the 'Mus. Examiner' 1842–4, and the 'Mus. World' 1844–85; contributor to the 'Saturday Review,' 'Pall Mall Gazette,' and 'Graphic'; from 1846–79, the influential critic of 'The Times.' In 1860 he married his pupil, Arabella Goddard. He wrote the analytical 'Programme-books' for the Popular Concerts and the Hallé recitals, and contributed 2 articles to Grove's Dictionary. He composed a few songs, several pf.-pieces, and a dram. overture (for pf.-duet) to Fortunatus, a fairy tale. His memoirs were publ. by H. Davison under the title From Mendelssohn to Wagner (London, 1912).

Davy, John, b. Upton-Helion, Exeter, Dec. 23, 1763; d. London, Feb. 22, 1824. Pupil of Jackson. Violinist at Covent Garden; teacher and comp. in London. Wrote the music to nearly a score of plays; also vocal quartets, madrigals, and many songs, of which 'The Bay of Biscay, O!' is still popular.

Day, Dr. Alfred, b. London, Jan., 1810; d. there Feb. 11, 1849. A practising physician (homœopathist) in London; best known as the author of an original Treatise on Harmony (London, 1845), in which he advocated reforms in terminology and teaching, formulated a new sort of bass-figuring to supplant the ordinary thorough-bass, and made many interesting and practical suggestions.

Day, Major Charles Russell, b. Horstead, Norfolk, England, in 1860. Pupil of J. Barnby. Entered the British army in 1880, and served in India, later in South Africa, where he was killed in the battle of Paardeberg, Feb. 18, 1900. Writer on music. His chief work is Music and Musical Instruments in Southern India and the Deccan (London, 1891); also publ. *A Descriptive Catalogue of the Mus. Instrs. Recently Exhibited at the R. Debussy [dŭ-büs-sē], Claude (-Achille), b. St. Germain-en-Laye, Aug. 22, 1862. Mme. de Sivry, a pupil of Chopin, prepared the boy for the Cons. at Paris, where he was admitted at the early age of 11. Here he continued his study of piano with Marmontel, and won the second prize in 1877, while in the solfeggio class of Lavignac he won the medal three years in succession (1874, '5, '6). In the composition class of E. Guiraud he won a prize for cpt. and fugue in 1882; the next year he was the winner of the second Prix de Rome, and finally, in 1884, he won the much-coveted Grand Prix with his cantata l'Enfant prodigue (prod. as an opera in Boston, 1910). From the Villa Medicis he sent as the fruit of the first year a fragment of a lyric drama, Almansor (after Heine), which he later destroyed; the second year he wrote Printemps, a symphonic suite for orch. and chorus (in 2 parts), which found no favor with the jury at the Acad. This did not prevent D. from following the path on which he had struck out, and another cantata, La Demoiselle élue, even more advanced, was the work of the third year. The work of the last year (1888) was a Fantaisie for pf. and orch. (still MS.). The customary performance of these 'envois de Rome' never took place, because the committee refused to put Printemps on the program, and D. insisted that either all or none be produced. Unaffected by criticism he went his way. His next inspiration he found in poems of Verlaine (Ariettes oubliées, 1888) and Baudelaire (Cinq poèmes, 1890), while for pf. he wrote Petite Suite (4 hands, 1889; arr. for orch. by H. Büsser) and Suite bergamasque. The year 1892 is of special interest, because in that year was written the work which made D. famous, L'Après-Midi d'un Faune (first perf. 1894; publ., 1902), and because he began the composition of Pelléas et Mélisande (the duet in act IV), which is his most important work, and which occupied him for the next ten years. But in the meantime he also composed smaller works: A string-quartet (produced by Ysaÿe, 1893); the song-volumes Proses lyriques (1894) and Chansons de Bilitis (1898). The number of admirers which L'Après-Midi had won for D. in 1894, was increased by the production of Trois Nocturnes for orch. and ch. (by Chevillard, 1900), entitled Nuages, Fêtes, Sirènes. After the production of Pelléas et Mélisande (Op.-Comique, April 30, 1902) D. was unreservedly acknowledged the head and most important master of the 'impressionists. Yet it was five years before the opera was heard outside of France (1907 in Germany and Belgium, 1908 in Italy and the U. S. [New York, Feb. 19], 1909 in England). Wherever it was given, it caused animated discussion; but after the first excitement had subsided, the number of performances decreased. At various times it was reported that D. had completed other dramatic works; in fact, the M.O.H. has even announced its acquisition of the rights for the production of Le Diable au Beffroi, La Chute de la maison Usher and La Légende de Tristan.

In all his works D. strikes a thoroughly individual note. Intentionally he avoids accepted harmonies; and by means of constant employment of the higher primary overtones he has succeeded in creating a new style, which has come to be designated by the term Impressionism. The forms and principles of the classicists and romanticists are disregarded; music is to be the momentary reflection of fleeting moods. Hitherto the foundation of all music was consonance, with dissonance freely admitted; the new system is founded on dissonance, with consonance as a rare and not very welcome guest. Further new and strange effects are obtained by the employment of the whole-tone scale and the old church-modes. A study of the sum total of D.'s works must convince the impartial observer, that this style is the composer's natural and unaffected language. The very nature of D.'s talent is such, that he cannot think in the manner of his predecessors. The sources of inspiration for his purely instrumental works, the choice of the texts for his songs and for his opera, prove this. It is the vague, the undefinable, the half-suggested that attracts D., and, in consequence, his music, the faithful reflection of his own impressions, is vague and elusive —no cadence, no fixed tonality, no definite melodic outline, and frequently only the merest suggestion of something that might be considered a theme. That this new method has widened our conception of harmony, has even enriched our harmonic scheme, no one can deny; but its constant employment soon palls. Modulation, by means of which the great masters have obtained tremendous effects, is entirely excluded from the new system, for there is continuous modulation leaving no room for anything unexpected. The general effect is that of monotony. D.'s own works prove this. After Pelléas et Mélisande there is no advance, not one feature which is not familiar from the earlier works; rather a decline, for the music seems to become even more intangible. The truth seems to be that the possibilities of impressionism are so limited, that the originator himself exhausted them in the short space of a decade. To some extent the monotony of D.'s orchestral works is relieved by an exquisitely refined instrumentation. In fact, D.'s whole art might properly be characterized as sublimated refinement. And for this very reason it never strikes deep, nor does it ever grip the soul of the listener with that elemental power emanating from the highest genius. Yet, in spite of limitations and restrictions, D. has exerted a far-reaching influence; certain it is, that Pelléas et Mélisande will remain a landmark in the history of dramatic music. The fact that impressionism has been carried to extremes by most of his imitators must not be charged against D., any more than the excesses of the Wagner imitators can be laid at the door of the master. Excess is always the result of creative impotence; and any new style, imperfectly understood, seems to offer itself to composers of a certain type as a formula for unrestrained license.

WORKS:—Besides the compositions already mentioned, D. has written: For orchestra, 2 Danses, with harp (1904; 1. Danse profane, 2. Danse sacrée); La Mer, 3 symph. sketches (1905; 1. De l'aube à midi sur la mer, 2. Jeux de vagues, 3. Dialogue du vent et de la mer); Images (1909; 3d series [the two earlier series being for pf.] 1. Gigue, 2. Iberia, 3. Rondes de Printemps); Rhapsodie for clarinet and orch. (1911; orig. for clar. and pf., 1910); Printemps (1913; a revision and amplification of the earlier suite). A mystery, Le Martyre de St.-Sébastien (Th. du Châtelet, May 22, 1911); the ballets Jeux (1913) and Crimen Amoris (1914). For piano: 2 Arabesques; Ballade; Danse; Mazurka; Nocturne; Rêverie; Suite bergamasque (1. Prélude, 2. Menuet, 3. Clair de lune, 4. Passepied); Valse romantique; Pour le Piano (1. Prélude, 2. Sarabande, 3. Toccata); D'un cahier d'esquisses; Estampes (1. Pagodes, 2. Soirée dans Grenade, 3. Jardins sous la pluie); l'Isle joyeuse; Masques; Images (1st series, 1. Reflets dans l'eau, 2. Hommage à Rameau, 3. Mouvement. 2d series, 1. Cloches à travers les feuilles, 2. Et la lune descend sur le temple que fut, 3. Poissons d'or); Children's Corner (6 pcs.); Hommage à Haydn; La plus que lente (valse); Douze Préludes; Berçeuse héroïque (1915, dedicated to the King of Belgium); Douze Études (1916); a sonata for vcl. and pf. in D m. (1916). D. has written about 50 songs on texts by Verlaine, Bourget, Villon, Baudelaire, Louys, Girod and Gravollet.—He has also contrib. numerous criticisms and essays to the 'Revue Blanche,' 'Gil Blas,' 'Musica' and 'Mercure de France.'

Delibes [dŭ-lēb'], (Clément-Philibert)-Léo, famous dramatic composer; b. St.-Germain-du-Val, Sarthe, Feb. 21, 1836; d. Paris, Jan. 16, 1891. Entered the Paris Cons. in 1848, Le Couppey, Bazin, Adam and Benoist being his chief teachers. In 1853 he became accompanist at the Théâtre-Lyrique, and organist at the Church of St.-Jean et St.-François. His first stage-work was the 1-act operetta, Deux sous de charbon (1855), followed by 12 more of the same class up to 1865, when he was app. 2d chorus-master at the Grand Opéra. He now tried his hand at ballet-writing, and brought out the ballet La Source (prod. later in Vienna as Naila, die Quellenfee) at the Opéra in 1866; the next ballet, Coppélia, ou la fille aux yeux d'émail (Grand Opéra, 1870), was triumphantly successful, and has held the boards ever since. Sylvia, ou la nymphe de Diane (1876), was also successful. After resigning his post as chorus-master, he succeeded Reber (1881) as prof. of comp. at the Cons.; and, in 1884, was elected as Massé's successor in the Académie. Delibes' dramatic music is distinguished by melodiousness, vivacity, and elegance of instrumentation. His stage-works also include the comedy-operas Le Roi l'a dit (1873), Jean de Nivelle (1880), Lakmé (1883), Kassya (1893; posth., completed by Massenet); he left some sketches for a 3-act opéra comique, Le Roi des Montagnes. Della Mari'a, Dominique, born Marseilles, June 14, 1769; d. Paris, March 9, 1800; son of an Italian mandolinist. He was remarkably precocious; played the mandolin and 'cello at an early age, and when 18 prod. a grand opera at Marseilles. He now studied composition in Italy (for a time with Paisiello) and prod. in Naples, 1792, a successful opera, Il Maestro di cappella. He went to Paris in 1796; obtaining a libretto (Le Prisonnier) from Duval, he set it to music in 8 days, brought it out at the Opéra-Comique (1798) in a few weeks, and was at once famous. Before his death he finished 6 more operas, 4 of which were produced during his lifetime; but the success of none of these equalled that of Le Prisonnier. A posth. opera, La fausse duègne (compl. by Blangini) was produced in Paris in 1802; several church-compositions are MS.

Delle Se'die [sā'dē-ĕh], Enrico, baritone vocalist and singing-teacher; b. Leghorn, June 17, 1826; d. Paris, Nov. 28, 1907. His teachers were Galeffi, Persanola, and Domeniconi.

After imprisonment as a revolutionist (1848), he resumed the study of singing, and made his début at Florence (1851) in Verdi's Nabucco. Until 1861 he sang in the principal Italian cities; was then engaged at the Th. Italien, Paris, and app. prof. of singing in the Cons. He lived in Paris thenceforward as one of the best singing-teachers of the capital. His great works, Arte e fisiologia del canto (Milan, 1876), and L'estetica del canto e dell'arte melodrammatica (Milan, 1886), were publ. in New York in English as Vocal Art (3 Parts), and Esthetics of the Art of Singing, and of the Melodrama (4 vols.). An admirable fusion and condensation (by the author) of both the above was also publ. in one volume as A Complete Method of Singing (New York).

Deprès [dŭ-prä'], [Després] Josquin, the greatest of the early Netherland contrapuntists; born abt. 1450 in Hainault (Burgundy), and possibly in the town of Condé, where he died as provost of the Cathedral Chapter August 27, 1521. His name was very variously spelled: Després, Desprez, Deprès, Depret, Deprez, Desprets, Dupré, and by the Italians Del Prato (Latinized as a Prato, a Pratis, Pratensis), etc.; while Josquin (contracted from the Flemish Jossekin, 'little Joseph'), appears as Jossé, Jossien, Jusquin, Giosquin, Josquinus, Jacobo, Jodocus, Jodoculus, etc. 'Jossé Després,' his epitaph reads. Few details concerning his life are known. It seems probable that he was a chorister, and afterwards chorusmaster, at St. Quentin; perhaps he was m. de chap. for a time at the Cath. of Cambrai (one of the towns claiming to be his birthplace). He was doubtless a pupil of Okeghem (premier chantre to Louis XI, circa 1476); and he was a singer in the Sistine Chapel at the time of Pope Sixtus IV (1471–84), and was in Ferrara, about 1488, with Isaack. As a composer he was considered by contemporaries to be the greatest of his period (so says Zarlino), and Adrien Petit Coclius terms him 'princeps musicorum'; his works were sung everywhere, and universally admired—he was, indeed, the first to weave the mazes of Netherlandish counterpoint into expressive and beautiful art-forms. —Publ. works: MASSES (in Petrucci's Lib. I, Venice, 1502): L'omme armé; La sol fa re mi; Gaudeamus; Fortunata desperata; L'omme armé, sexti toni;—(idem, II, 1503): Ave Maris stella; Hercules, dux Ferraræ; Malheur me bat; Lami Baudichon; Una musque de Buscaya; Dung aultre amor;—(idem, III, 1516): Mater patris; Faysans regrets; Ad fugam; Di dadi; De Beata Virgine; Sine nomine (these 3 books republ. by Junta [Rome, 1526]);—(in Graphäus' 'Missae III'): Pange lingua; Da pacem; Sub tuum præsidium; some of these are scattered in other collections, and fragments are found in still others; and several more masses are in MS. at Rome, Munich, and Cambrai.—MOTETS were publ. by Petrucci ('Odhecaton,' 1501–5, and his books of motets Nos. 1, 3, 4, and 5); by Peutinger (Liber selectarum cantionum, 1520), and others of the period.—FRENCH CHANSONS were publ. by T. Susato (1545), P. Attaignant (1549), and Du Chemin (1553).—In modern notation, fragments of his works are to be found in the German 'Bibliothek für Kirchenmusik' (1844); in Commer's 'Collectio operorum musicorum Batavorum,' 'Rochlitz's 'Sammlung vorzüglicher Gesangsstücke' (1838), and Choron's 'Collection' (a Stabat Mater); also in the histories by Ambros, Forkel, Kiesewetter, Burney, Busby, and Hawkins.

Deprosse [dŭ-prŏhss'], Anton, b. Munich, May 18, 1838; d. Berlin, June 23, 1878. Pupil of the Royal School of Music at Munich 1853–5; then a private pupil of Stuntz and Herzog. Teacher of pf. (1861–4) at the R. Sch. of Music; taught later in Frankfort and Gotha, in Munich (1871), and went to Berlin in 1875.—Works: Operas (in MS.); an oratorio, Die Salbung Davids; songs; fine pf.-music (e.g., the Romantische Etüden, op. 17).

De Reszké, Édouard, dram. bass, brother of Jean; b. Warsaw, Dec. 23, 1855. Pupil of his brother, Ciaffei, Steller and Coletti. Début Paris, April 22, 1876, as the King in Aida, at the Th. des Italiens; sang here for two seasons, then at Turin and Milan; from 1880–4 at the Italian Opera, London. After this he sang chiefly in Paris and London; at the same time as his brother Jean he added the Wagner rôles to his own repertory, and shared with him the triumphs at the Metropolitan Opera House, N. Y. He retired in 1906, and since then has been living on his estate near Warsaw.—See APPENDIX.

De Reszké, Jean, dramatic tenor; b. Warsaw, Jan. 14, 1850. Pupil of Ciaffei, Cotogni and Sbriglia. Successful début as baritone at Venice in Jan., 1874, in the rôle of Alfonso (Favorita), under the name of 'De Reschi.' After singing in Italy and Paris, he made his tenor début, as Robert (R. le Diable), at Madrid in 1879. In 1884 he was eng. at the Th. des Nations, and in 1885 at the Grand Opéra, Paris, where he created Massenet's Cid.—In 1888 he appeared with sensational success at Covent Garden, and sang there almost every season until 1900. From 1891–1901 (excepting the season of 1899–1900) he was the chief tenor and idol of the operatic public of the M. O. H. The height of his fame was reached in 1895, when he added the Wagner parts to his répertoire, appearing for the first time as Tristan on Nov. 27. Although his voice had then lost its first bloom, his faultless method, wonderfully clear enunciation, and the general refinement and subtlety of his art, proved ample compensation. He retired from the stage in 1902, and has since been living in Paris as a highly esteemed teacher.

De Sanc'tis, Cesare, born Albano, Rome, 1830. M. di capp. in various Roman churches and theatres; 1876, professor of harmony in the newly founded Liceo (Conservatory) at Rome.—Works: Overture for orch.; Requiem mass a 4, with orch.; 100 Fugues a cappella in strict style, a 4. He has publ. a treatise on Armonia and another on Contrappunta e Fuga.

Désaugiers [dā-zoh-zh'yā'], Marc-Antoine, born Fréjus, 1742; d. Paris, Sept. 10, 1793. A self-taught musician, he went to Paris in 1774, and attracted notice by translating Mancini's Canto figurato (1776). He produced a multitude of short operas, which pleased by their sprightly melodies; and a festival cantata, Hiérodrame, on the storming of the Bastille (D. was an ardent revolutionist). A friend of Gluck and Sacchini, he dedicated a requiem to the latter.

Deshayes [dā-zā'], Prosper-Didier, b. (?), d. (?), made himself known by his oratorio, Les Machabées (1780); was from 1782 comp. of divertissements and ballets to the Comédie-Française, and prod. (1786–99) several operettas and ballets, a second oratorio, Le Sacrifice de Jefte (1786), a symphony, minor instrumental pieces, and 3 cantatas (Achille dans sa tente, Diane, La Chute de Phaéton).

Deslandres [dā-lăhn'dr], Adolphe-Édouard-Marie, born Batignolles, Monceaux, Jan. 22, 1840; d. Paris, July 30, 1911. Pupil of Leborne and Benoist at the Paris Cons.; about 1862 app. org. at Ste.-Marie. Wrote the operas Dimanche et Lundi (1872), Le Chevalier Bijou (1875), Fridolin (1876); Ode à l'harmonie; La Banque brisée; a patriotic dirge Les sept paroles for bar. solo, ch., org., vl., vcl. and harp; some masses and cantatas.

Desmarets [dā-măh-rā'], Henri, b. Paris, 1662; d. Lunéville, Sept. 7, 1741. One of the most skilful musicians during the reign of Louis XIV, he prod. 1693–1722 a number of operas famous in their day; was maestro to Philip V of Spain, and afterwards intendant of music to the Duke of Lorraine at Lunéville.

Després. See DEPRÈS.

Dessau, Bernhard, b. Hamburg, Mar. 1, 1861. Pupil of Schradieck at Hamburg and Leipzig; also st. with Joachim and Wieniawski; held various positions as conc.-master (Görlitz, Königsberg, Brünn, Prague, Rotterdam, etc.); since 1898 conc.-master at the R. Opera in Berlin; taught for some time at Stern's Cons.; made R. Prof. in 1906. Among his numerous comps. f. violin is a concerto "im alten Stil," op. 55.

Des'sauer, Joseph, b. Prague, May 28, 1798; d. Mödling, n. Vienna, July 8, 1876. Pupil of Tomaczek (pf.) and Dionys Weber (comp.). The melodious beauty of his songs won him international fame. He set to music the operas Lidwinna (Prague, 1836), Ein Besuch in Saint-Cyr (Dresden, 1838), Paquita (Vienna, 1851), Dominga (1860), and Oberon (not perf.); also wrote overtures, string-quartets, pf.-pcs., etc.

Des'soff, Felix Otto, b. Leipzig, Jan. 14, 1835; d. Frankfort-on-Main, Oct. 28, 1892. Pupil of Moscheles, Hauptmann and Rietz in Leipzig Cons.; 1854–60, Kapellmeister at theatres in Chemnitz, Altenburg, Düsseldorf, Aix and Magdeburg; 1860–75, court Kapellm. at Vienna, teacher in the Cons., and cond. of the Philharmonic. Court Kapellm. at Karlsruhe, 1875; theatre Kapellm. at Frankfort, 1881.—Publ. a pf.-quintet, pf.-quartet, and sonatas f. pf.

Destinn, Emmy (real name Kittl), dramatic soprano; b. Prague, Feb. 26, 1878. She received her first mus. education on the violin, but when her voice was discovered she went to Mme. Loewe-Destinn, whose name she chose as her stage-name to show her appreciation. At her début as Santuzza at the R. Opera in Berlin, 1898, she was so successful, that she was engaged as a regular member; rapidly she became a star of the first magnitude, both because of her superb vocal art and her unusual histrionic powers; for the first performance at Bayreuth of Der fliegende Holländer, in 1901, she was chosen by Mme. Wagner as the Senta; R. Strauss selected her for the Berlin and Paris premières of his Salome; in 1905 her first appearances in London (Cio-Cio-San, Donna Anna, Aida) aroused storms of applause; since 1908 she has been a regular member of the M. O. H., one of the most highly esteemed artists; in 1910 she created the rôle of Minnie in Puccini's La Fanciulla del West. Her voice is a pure soprano of wonderful power and evenness, capable of infinite modulations; her répertoire includes 80 rôles, among them Elisabeth, Elsa, Eva, Armide, Nedda, Tatiana (Eugen Onégin), Maddalena (Andrea Chénier), Tosca, Mimi, Valentine, Ines, etc. In her spare time she writes, having produced a drama, Rahel, poems and novels.—Cf. L. Brieger-Wasservogel, E. D. und Maria Labia (1908).

Destouches [dä-toosh'], André-Cardinal, opera-composer; b. Paris, Apr., 1672; d. there Feb. 3, 1749. In 1697, though untaught as to theory, he brought out the opera Issé, which was very successful. Assiduous study of cpt. seems to have marred the originality of his talent, for his later operas found less favor. From 1713 he was superintendent of the king's music, and inspector-general at the opera.—Cf. Kurt Dulle, A.-C. D. (Leipzig, 1909).—See Q.-Lex.

Destouches, Franz (Seraph) von, b. Munich, Jan. 21, 1772; d. there Dec. 10, 1844. From 1787–91 a pupil of Haydn in Vienna; in 1797, mus. director at Erlangen; in 1799, leader of the Weimar orch.; in 1810, prof. of theory at Landshut Univ.; in 1826, Kapellm. at Homburg; retired to Munich in 1842.—Works: An opera, Die Thomasnacht (Munich, 1792); an operetta, Das Missverständniss (Weimar, 1806); a comic opera, Der Teufel und der Schneider (Munich, 1843); incidental music to Schiller's Tell, Jungfrau von Orleans, Wallensteins Lager, Braut von Messina; Werner's Wanda; Kotzebue's Die Hussiten vor Naumburg; etc. Also publ. a pf.-concerto; sonatas, fantasias, variations f. pf.; a pf.-trio, etc.—Cf. Ernst v. Destouches, F. v. D. (1904).

Desvignes [dä-viñ'], Victor-François, b. Trier, June 5, 1805; d. Metz, Dec. 30, 1853. A violinist; conductor of theatre orchestras in the French provinces; after serious study in Paris, he founded a conservatory at Metz (1835), which prospered so vigorously that, in 1841, it was made a branch of the Paris Cons.—Publ. chamber-music, sacred and secular choruses, romances and melodies; left in MS. 2 operas, a symphony, 9 overtures f. full orch., a Stabat Mater (perf. 1833), etc.

Deswert (or de Swert), Jules, b. Louvain, Aug. 15, 1843; d. Ostende, Feb. 24, 1891. A brilliant 'cellist; played in public at 9, and was a pupil of Servais at Brussels Cons. in 1856–8. After extended tours in eastern Europe, he became Konzertmeister at Düsseldorf in 1865; first 'cello at Weimar in 1868; royal Konzertmeister, solo 'cellist, and prof. at the Hochschule, Berlin, in 1869, resigning in 1873. After travelling again, he settled in Wiesbaden; was in Leipzig in 1881, and in 1888 was app. director of the Ostende Music-School, and prof. at the Ghent and Bruges Cons.—Works: Two operas, Die Albigenser (Wiesbaden, 1878; succ.), Graf Hammerstein (Mayence, 1884); a symphony, Nordseefahrt;

3 'cello-concertos; romances, fantasias, duos, and solo pcs. for 'cello w. pf. or orch.

Déthier [dā-t'yā'], Édouard, concert-violinist; b. Liège, Apr. 25, 1885. Pupil of Liège Cons., 1895–1901; then of Brussels Cons., 1901–2; taught there, 1902–4; début at the 'Concerts Populaires' with Lalo's concerto in F, Brussels, May, 1903; settled in the U. S. in 1906, and has since then made extended tours of the States and Canada, appearing with the principal orchestras and in recitals; since 1906 prof. at the Inst. of Musical Art, New York.

Déthier, Gaston-Marie, brother of the preceding; b. Liège, Apr. 18, 1875. St. at the Liège Cons. and later with Guilmant in Paris; came to the U. S. in 1894 as successor to B. O. Klein (on Guilmant's special recommendation) in the important position as organist at St. Francis Xavier's, New York; his recitals soon established his reputation as an organist of the first rank; resigned in 1907 to devote himself entirely to concert-work; has opened many new organs; since 1907 prof. of org. at the Institute of Mus. Art, N. Y.; in 1915 he gave a series of very successful sonata-recitals with his brother, proving himself a pianist of splendid attainments; has written several org.-works.

Dett'mer, Wilhelm, bass opera-singer; b. Breinum, n. Hildesheim, June 29, 1808; d. Frankfort, May 28, 1876. The son of a peasant, he studied in a teachers' seminary, but left it to join a wandering troupe of players; sang minor rôles at Hanover, Brunswick, Breslau, and Kassel; was eng. for leading rôles at Dresden in 1842, and later at Frankfort; retired 1874. He was equally at home in comedy and tragedy.

Devienne, François, b. Joinville, Haute-Marne, Jan 31, 1759; d. in the insane asylum at Charenton, Sept. 5, 1803. A flutist and bassoonist, member of the band of the Gardes Suisses, bassoonist at the Th. de Monsieur (1788), and prof. at the Paris Cons., he was an extraordinarily prolific comp., of peculiar importance from the impulse which he gave to perfecting the technique of wind-instrs.—Works: Ten operas; many concerted pieces for various wind-instrs. w. orch.; overtures for wind; concertos, quartets, trios, sonatas, etc., for flute, pf. and other instrs.; Douze suites d'harmonies à 8 et 12 parties; very numerous romances, chansons, etc.; also a valuable Méthode de flûte (Paris, 1795), which went through several editions.—See Q.-Lex.

Devrient [dŭ-vrē-yăhn'], Eduard, b. Berlin, Aug. 11, 1801; d. Karlsruhe, Oct. 4, 1877. Pupil of Zelter; began his career as a baritone at the R. Opera in 1819, but after the loss of his voice went over to the spoken drama, without losing his interest in music; he was the author of the text to Marschner's Hans Heiling, and also created the title-rôle (1833). His chief work is Geschichte der deutschen Schauspielkunst (5 vols., 1848–74); his works concerning music are Briefe aus Paris (1840; about Cherubini) and Meine Erinnerungen an Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy und seine Briefe an mich (1869; 3d ed. 1891).

Deyo, Ruth Lynda, concert pianist; b. Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Apr. 20, 1884. Pupil of Dr. Wm. Mason (pf.), Jos. Mosenthal, theory (1894), Edward MacDowell (1900–1), Stepanoff (1902–4), Carreño (1905). Although she was exceedingly precocious (beginning to play when only 3 years old), Dr. Mason's advice not to exploit her as a prodigy was strictly followed. Début, in recital at Berlin, Mar. 23, 1904; toured Europe in 1905–6, and 1910–11; has toured the U. S. successfully since 1913, appearing with the principal orchestras and in recitals; 1915–16 in joint recitals with Casals.

Dezède (or Dezaides) [dŭ-zăd'], b. Lyons (?), c. 1740; d. Paris, 1792. Prolific composer of operas and operettas; 15, of from 1–3 acts in length, were given 1772–96 at the Italiens and the Opéra. Blaise et Babet (1783) held the stage for 2 years. He wrote with unusual correctness, and his melodies were pleasing.—Cf. A. Pougin, D. (Paris, 1862).—See Q.-Lex.

Diabel'li, Antonio, b. Mattsee, n. Salzburg, Sept. 6, 1781; d. Vienna, April 8, 1858. He was a choir-boy in the monastery at Michaelbeurn, and in Salzburg cath.; studied for the priesthood at the Munich Latin School, but continued his musical work, submitting his compositions to Michael Haydn, who encouraged him. On the secularization of the Bavarian monasteries, D., who had already entered that at Raichenhaslach, embraced the career of a musician, went to Vienna (where Joseph Haydn received him kindly), taught pf. and guitar for a living, and in 1818 became a partner of Cappi, the music-publr., assuming control of the firm (Diabelli & Co.) in 1824. He publ. much of Schubert's music, but underpaid the composer, and complained that he wrote too much. In 1854 he sold out to C. A. Spina. A facile composer, he prod. an opera, Adam in der Klemme (Vienna, 1809; one performance), masses, cantatas, chamber-music, etc., which are consigned to oblivion; his sonatinas, easy pieces and duets for pf., are still favorites for beginners.

Diaz [dē'ăhz] (de la Peña), Eugène-(Émile), son of the celebrated painter; b. Paris, Feb. 27, 1837; d. Coleville, Sept. 12, 1901. Dramatic composer; pupil of Paris

Cons. (Halévy, Reber) 1852–8. Produced the comic opera Le roi Candaule at the Th.-Lyrique, 1865; won the government prize, 1867, for the 3-act opera La Coupe du roi de Thulé (Grand Opéra); and brought out the 4-act lyric drama Benvenuto Cellini at the Op.-Com. (1890). Publ. numerous songs.

Dibbern, Karl, b. Altona, June 17, 1855. After having held positions as op. cond. at Lübeck and Dresden, he went to Amsterdam, where he became stage-manager at the Dutch Opera. He has written the operas Der Liebesdiplomat (Karlsruhe, 1888); Der Bulgare (Magdeburg, 1886); Mosjö Übermut (Stralsund, 1891); Kapitän Sander (Dresden, 1892); Am Magdalenenstein (Lübeck, 1893); Erik Jensen (Amsterdam, 1899); Odja (ib., 1900).

Dibdin, Charles, b. Dibden, n. Southampton (bapt. March 4), 1745; d. London, July 25, 1814. He was sent to Winchester College to study for the Church, but his passion for music carried the day; he sang with the choristers, took lessons of Kent and Fussel, and at 15 went to London, was eng. at Covent Garden as a singing actor, and soon began to write for the stage. His first piece, The Shepherd's Artifice, was prod. in 1763. He was eng. at Birmingham, 1763–5, and at Covent Garden again till 1768, when he went over to Drury Lane. Falling out with Garrick, he spent some months of 1776 in France; was then app. comp. to Covent Garden, having up to that time brought out 8 operas, etc. After the failure of certain theatrical enterprises, and a projected journey to Egypt, he commenced a series of monodramatic table-entertainments, of which song was a principal feature, and which were extremely popular from 1789 to 1805; in these Dibdin appeared as author, composer, narrator, singer, and accompanist. He retired in 1805 on a pension, which was withdrawn for a time, but subsequently restored. A complete list of some 70 stage-pieces, with or without music, and 30 'table-entertainments,' may be found in Grove. He is best known as the composer of most of the fine old sea-songs so popular 100 years ago. He publ. a History of the English Stage (1795, 5 vols.), and his Professional Life (1803, 4 vols.). —See Q.-Lex.

Dick, Charles George Cotsford, b. London, Sept. 1, 1846; d. 1895. Studied at Worcester College, Oxford; was intended for the bar, but gave up the law for music. He produced several successful operettas: Our Doll's House (1876), Our New Doll's House (1877), Back from India (1879), the comic opera Doctor D. (1885), and The Baroness (1892); also a 'children's opera'; published a number of songs, and many sprightly pf.-pieces.

Dickinson, Clarence, b. Lafayette, Ind., May 7, 1873. Pupil of Wild and Weidig in Chicago; of Singer and Riemann in Berlin; of Moszkowski (pf.), Guilmant (org.) and Pierné (comp.) in Paris; org. of Brick Presb. Church and Temple Beth El, New York; since 1909 also cond. Bach Choir, Montclair, N. J. Has written a comic opera, The Medicine Man (Chicago, 1895); numerous pieces for organ, and songs.

Dickinson, Edward, b. W. Springfield, Mass., Oct. 10, 1853. Graduate Amherst Coll. (1876); studied at New England Cons. (1871–2); org. with Eugene Thayer (1878–9); att. lecture courses of Ph. Spitta and W. Langhans in Berlin (1885–6; 1888–9; 1892–3). Org. Northampton, Mass., Springfield, Mass., and Elmira, N. Y.; dir. of music, Elmira Coll. (1883–92); prof. of history and criticism of music, Oberlin Coll., since 1893; made Litt.D. by Oberlin (1911). — Works: Music in the History of the Western Church (1902); The Study of the History of Music (1905; 2d augm. ed. 1908); The Education of a Music Lover (1911); Music and the Higher Education (1913); many magazine articles and lectures.

Diderot [dē-droh'], Denis, b. Langres, Oct. 5, 1713; d. Paris, July 30, 1784. Projector and editor-in-chief of the 'Encyclopédie.' In his work, Mémoires sur différents sujets de mathématique (The Hague, 1748), are the essays Des principes d'acoustique, and Projet d'un nouvel orgue, the latter being an impracticable idea for a new kind of barrel-organ.

Did'ymus, a grammarian of Alexandria; b. 63 B. C., a prolific author, the number of whose works was estimated by Seneca at 4,000; wrote a (lost) treatise on harmony, now known only by an epitome made by Porphyry, and some quotations by Ptolemy. In his system, the octave of the diatonic genus was formed by two precisely similar tetrachords; and in all 3 species of tetrachord (diat., chrom., and enharm.) the interval of a major third is adhered to. He likewise recognized the difference between the major and the minor whole tone; this difference ($\frac{8}{9} : \frac{10}{9} = 81 : 80$) is, therefore, rightly termed the 'comma of Didymus.' Salinas and Doni have written on D.'s musical system.

Diem [dēm], Joseph, remarkable 'cello-virtuoso; b. in 1836 at Kellmünz, near Memmingen; d. Constance, Jan. 1, 1894. A peasant's son, from his poor pittance for tending cattle he saved enough to buy a flute, and later a violin, which he practised at night and Sundays. After travelling with a troupe of wandering musicians, he took up the 'cello at the age of 25, studying in the Munich Conserv., and at Weimar under Cossmann. In 1866, app. prof. at Moscow Conserv.; made annual concert-tours through Europe, and in 1872 to America.

Diémer [d'yā-mā'], Louis, distinguished pianist; born Paris, Feb. 14, 1843. Pupil of Marmontel at the Cons., taking 1st pf.-prize in 1856; also of Ambr. Thomas and Bazin for comp., taking 1st harm. prize, 2d org. prize, and 1st prize for cpt. and fugue. Played with great success at the Alard, Pasdeloup, and Cons. concerts; succeeded Marmontel (1887) as pf.-prof. at Cons. The immense success of his series of historical recitals, in 1889, determined him to make a specialty of early music, and led to the establishing of the 'Société des anciens instruments.' Chev. of Legion of Honor in 1889. Widor, Saint-Saëns, Lalo, and others have written pieces for him which he has played at the Colonne and Lamoureux Concerts.—Works: Pf.-concerto; a Konzertstück for pf.; a vln.-concerto; septuor for pf. and wind; characteristic pieces for pf.; and a variety of chamber-music and pf.-compositions. Also publ. a Collection of ancient pieces, 'Clavecinistes français' (2 vols.).

Die'nel, Otto, b. Tiefenfurth, Silesia, Jan. 11, 1839; d. Berlin, March 7, 1905; pupil of the Görlitz Gymnasium, and the Bunzlau Seminary; studied music in Berlin at the R. Inst. for Church-music, and R. Academy. Teacher of music; org. at the Marienkirche, Berlin. In 1881 he received the title of Royal Musikdirektor. Wrote comps. for org., and choruses; author of Die moderne Orgel (1889, 2d ed. 1891).

Die'ner, Franz, dramatic tenor; b. Dessau, Feb. 19, 1849; d. there May 15, 1879. Violinist in the court orch., Dessau, then at the Luisenstadt Th., Berlin, where he made his début as a singer. Leading tenor at Cologne (1872–3), Berlin, Nuremberg, at Cologne again (1876), Hamburg, and Dresden (1878).

Diepenbrock, Alfons, b. Amsterdam, Sept. 2, 1862. Entirely self-taught in music; 1888–95 teacher at the Gymnasium at Hertogenbusch; since then as private teacher in Amsterdam; a composer of solid attainments and great earnestness of purpose. Has written a mass for male ch. and org.; Te Deum for double ch.; Stabat Mater Speciosa; Stabat Mater Dolorosa; Les Elfes for female voices; Hymne for vln. and pf.; etc.

Di'ës, Albert Karl, b. Hanover, 1755; d. Vienna, Dec. 28, 1832.—Publ. Biographische Nachrichten von Joseph Haydn (Vienna, 1810). D. was a good landscape-painter.

Diet [d'yā], Edmond-Marie, b. Paris, Sept. 25, 1854. Pupil of César Franck and Guiraud. Dram. comp.; officer of the Acad. —Has produced the operas Stratonice (1887), Le cousin Placide (1887), Fleur de Vertu (1894), La Revanche d'Isis (1906); also ballets and pantomimes (Scientia, 1889; La Grève; Masque rose; M. Ruy-Blas, 1894; La Belle et la Bête, 1895; l'Araignée d'or, 1896; Rêve de Noël, 1896), and the 3-act operetta Gentil Crampon (Paris, 1897); besides songs, and church-music.

Dieter (or Dietter) [dē'ter], Christian Ludwig, b. Ludwigsburg, June 13, 1757; d. Stuttgart, 1822. A court musician (Kammermusiker) at Stuttgart, he prod. there a grand opera, Laura Rosetti, 2 comic operas, Belmonte und Constanze and Des Teufels Lustschloss, and 8 vaudevilles (Liederspiele). He left in MS. concertos for vln., horn, flute, oboe and bassoon; also solos for vln., concerted pieces for flutes, and for oboes, etc.—Cf. H. Abert, Die dramatische Musik am Hofe Herzog Karl Eugens (Esslingen, 1905).

Die'trich, Albert Hermann, b. Forsthaus Golk, n. Meissen, Aug. 28, 1829; d. Berlin, Nov. 20, 1908. Pupil of J. Otto in Dresden and Moscheles and Rietz at Leipzig (1847–51); studied with R. Schumann at Düsseldorf, 1851–4. From 1855–61, concert-conductor, and from 1859 municipal mus. director, at Bonn; from 1861, court Kapellm. at Oldenburg, succeeding Pott; retired in 1890 and lived after that in Berlin; made R. prof. in 1899. He was one of Schumann's best pupils, and his comps. rank high among contemporary productions.—Works: Incidental music to Imogen (Shakespeare's 'Cymbeline'), Dresden, 1891; the operas, Robin Hood (Frankfort, 1879) and Das Sonntagskind (Bremen, 1886); a fine symphony in D min.; overture for orch., Normannenfahrt; cantatas with orch. Morgenhymne, Rheinmorgen, Altchristlicher Bittgesang; a 'cello-concerto, a vln.-concerto, romance for horn with orch., chamber-music (pf.-trios), pf.-pieces; choruses, duets, songs; wrote also Erinnerungen an Joh. Brahms in Briefen, besonders aus seiner Jugendzeit (Leipzig, 1898).

Die'trich (or Dieterich), Sixtus, b. Augsburg (?), 1490–1495; d. St. Gallen, Switzerland, Oct. 21, 1548. A schoolmaster at Constance in 1518, he was without musical training, though naturally talented; in 1540, being in easier circumstances, he studied in Wittenberg. A book of magnificats (1535), and 2 collections of antiphones a 4 (1541 and 1545), were published separately; motets, songs, etc., are scattered through various German collections printed 1538–45.

Dietsch [dētsh], Pierre-Louis-Philippe, b. Dijon, March 17, 1808; d. Paris, Feb. 20, 1865. Pupil of Choron and the Paris Cons.; 1830 m. de chap. at St.-Eustache, and later at Ste.-Madeleine; 1860–3, cond. at the Opéra; comp. of 25 masses and other sacred music. He would have been forgotten long ago, were his name not connected with that of Wagner. In 1842 he brought out at the Opéra Le Vaisseau Fantôme, written on Wagner's original sketch of Der fliegende Holländer, and in 1861 he cond. (most incompetently) the notorious three Paris performances of Tannhäuser.—Cf. Wagner's Mein Leben (vols. i and iii).

Dietz, Johann Christian, b. Darmstadt, 1788; d. in Holland, circa 1845. Instrument-maker at Emmerich-on-Rhine; inventor of the 'Mélodion' (1805), the 'Claviharpe' (1814), and the 'Trochléon' (1812). He lived for many years in Paris.—His son Christian aided him in his work, and himself invented the 'Polyplectron'. He was estab. in Paris as a piano-maker, and his instrs. were celebrated.

Dietz, Max, b. Vienna, Apr. 9, 1857. Having obtained his degree (Ph.D.) from the Univ. of Vienna, he spent some time in France in research work, the result of which he publ. in his Geschichte des musikalischen Dramas in Frankreich während der Revolution bis zum Direktorium (1885), a most valuable contribution to the hist. of opera; in 1886 he estab. himself as Dozent for musicology at the Univ. of Vienna, became Prof. Extraord. in 1908, k. k. Regierungsrat in 1913. He has been very successful as a lecture-recitalist, and has contributed many critical articles to various journals; has edited several masses, a Stabat Mater and Requiem by Emperor Leopold I (1891), and Recitativo e Duetto fra l'anima e Gesù Cristo by A. de Liguori (1895).

Dieupart [d'yö-pahr'], Charles, skilful French violinist and harpsichordist, went to London in 1707, was maestro al cembalo, for several years, of Handel's operas, and d. in London circa 1740, almost destitute. Publ. 6 Suites de clavecin . . . composées et mises en concert pour un violon et une flûte, avec basse de viole et archiluth (London); and Six Ouvertures pour clavecin, avec violon et basse continue (Amsterdam).

Dil'liger, Johann, b. Eisfeld, Nov. 30, 1593; cantor and deacon at Koburg, where he d. Aug. 28, 1647. Published numerous works (sacred and secular) between 1612–42.—See Q.-Lex.

Ding'elstedt, Jenny (née Lutzer [wife of the poet Franz D.]), b. Prague, Mar. 4, 1816; d. Vienna, Oct. 3, 1877. A very brilliant coloratura singer, eng. (1832) at Prague, then (1835–45) at the Kärnthnerthor Th., Vienna. She married in 1843.

Dippel, Andreas, dramatic tenor and impresario; b. Kassel, Germany, Nov. 30, 1866. From 1882–87 he was employed in a banking-house at Kassel, meanwhile beginning vocal study with Frau Zottmayr, a well-known singer at the Court Theatre. In 1887 he continued his studies under Hey (Berlin), Leoni (Milan), and Johann Ress (Vienna), and in that year was eng. at the Bremen Stadttheater, making his début in Sept. as Steuermann in Der fliegende Holländer. Remained here till 1892, with leave of absence in season of 1890–1 to sing in the Metr. Op. H., New York (début Nov. 26, 1890, in Franchetti's Asrael; Seidl cond.). First American concert-tour in 1892; eng. at Stadtth. in Breslau 1892–3, and at the Court Opera, Vienna, 1893–8. From 1898–1908 he was connected with the Metr. Opera Co. (Grau, Conried), touring the United States; also sang at Covent Garden, London, the Royal Opera, Munich, and the Bayreuth Festivals (début 1889, as Voice of Sailor in Tristan), winning international fame. His remarkable repertory comprises nearly 150 operatic rôles (German from Mozart to Wagner, Italian from Donizetti to Puccini, and the leading French operas), besides chief parts in over 60 oratorios. Perhaps his most distinctive impersonations are those of Wagner's heroes. In 1908 he became administrative manager at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York; a post relinquished in the spring of 1910, when he assumed control of the Phila.-Chicago Grand Opera Company, of which he was general manager till 1913; since then director of his own company, producing the better class of light opera.

Diru'ta, Agostino, Augustine monk; b. Perugia. Was in 1622 m. di capp. at Asola, and later at the monastery of his order in Rome.—Publ. masses, litanies, vespers, etc. (1622–47).—See Q.-Lex.

Diru'ta, Girolamo, b. Perugia, c. 1560; d. (?). Organist; pupil of Claudio Merulo in Venice, who mentions the fact with pride in the preface to his Canzoni a la francese in tavolatura (1598). In 1580, D. was in the Minorite monastery at Correggio; 1593 till after 1609, organist in the cathedral at Gubbio (Papal States); then at Chioggia.—Publ. Il Transilvano, o dialogo sopra il vero modo di sonar organi e stromenti da penna, Part I (Venice, 1593, 2d ed. 1612); Part II (Venice, 1609 and 1622).—See Q.-Lex.

Ditson, Oliver, founder of the music-publishing firm of O. Ditson & Co., at Boston, Mass.; b. Oct. 30, 1811; d. Dec. 21, 1888. In 1832 he became a partner of G. H. Parker, his employer, under the firm-name of Parker & Ditson; carried on business in his own name 1845–57, when J. C. Haynes joined the firm, then changed to O. Ditson & Co. His eldest son, Charles, took charge of the N. Y. branch (Ch. H. Ditson & Co.) in 1867. Since 1875 J. Edward Ditson has conducted the Philadelphia branch (J. E. D. & Co.). A branch for the importation and sale of instruments, etc., was established at Boston in 1860 as John C. Haynes & Co.; and since 1864 a Chicago branch, Lyon & Healy, has been in business. The catalogue of the house embraces about 52,000 titles. Publrs. of 'The Musician' (a monthly periodical) since 1896.

Dit'ters (von Dit'tersdorf), Karl, eminent both as a violinist and composer; b. Vienna, Nov. 2, 1739; d. at Castle Rothlhotta, near Neuhaus, Bohemia, Oct. 24, 1799. At first taught by König and Ziegler, he became a favorite of Prince Joseph of Hildburghausen, who had him thoroughly trained by Trani (vln.) and Bono (comp.). He played in the prince's orch. till its dissolution in 1759, and then in the court theatre at Vienna; accomp. Gluck on his Italian journey (1761), winning great fame as a violinist, and, on his return to Vienna, defeating the renowned Lolli. As Kapellm. (1764–9) to the Bishop of Gross-Wardein, Hungary (succeeding Michael Haydn), he composed industriously (his first opera, Amore in musica, 1767; various oratorios, and much orchestral and chamber-music). After travelling for a short time, he was app. Kapellm. to the Prince-Bishop of Breslau, Count von Schaffgotsch, at Johannesburg in Silesia, where he had a small theatre built, for which he wrote several pieces; though his best operas (Doctor und Apotheker, Betrug durch Aberglauben, Liebe im Narrenhaus, Hieronymus Knicker, and Rotkäppchen) were composed during visits to Vienna. In 1770 the Pope bestowed on D. the Order of the Golden Spur; in 1773 he was ennobled by the Emperor ('von Dittersdorf'). On the decease of the Prince-Bishop (1795), D., who had been very prodigal of his means while at the zenith of his popularity, lived on a small pension, in straitened circumstances, until a friend, Baron von Stillfried, took him into his castle, Rothlhotta. Of his 28 operas only one, Doctor und Apotheker (Vienna, 1786), still survives; despite the vein of jovial humor, bright and fluent melody, and easy and correct style, they were eclipsed by Mozart's genius. Yet D. may well be regarded as a worthy precursor of Mozart in national dramatic composition. Besides, this prolific author wrote several oratorios and cantatas; 12 symphonies for orch. on Ovid's 'Metamorphoses' (Vienna, 1785)—[of these 12, only 6 are now extant, and have been republ. (1899) by Reinecke Bros., Leipzig; they are remarkable specimens of early program-music. The same firm also republished 2 other symphonies; the overture to Esther (oratorio); a short ballet; and the Divertimento Il combattimento dell'umane passioni];—41 MS. symphonies, a Concerto grosso, for 11 concerted instrs., with orch.; 12 vln.-concertos; numerous string-quartets (the best were edited by the Müller brothers, and publ.); 12 divertissements for 2 vlns. and 'cello; 12 4-hand sonatas for pf.; 72 preludes, for pf.; etc.—Also an essay: Briefe über Behandlung italienischer Texte bei der Composition (Leipzig, 'Allgem. musikal. Zeitung,' 1799), and his Autobiography (Leipzig, 1801; edited by Spazier; reprinted by E. Istel, Leipzig, 1909; English translation by A. D. Coleridge, London, 1897).—Cf. K. Krebs, Dittersdorfiana (Berlin, 1900; with thematic cat.); K. M. Klob, Drei musikalische Biedermänner (Ulm, 1911).—See Q.-Lex.

Di'vitis, Antonius (real name, Antoine le Riche), celebrated French contrapuntist early in the 16th century, chapel-singer to Louis XII; d. circa 1515.—Motets and chansons are scattered in collections, e. g., Mottetti de la corona (1514), and others printed by Rhaw, Attaignant, etc. At Cambrai is a MS. mass; at Munich, a Credo and a Salve Regina a 5.

Dizi [dē-zē'], François-Joseph, famous self-taught harpist; b. Namur, France, Jan. 14, 1780; d. Paris, Nov., 1847. He set out for London when only 16; lost his harp on the way, but went on without it, and introduced himself to Érard, who gave him a harp, and obtained pupils for him. Besides winning fame as a concert-player, and as a harpist at the principal theatres, he invented the 'perpendicular harp' (which was unsuccessful), and composed sonatas, romances, variations, studies, etc., for harp; also publ. an École de Harpe, being a Complete Treatise on the Harp (London, 1827). In 1830 he went to Paris, and established a harp-factory with Pleyel, which did not do well. Here he was app. harp-teacher to the Royal princesses.

Dlabacz [dläh'bähtsh], Gottfried Johann, b. Böhmisch-Brod, Bohemia, July 17, 1758; d. Prague, Feb. 4, 1820, where he was librarian and choirmaster of the Premonstratensian monastery.—Publ. Allgemeines historisches Künstlerlexikon für Böhmen (3 vols., 1815–18), and contributed several articles for Riegger's 'Statistik von Böhmen.'

Döbber, Johannes. See DOEBBER.

Dobrżynski [-zhin'-], Ignacy Félix, pianist; born Romanov, Volhynia, Feb. 25, 1807; d. Warsaw, Oct. 18, 1867. Son of the violinist J. Dobrżynski [1777–1841]; taught by his father, then by Elsner, being a fellow-pupil and fast friend of Chopin; on subsequent pianistic tours (1845–6) to Leipzig, Dresden, and Berlin, he had great success. For a time he conducted the opera in Warsaw, where he finally settled.—Works: 2 operas, Die Flibustier (Warsaw, 1861), and Monbar (not perf.); symphony in C minor;

Symphonie caractéristique; 1 string-sextet, 2 string-quintets, 2 string-quartets; 1 pf.-trio; a sonata for pf. and vln.; a nocturne for pf. and vln., Les Larmes; mazurkas and nocturnes for pf.; songs.

Doebber [döb'-], Johannes, born Berlin, March 28, 1866. Pupil in Stern Cons. of R. Radecke (comp.), L. Bussler (cpt. and comp.), and C. Aggházy (pf.). He taught the first pf.-class in Kullak's Cons.; then became Kapellm. at Kroll's Th. under Dir. Engel, Jr.; at Darmstadt Court Th.; in 1895, Kapellm. at the Court Th. in Coburg-Gotha, and tutor in music to Princess Beatrice; then in Hanover; since 1908, as teacher and mus. critic of the 'Volkszeitung' in Berlin.—Dramatic works: A 1-act comic opera, Die Strassensängerin (Gotha, 1890; succ.); 3-act opera Der Schmied von Gretna-Green (Berlin, 1893; mod. succ.); 1-act burlesque opera Dolcetta (Brandenburg, 1894); 1-act opera Die Rose von Genzano (Gotha, 1895; succ.); 3-act opera Die Grille (Leipzig, 1897; succ.); Die drei Rosen (Coburg, 1902); Der Zauberlehrling (Brunswick, 1907); Die Millionenbraut (operetta, Magdeburg, 1913); Die Franzosenzeit (after Fritz Reuter; not yet perf. [1916]); also a symphony, op. 34; pf.-pieces; over 60 songs; and quartets, duets, arrangements, etc.

Doenhoff, Albert von, concert-pianist; b. Louisville, Ky., March 16, 1880. Studied at Cincinnati Coll. of Music; at N. Y. College of Music (1891–5) with Alexander Lambert; with Xaver Scharwenka (1895–8); with Rafael Joseffy (1899–1905). Début in March, 1905, in N. Y. City. Soloist at over 100 orch. concerts given in N. Y. City from 1910–15. Instructor, Natl. Cons. (1899–1907); recitals in many cities. Has comp. minor pieces for pf. (valse, arabesque, études, etc.), and compiled a Piano Teacher's Manual.

Döh'ler, Theodor, pianist and comp; b. Naples, April 20, 1814; d. Florence, Feb. 21, 1856. A pupil of Julius Benedict at Naples, and of Czerny (pf.) and Sechter (comp.) at Vienna. In 1831 he became pianist to the Duke of Lucca, lived for a time in Naples, made brilliant pianistic tours from 1836–46 to Germany, Italy, Paris ('38), London and Holland ('39), and again to Italy, Holland, Belgium; after 2 years' sojourn in Lucca he went to Copenhagen in 1843, thence to Russia, and in 1846 to Paris; settling in Florence in 1848. In 1846 the Duke, his patron, ennobled him, and he married a Russian countess.—Works: A posthumous opera Tancreda (Florence, 1880; quite successful); many pf.-pieces (concertos, op. 7; nocturnes; tarantellas; 12 Études de concert, op. 30; 50 Études de salon, op. 42; variations, fantasias, transcriptions, etc.). His salon-music is elegant and showy.

Dohnányi [döh'nahn-yē], Ernest von, noted pianist and composer; b. Presburg, Hungary, July 27, 1877. Pupil of his father, Friedrich von D., prof. of mathematics and amateur 'cellist, and Karl Forstner (till 1894); then, at the Landesmusikakademie in Pest, of Stefan Thomán (pf.) and Hans Koessler (comp.). After graduation in 1897, he studied during the summer with d'Albert. His first independent piano-recital was at Berlin in October, 1897, followed by a concert-tour to Cologne, Dresden, Frankfort, Vienna, Pest, etc.; tour to London and through Great Britain in spring of 1898; same autumn, first tour of the United States (second, 1900–1); further travels in Russia, Austria-Hungary, etc.; instructor of pf. at Kgl. Hochschule in Berlin; since 1908, professor. In recent years he has devoted more and more time to comp., app. rather infrequently as pianist; his earliest works elicited high praise from Brahms, which his subsequent comps. have fully justified.—Works: Symphony No. 1, in F (not numbered; won 'Millenniumskönigspreis' at Pest in 1896); op. 1, pf.-quintet, in C m.; op. 2, Overture Zrinyi (shared the prize with the symph. in 1896); op. 3, 5 Klavierstücke; op. 4, Variations for pf., in G; op. 5, Concerto for pf. and orch., in E m. Do'les, Johann Friedrich, born Steinbach, Saxe-Meiningen, April 23, 1715; d. Leipzig, Feb. 8, 1797. Church-composer; a pupil, not a disciple, of J. S. Bach. He was app. cantor at Freiberg, Saxony, in 1744; in 1756 he succeeded G. Harrer as cantor and musical director of the Thomasschule, Leipzig, resigning in 1789.—Works: A treatise, Anfangsgründe zum Singen, and very numerous church-compositions, mostly written in an easy and popular style.—See Q.-Lex.

Dolmetsch, Arnold, b. Le Mans, Maine, France, Feb. 24, 1858. While apprenticed in his father's piano-factory he learned to play both piano and violin, making such marked progress on the latter instrument that his father sent him to Brussels, where he became a pupil of Vieuxtemps; after completing his studies he went to Dulwich, was app. instructor of vln. at the College, and soon won a reputation as teacher. From his earliest years he had shown a decided predilection for the music of Bach and the old masters; when by chance he became the possessor of a well-preserved viola d'amore, he did not rest until he had mastered the instrument; gradually he acquired the same skill on all the members of the viol family. He then gave up his large class of vln.-pupils, and devoted his entire time to lecturing and giving recitals on the old instruments. In his quest for old music he found in the British Museum MSS. of almost forgotten English composers (Simon Ives, Matthew Locke, Thomas Tomkins, Henry VIII, etc.). To become an authoritative interpreter of all this music he found it necessary to extend his investigations to the virginal, spinet, harpsichord and clavichord. He began by collecting old books, in which those instruments were described by contemporary authorities; the mechanical skill he had acquired in his father's shop he turned to account in repairing the instruments which he collected, and before long he was acknowledged as an authority on old music and instruments; he was not only a connoisseur and skilled workman, but also a masterly performer on every instrument in his large collection; with his wife and a pupil, Kathleen Salmon, he established the Dolmetsch Trio, devoted exclusively to the performance of old music on the original instruments. A tour of the U. S. in 1902 attracted so much attention that Chickering & Sons, of Boston, placed their factory and a force of their best workmen at D.'s disposal. The beginning was made with the restoration of a virginal by Hans Ruckers (1620); then a number of stringed and keyed instruments were built after the best models extant. The interest excited by the revival of these instruments has induced several other artists (Wanda Landowska, Fuller Maitland, the brothers Casadesus, etc.) to give recitals on them. From 1902–9 D. lived in Boston, supervising the construction of his instruments and concertizing; since then he has resided in London. He has published The Interpretation of the Music of the 17th and 18th Centuries (London, 1915).

Domaniewski [-yev'skē], Boleslāus, distinguished piano pedagogue; b. Gronówek, Russian Poland, 1857. Pupil of R. Lorer and J. Dom'mer, Arrey von, writer and critic; b. Danzig, Feb. 9, 1828; d. Treysa, Thuringia, Feb. 18, 1905. A theological student, he turned to music, and in 1851 became the pupil of Richter and Lobe (comp.), and Schallenberg (org.) at Leipzig. He taught music at Leipzig, and went to Hamburg in 1863, where he resided as a lecturer, music critic to the 'Correspondent,' and (1873–89) secretary in the Hamburg town library. In 1892 Marburg Univ. conferred upon him the degree of Ph. D. (hon. c.); chief contributor to 'Allgem. Deutsche Biographie.'—Writings: Elemente der Musik (1862); Musikalisches Lexikon (1865; a revised ed. of Koch's); Handbuch der Musikgeschichte (1867; 2d ed. 1878; 3d ed. [entirely rewritten and brought up to date by A. Schering] 1914). Also published an 8-part psalm a cappella, and a 4-part arrangement of melodies by J. W. Franck.

Donalda, Pauline (real name Lightstone, translated by her father from Lichtenstein when he became a British subject), dramatic soprano; b. Montreal, March 5, 1884. She received her first musical training at Royal Victoria College, Montreal, and then was a private pupil for 2 years of E. Duvernoy in Paris; début as Manon (in Massenet's opera) at Nice, Dec. 30, 1904; the next year she appeared at La Monnaie, Brussels, and Covent Garden; 1906–7, at Hammerstein's Opera House, N. Y.; since then chiefly at Opéra-Comique. Her stage-name was taken in honor of Sir Donald Smith (later Lord Strathcona), who endowed R. Victoria Coll. and presented it to McGill Univ.; in 1906 she married the French tenor, M. Seveilhac; her voice is a light soprano of very pleasing quality; favorite rôles, Marguerite and Mimi.

Dona'ti, Baldassaro, famous comp. of motets and madrigals; b. Venice (date ?);

d. there 1603. He was choirmaster of the so-called 'small choir' at San Marco, Venice, 1562–5, when it was disbanded, and he became a simple chorister; in 1590 he succeeded Zarlino as maestro.—Extant works: Canzonette villanesche alla napoletana (1551 and 1555); several books of madrigals a 4–6 (1559–68); and one volume of motets a 5–8 (1569).—See Q.-Lex.

Zuelli, 1896–1900; comp. of the operas Folchetto (Palermo, 1892; priv. perf.); Scampagnata (ib., 1898; priv. perf.) Theodor Körner (Hamburg, 1902); Sperduti nel buio (Palermo, 1907); Ramuntcho (not yet perf. [1916]); is at work on La Flamande; has also written a symph. poem, Le Rêve de Polysende; and Douze airs de style ancien for voice and pf.

Done, William, English organist, cond., and chorus-trainer; b. Worcester, 1815; d. there Aug. 17, 1895. Choir-boy of W. cathedral, 1825, under organist Clarke; 1839 asst.-org.; 1844 1st org., succeeding Clarke, and conductor of Worc. Mus. Festivals. 1894 Mus. Doc., Cantab. (hon. c.).—A fine organist, he instituted needed reforms in the cathedral service.

Do'ni, Antonio Francesco, writer; born Florence, 1519; d. Monselice, n. Padua, in Sept., 1574. For several years he was a member of the Servite fraternity in Florence; after leaving it in 1539, he led a wandering life as a lay-priest.—Publ. a Dialogue on Music (in Lat., 1534; in Italian, 1541, etc.), and a Libreria (Venice, 1550, '51, '60), containing a description of all published or MS. musical books in Italian, known at the time.

Doni, Giovanni Battista, a Florentine nobleman; born 1594; d. Dec. 1, 1647. He studied literature and philosophy at Bologna and Rome; from 1613–18 he was a law-student at Bourges, France, and took his degree at Pisa. In 1621 he accomp. Cardinal Corsini to Paris, where he zealously prosecuted his literary and antiquarian studies; went to Rome in 1622, at the invitation of Cardinal Barberini, who was passionately fond of music, and with whom he travelled. In the intervals of his profound study of ancient music, he found time to construct the 'Lyra Barderina' or 'Amphicord,' a species of double lyre, which he dedicated to Pope Urban VIII. Recalled to Florence in 1640 by deaths in his family, he settled there, married next year, and accepted a professorship of elocution offered him by the Grand Duke. His criticism and discussions of the earliest operas are very valuable, and were publ. for the first time by A. Solerti in Origini del melodramma. Testimonianze dei contemporanei (Turin, 1903).—Writings: Compendio del trattato dei generi e modi della musica (Rome, 1635); Annotazioni on the above (Rome, 1640); De præstantia musicæ veteris libri tres . . . (Florence, 1647); and several essays in MS.

Donizetti [-tset'tē], Alfredo, real name Ciummei, b. Smyrna, Sept. 2, 1867. Studied (1883–9) at Milan Cons. under Ponchielli and Dominiceti, grad. w. a fine Stabat Mater for soli, chorus, org. and orch. (publ.). Now (1916) living in Milan as composer and teacher of counterpoint.—Works: 1-act opera Nama (Milan, 1889); 1-act opera Dopo l'Ave Maria (Milan, 1897), very successful (publ.). Dramatic works not perf.: La Locandiera (comedy in 3 acts), I Sonnambuli (com. in 1 act), La Madrileña (operetta in 3 acts), Il canto del mare ('idillio' in 1 act). Publ. works: Several dances and characteristic pieces for pf., and numerous songs; 5 pf.-arrangements of his own orchestral pieces (Symphony in C, Nattaglia, Danza di Satiri, Mesta Canzone, and Cipria e Parrucche).

Donizet'ti, Gaetano, one of the brilliant triumvirate (D., Rossini, and Bellini) of Italian opera-composers in the first half of the 19th century, was b. at Bergamo, Nov. 29, 1797; d. there April 8, 1848. His father, a weaver by trade, later obtained a position in the local monte di pietà, and desired that his son should become a lawyer. But D.'s inclinations were towards art; besides being strongly attracted to music, he studied architecture, drawing, and literature. His father finally allowed him to enter the Bergamo school of music; his teachers were Salari (voice), Gonzales (pf. and accomp.) and J. S. Mayr (harm.). In 1815 he changed to the Bologna Liceo Filarmonico, here completing his contrapuntal studies under Pilotti and Padre Mattei, to whom Mayr had recommended him. His father now insisted on his becoming a teacher, while D. himself felt an irresistible bent for dramatic composition. To end this conflict, he joined the army; his regiment was ordered to Venice; and here, in leisure moments, he composed his first opera, Enrico di Borgogna (Venice, 1818), whose success encouraged further production. His next opera, Il Falegname di Livonia (Venice, 1819; given at first as Pietro il Grande, Czar delle Russie), was likewise well received; but Le Nozze in villa (Mantua, 1820) was a failure. After the success of Zoraide di Granata (1822) he was exempted from further military service. From 1822 to 1829 inclusive, 23 operas flowed from his too facile pen; during this period D. was mostly a rather poor imitator of Rossini. But now, piqued by Bellini's successes, he wrote his Anna Bolena (Milan, 1830), which begins his second and more original period. Written for Pasta and Rubini—after the good (?) old Italian fashion of adapting rôles to singers—its vogue was more than local; in it, as Henry VIII, Lablache scored his first London triumph at the old 'King's Theatre.' In its wake followed L'Elisir d'amore (Milan, 1832), the tragic Lucrezia Borgia (La Scala, Milan, 1833), and the immensely popular Lucia di Lammermoor (Naples, Teatro San Carlo, 1835). Like that of so many other Italian opera-composers, D.'s life was spent in travelling from place to place, bringing out opera after opera. Now, enjoying European celebrity, he visited Paris in 1835, and produced Marino Faliero at the Théâtre des Italiens. In May, 1837, he succeeded Zingarelli as Director pro tem. of the Naples Cons.; in July of that year he lost his wife, Virginia (née Vasselli), after 14 years of happy wedded life. The censor's veto on the production of Poliuto (written for Ad. Nourrit after Corneille's Polyeucte) so angered him, that he incontinently forsook Milan for Paris. Here La Fille du régiment (Opéra-Com., Feb. 11, 1840), Les Martyrs (an amplification of the forbidden Poliuto; Opéra, April 10, 1849), and La Favorite (Opéra, Dec. 2, 1840), made a veritable sensation. Returning to Italy, Adelasia (Rome, 1841) and Maria Padilla (Milan, 1841) had good fortune. In Vienna (1842) Linda di Chamounix evoked such enthusiasm that the Emperor conferred on him the titles of Court Composer and Master of the Imperial Chapel (he had also written a Miserere and an Ave Maria for the 'Hofkapelle;' in a severe purity of style warmly commended by the local critics). Don Pasquale (revived at Stuttgart Court Th., 1898, with great applause) was produced in Paris, 1843. D. had reached the height of his fame and prosperity; though still maintaining the unbroken flow of creative activity, terrible headaches and mental depression warned him to desist; Caterina Cornaro (Naples, 1844) was his last work; one morning in 1845 he was found insensible on the floor of his bedroom, stricken with paralysis. He never recovered his mental powers, and died in 1848 at Bergamo, where a monument by Vincenzo Vela was erected to his memory in 1855.—Lucia di Lammermoor is generally held to be his finest work; in it the vein of melody—now sparkling, now sentimental, now tragic—which embodies Donizetti's best claim on originality and immortality, finds, perhaps, freest and broadest development. Besides operas, a full list of which follows, he wrote many songs, ariettas, duets, and canzonets; 7 Masses, one being a Requiem; cantatas; vespers, psalms, motets; 12 string-quartets; and piano-music.

In 1875 he went to Geneva; for many years he lived at Dresden as a teacher, writer, and composer, succeeding Wüllner in 1884 as prof. of comp. in the Dresden Cons.; made R. Prof., 1892; 'Hofrat,' 1898; 'Geh. Hofrat,' 1906; Ph.D. (hon. c.) from Berlin Univ., 1912. His earlier works are more or less extravagant, and never became popular; but for some 30 years his maturer style has compelled recognition of his undeniably commanding abilities.—Compositions: 6 operas; Sigurd (fragment given at Meiningen, 1867), Gudrun (Hanover, 1884), Bertrand de Born (MS., both book and music by D.), Herrat (3-act grand opera, Dresden, 1892; very successful); Fischer und Kalif (1-act, Prague, 1905); Merlin (Gotha, 1913); a great oratorio-trilogy, Christus, consisting of a prelude, Die Geburt des Herrn, I. Christi Weihe, II. Christus der Prophet, III. Tod und Sieg des Herrn (prod. in its entirety in Berlin and Dresden, 1912); 4 symphonies (op. 12, in G; op. 25, in F; op. 40, Tragica, in C; Comica, in E m.); Grand Mass in F♯ m., for soli, ch. and orch., op. 60; Missa a cappella, op. 85; Adventlied for soli, ch. and orch., op. 30; Requiem in B m., op. 22; Osterscene from Faust, for bar. solo, mixed ch., and orch., op. 39; Akademische Festouvertüre for orch.; Jubelouvertüre for orch.; pf.-concerto, op. 36; violin-concerto; Concertstück for 'cello with orch.; symphonic preludes to Calderon's Life a Dream, Kleist's Penthesilea (both in MS.); Serenata in D, for small orch., op. 49 (played by N. Y. Symph. Soc., Nov. 23, 1889); Der Thuner See (MS.), for orch.; Trauermarsch, op. 79; quintet for pf., vln., vla., 'cello and horn, op. 48; string-quintet in C♯ m.; 3 string-quartets, op. 27 (C m.), op. 35 (E m.), and No. 3 (C♭ m.); a sonata for clar. and pf., op. 38; do. for 'cello and pf., op. 51; 18 pf.-canons, a 6–8, op. 37; Canonic Riddles a 6, for pf. 4 hands, op. 42; 6 fugues for pf., op. 15; Ghaselen, pf.-pieces, op. 13; pf.-sonata, op. 6; songs, etc.—On theory: Anweisung zum kunstgerechten Moduliren (1876); Die Beseitigung des Tritonus (1876); a versified Harmonielehre (1884), Der gebundene Stil. Lehrbuch für Kontrapunkt und Fuge (2 vols., 1902); Die Konfusion in der Musik (1907).—Cf. H. Platzbecker, F. D., in vol. iii of 'Monographien moderner Musiker' (Leipzig, 1909).

Draghi [drah'gē], Antonio, composer of operas and oratorios; b. Ferrara, 1635; d. Vienna, Jan. 16, 1700. About 1660 he settled in Vienna, and was app. 'Hoftheater-Intendant' to Leopold I in 1674, also Kapellm. to the empress. From 1661–99 he produced 67 operas, 116 festival plays ('feste teatrali) and serenades, 32 oratorios. 11 cantatas, 2 masses, etc.—Cf. M. Neuhaus, A. D., in Adler's 'Studien zur Musikgeschichte', vol. i (1913).—See Q.-Lex.

Dra'ghi, Giovanni Battista, a fine harpsichordist, living in London from 1667–1706, was organist to the queen in 1677; also music-teacher to Queens Anne and Mary. He wrote the music to Dryden's ode From Harmony, and (with Locke) to Shadwell's Psyche and D'Urfey's The Wonders of the Sun, or The Kingdom of Birds (1706); also many melodious songs, and instructive harpsichord-lessons.

Dragonet'ti, Domenico, noted double-bass player; b. Venice, April 7, 1763; d. London, April 16, 1846. This 'Paganini of the contrabbasso' was self-taught, excepting a few lessons from Berini, player at San Marco, whom he succeeded in 1782; he had already played in the orchestras of the Opera buffa and Opera seria for 5 years, and composed concertos, etc., with double-bass parts impracticable for any one but himself. He appeared at London in 1794, and was immediately eng. for the opera and concert-orch. of the King's Th. With Lindley, his fast friend for 52 years, he also played at the Antient Concerts and the Philharm. As late as 1845, his virtuosity still unimpaired, he led the double-basses, at the unveiling of the Beethoven monument in Bonn, in the C minor symphony. To the British Museum he left a remarkable collection of scores, engravings, and old instrs.; to San Marco, his favorite 'cello (a Gasparo da Salò). His biogr. was written by F. Caffi: Vita di D. Dragonetti (Venice, 1846). No detailed record of his works appears to be extant.

Drake, Earl R., composer, teacher; b. Aurora, Ill., Nov. 26, 1865; d. Chicago, May 6, 1916. Studied violin with Rosenbecker (1880–3) in Chicago; w. Schradieck (1884–5) in Cincinnati; Carl Hild (1886–8); pf. and comp. with Kölling (1889–91); later vln. with Joachim, in Berlin (1892). Head of vln. dept. in Gottschalk Lyric School, Chicago (1893–7); dir. Drake Quartet; concert-tours from 1895–1910; organized his own school of music in Chicago in 1900.—Works: The Blind Girl of Castel-Cuillé, 3-act opera and ballet (Chicago, 1914); The Mite and the Mighty, 3-act light opera (ib., 1915); concerto in B m. for vln. and orch.; Dramatic Prologue for orch.; Ballet for orch.; Gypsy Scenes for vln. and orch.; pieces for vln. and pf. (Polish Dance, Mazurka, An Alpine Farewell, etc.).

Draud [Draudius] [drowt], Georg, b. Davernheim, Hesse, Jan. 9, 1573; d. Butzbach, circa 1635. A clergyman at Gross-Carben, Ortenberg, and Davernheim; his works are one of the chief sources for the mus. literature of the 15th, 16th and 17th centuries.—Publ. 'Bibliotheca classica' (1611; 2d ed. 1625; on pp. 1609–54 is a list of mus. authors and works); 'Bibliotheca exotica' (1625; a list of all mus. works printed in foreign [non-German] languages); 'Bibliotheca librorum germanicorum classica' (1625; list of mus. works in German, from the earliest times). In these lists, the original titles are rendered into Latin.

Drechsler [drek'-], Joseph, b. Wällisch-Birken (Vlachovo Březí), Bohemia, May 26, 1782; d. Vienna, Feb. 27, 1852. A pupil of the organist Grotius at Florenbach; chorus-master and asst.-Kapellm. (1812) at the Vienna court opera, then conductor in the theatres at Baden (n. Vienna) and Presburg; returning to Vienna, he became organist of the Servite church, in 1816 precentor at St. Ann's, in 1823 Kapellm. at the University church and the Hofpfarrkirche; from 1822–30 he was also Kapellm. at the Leopoldstadt Th., and from 1844 Kapellm. at St. Stephan, succeeding Gänsbacher.—Works: 6 operas, and about 30 operettas, vaudevilles and pantomines; a Requiem, 10 other masses, 3 cantatas, offertories, etc.; string-quartets, organ-fugues, pf.-sonatas, other pf.-music, songs, etc.; a Method for Organ, and a treatise on Harmony. He also reëdited Pleyel's Pf.-School, and publ. a theoretico-practical guide to Preluding.—Cf. C. Preiss, J. D. (Graz, 1910).

Drech'sler, Karl, born Kamenz, May 27, 1800; d. Dresden, Dec. 1, 1873. 'Cellist; member of the Dessau court orch. in 1820; studied, 1824–26, under Dotzauer at Dresden, and was then app. first 'cello at Dessau. He was pensioned in 1871. Among his many distinguished pupils were Grützmacher, Cossmann, Aug. Lindner and Karl Schröder.

Dregert [drā'gĕrt], Alfred, b. Frankfort-on-Oder, Sept. 26, 1836; d. Elberfeld, Mar. 14, 1893. Pupil, at the Stern Cons., Berlin, of Marx (theory), Wüerst (instrumentation), and v. Bülow (pf.). Opera-conductor at Stettin, Rostock, Bamberg, and Trier; then cond. of the Male Choral Societies in Stralsund, Cologne, and Elberfeld. Royal 'Musikdirektor.'—Works: Symphonies, overtures, string-quartets, pf.-pieces, fine male-choruses, and songs.

Dre'sel [drā'zĕl], Otto, b. Andernach, 1826; d. Beverly, Mass., July 26, 1890. A pupil of Hiller at Cologne, and Mendelssohn at Leipzig, he went to New York as concert-pianist and teacher in 1848; revisited Germany, but settled in Boston in 1852, where for some 15 years he was the foremost pianist. A musician of exceptional cultivation, he was very influential in introducing German music of the highest class, and more especially the songs of R. Franz, to the American public. He publ. only a few songs and pf.-pieces; several other works, though still in MS., have been produced (e. g., In memoriam, ballad for sopr. and orch., on Longfellow's poem on Agassiz' 50th birthday; Army Hymn for soli, ch. and orch., Jan. 1, 1863; a pf.-quartet, and a pf.-trio).

Dreszer [drĕh'sher], Anastasius Wilhelm, b. Kalisch, Poland, April 28, 1845; d. Halle, June 2, 1907. A brilliant pianist, playing in public when but 12, he studied in the Dresden Cons. 1859–61, then took private lessons from H. Döring, C. Krebs, and A. Früh, lived for several years as a comp. in Leipzig, visited Paris, and settled in Halle in 1868, where he founded a music-school of which he was the director till his death.—Publ. 2 symphonies, 2 sonatas and other pf.-pieces, songs, etc. In MS. an opera Valmoda (libretto by Peter Lohmann), a string-quartet, etc.

Dreves [drā'vĕs], Guido Maria, b. Hamburg, Oct. 27, 1854; d. Mitwitz, n. Kronach, June 1, 1909. He entered the Jesuit Order, and lived alternately in Vienna and Exaeten, Holland; since 1906 in Würzburg. For distinguished service to the cause of hymnology and mediæval music, the University of Munich made him Ph.D. (hon. c.). His greatest work is Analecta hymnica medii aevi (53 vols., 1886–1911); other works: Cantiones Bohemicae (1886); Die Hymnen des Johannes von Jenstein (1886); Aurelius Ambrosius, der Vater des Kirchengesanges (1893); Psalteria rhythmica (1901); Die Kirche der Lateiner in ihren Liedern (1908).

Drey'schock [drī'shŏhk], Alexander, brilliant pianist; b. Zack, Bohemia, Oct. 15, 1818; d. Venice, April 1, 1869. One of the most noted pupils of the Prague master, Tomaczek, he rivalled Liszt in technical dexterity. At 8 he was able to play in public; studied in Prague (while supposed to be devoting himself to medical work) under Tomaczek, and in Dec., 1838, began his first pianistic tour through North Germany. 1840–42 he spent in Russia; visited Brussels, Paris, and London; then (1846) Holland and Austria. In 1862 he was called to Petrograd to act as prof. in the newly-founded Cons., and Director of the music-school of the Opera, being also app. court pianist. Failing health necessitated, in 1868, a journey to Italy, where he died. His astounding facility in playing octaves, sixths, and thirds, and performing soli with the left hand—a feat then unheard of—cast a glamour about his performance which increasing familiarity with the coldness of his interpretation served to dispel; he reached the zenith of his fame about 1850.—Works: An opera, Florette, oder die erste Liebe Heinrichs des IV.; an overture for orch.; a rondo for orch.; a string-quartet, and 140 pf.-pieces, mostly salon-music of little value.

Drey'schock, Felix, pianist, son of Raimund D.; b. Leipzig, Dec. 27, 1860; d. Berlin, Aug. 1, 1906. Studied under Grabau, Ehrlich, Taubert, and Kiel, in the Berlin Royal 'Hochschule.' From 1883 he gave successful concerts, and was prof. at the Stern Cons., Berlin. His pf.-pieces are well-written and effective (e. g., op. 17); also published a violin-sonata (op. 16) and songs.

Drey'schock, Raimund, excellent violinist, brother of Alexander; b. Zack, Bohemia, Aug. 20, 1824; d. Leipzig, Feb. 6, 1869. Pupil of Pixis, Prague; 1850–69, leader in the Gewandhaus, and vln.-teacher in the Cons. at Leipzig.—His wife Elisabeth (née Nose), b. Cologne, 1832; d. there July, 1911; a fine contralto concert-singer, was the founder and manager of a vocal academy in Berlin (formerly in Leipzig).

Drie'berg [drē-], Friedrich Johann von, b. Charlottenburg, Dec. 10, 1780; d. there May 21, 1856, as Royal Chamberlain. He was Spontini's pupil in Paris, and produced 2 operas, Don Cocagno (Berlin, 1812), and Der Sänger und der Schneider (Berlin, 1814); others left in MS. He was best known as a writer on Greek music whose theories and conclusions, however, have long been entirely discredited.—Writings: Die mathematische Intervallenlehre der Griechen (1818); Aufschlüsse über die Musik der Griechen (1819);

Die praktische Musik der Griechen (1821); Die pneumatischen Erfindungen der Griechen (1822); Wörterbuch der griech. Musik (1835); Die griechische Musik, auf ihre Grundsätze zurückgeführt (1841); Die Kunst der mus. Composition . . . nach griechischen Grundsätzen bearbeitet (1858).

Dro'bisch, Karl Ludwig, b. Leipzig, Dec. 24, 1803; d. Augsburg, Aug. 20, 1854. A pupil of Dröbs and Weinlig, in Leipzig, from 1821; after the unsuccessful production of his oratorio Bonifacius at the Gewandhaus, in 1826, he withdrew to Munich, where he studied hard, also teaching. In 1837 he became Kapellm. of the Church of St. Anna, at Augsburg.—Works: 3 oratorios, Bonifacius, Des Heilands letzte Stunden, and Moses auf Sinai; 18 masses; 3 requiems; offertories, graduals, motets, and other church-music.

Dro'bisch, Moritz Wilhelm, brother of the preceding; b. Leipzig, Aug. 16, 1802; d. there Sept. 30, 1896. From 1826 prof. of mathematics, and from 1842, of philosophy, at Leipzig Univ. He publ. several valuable treatises on musical tones: Über die mathem. Bestimmung der musikal. Intervalle (1846); Über musikal. Tonbestimmung u. Temperatur (1852); Nachträge zur Theorie der musik. Tonverhältnisse (1855); Über ein zwischen Altem und Neuem vermittelndes Tonsystem (1871); Über reine Stimmung und Temperatur der Töne (1877); in this last, Drobisch, who formerly championed the 12-semitone system, concurs in principle with Helmholtz's views.

Drouet [droo-ä'], Louis-François-Philippe, b. Amsterdam, 1792; d. Bern, Sept. 30, 1873. A distinguished flutist, who, as a pupil of the Paris Cons., played there and at the Opéra when but 7 years old. From 1807–10, teacher to King Louis of Holland; 1811, solo flutist to Napoleon, afterwards to Louis XVIII. In 1815 he went to London, played in the Philharmonic in 1816, and thereafter made long concert-tours throughout Europe. In 1836 he was app. Kapellm. at Koburg; visited America for a few months in 1854.—His works for flute, over 150 in number, comprise 10 concertos, 2 fantasias for pf. and flute (op. 36, 37), 3 trios for 3 flutes (op. 33), 3 waltz-duets (op. 24); ensemble sonatas, duets, variations, etc. He is said to have written the French popular air Partant pour la Syrie from Queen Hortense's dictation.

Dryden, John, the famous English poet; b. Aldwinkle, Northamptonshire, Aug. 9 (?), 1631; d. London, May 1, 1700. He wrote the libretto of King Arthur for Purcell; also the 'Ode for St. Cecilia's Day,' which Purcell, Handel and others have set to music. Incidental music has also been written, by eminent English composers, to many of his stage-works.

Drysdale, Learmont, b. Edinburgh, 1866; d. there June 18, 1909. Pupil of R. A. M., and winner of the Lucas prize for comp., 1890.—Wrote for orch.: The Spirit of the Glen, a ballad (1889); Thomas the Rhymer, prelude (1890); Tam O'Shanter, overture (1891; awarded prize by Glasgow Society of Musicians); Herondean, overture (1894); The Kelpie, a cantata (1894); an opera, The Red Spider, was produced at Dundee (1898).

Dubois [dü-bwäh'], (Clément-François-) Théodore, b. Rosnay, Marne, Aug. 24, 1837. After preliminary teaching at Rheims, he entered the Paris Cons. in 1853, studying under Marmontel (pf.), Benoist (organ), Bazin (harm.) and Ambroise Thomas (fugue and comp.), graduating (1861) as Grand prix de Rome with the cantata Atala, after having taken first prizes in all departments. From Rome he sent a solemn mass (perf. at the Madeleine in 1870), a dramatic work, La prova di un opera seria (not perf.), and 2 overtures; returning to Paris, he settled there as a teacher, became m. de chap. at Sainte-Clothilde, and then succeeded Saint-Saëns, in 1877, as organist at the Madeleine. In 1871 he was made harmony-prof. at the Cons., succeeding Elwart; in 1891 he became Léo Delibes' successor as prof. of comp.; in 1894 he was elected to the chair in the Acad. left vacant by Gounod's death; in 1896 he succeeded Ambroise Thomas as Director of the Cons., and was made an officer of the Legion of Honor; retired, 1905. Dubois' comps. are very numerous; among them the 1-act comic opera La Guzla de l'émir (1873, Athénée Th.), and Le pain bis, ou la Lilloise (1879, Op.-Com.); a 4-act grand opera Aben Hamet (1884; Italiens); a 3-act 'idylle dramatique,' Xavière (1895, Op.-Com.); the 3-act opera Circé (not perf.); the ballet La Farandole (1882, Opéra); 2 oratorios: Les Sept Paroles du Christ (1867), Le Paradis perdu (1878; won the City of Paris prize); several cantatas (l'Enlèvement de Proserpine, Hylas, Bergerette, Les Vivants et les morts, Délivrance); several masses, and other church-music; many orchestral works: Concert-overture in D; 3 airs de ballet; 3 orchestral suites; 4 petites pièces; 3 petites pièces; Marche héroïque de Jeanne d'Arc; Fantaisie triomphale, for organ and orch.; Hymne nuptiale; Méditation-Prière for strings, oboe, harp and organ; Concerto-Capriccio, for pf., and a 2d pf.-concerto (1895); a violin-concerto; symphonic overture in C; overture to Frithiof; 2 symphonic poems, Notre Dame de la Mer and Adonis; pf.-pieces (Chœur et danse des lutins; 6 poèmes sylvestres); pieces for organ and for harmonium; a cappella choruses; etc.

Dubois (Du Bois), Léon, born Brussels, Jan. 9, 1859. Won the Grand prix de Rome at the Brussels Cons. in 1885; second cond. at the Th. de la Monnaie, Brussels, since 1890; successor, in 1912, of Tinel as director of Brussels Cons.—Works: 4 operas, Son Excellence ma femme (1884), La Revanche de Sganarelle (1886), Edénie (Antwerp, 1912), and Mazeppa (not perf.); also the 1-act ballet Smylis (Brussels, 1891), the mimodrama Le Mort (Brussels, 1894), a symphonic poem Atala, etc.

Ducis, Benoît [Benedictus Ducis], distinguished composer of the 16th century, probably b. near Constance circa 1480; d. Schalkstetten, n. Ulm, 1544. Org. at Notre-Dame, Antwerp, 1514–16, and 'Prince de la gilde' in the brotherhood of St. Luke; org. and chm. at the Chapel Royal in London, 1516–18. After that he seems to have lived in Vienna, and to have joined the Reformation; in 1535 he was app. pastor in Schalkstetten, after an application for a similar position in Ulm (made in 1732 under the name 'Benedict Duch') had been refused. Fétis' long list of D.'s works is unreliable since Barclay Squire (in 'Smbd. Int. M. G.' XIII, 2 [Jan., 1912]) has brought conclusive evidence that a considerable number of these works must be attributed to Benedictus Appenzelders (q. v.).—Cf. Friedrich Spitta's study in 'Monatschrift für Gottesdienst und Kirchliche Kunst' (Jan.-March, 1913).

Ducroquet. See DAUBLAINE.

Dufau [dü-foh'], Jenny, lyr. and coloratura soprano; b. Rothau, Alsace. Pupil of Etelka Gerster in Berlin from 1901–5; studied subsequently for short periods with Mme. Marchesi, P. Vidal, A. Selva and G. Benvenuti; début at Weimar, 1906, as La Reine in Les Huguenots; member of Grand Ducal Th. there until 1908; then, until 1910, star appearances in Ancona, Genoa, Milan, Bologna, Bucharest and Athens; 1910–11 at R. Opera, Berlin; since 1911 member of Chicago Opera Co., of which she is one of the most distinguished artists; created the rôle of the Fairy in the Amer. première of Massenet's Cendrillon (1911); among her favorite rôles are Rosina, Violetta, Lucia, Gilda, Philine, Marguerite, Manon, Lakmé, etc. Her voice is light, of pleasing quality, and especially well adapted to coloratura parts; it has a range of 2½ octaves.

Dufay, Guillaume, famous French contrapuntist; b. circa 1400; d. Cambrai, Nov. 27, 1474; being the most recent in the distinguished triad Dunstable-Binchois-Dufay. In 1428 he became a chorister in the Papal Chapel, and in 1437 entered the service of Philippe le Bon, Duke of Burgundy; he took holy orders in Paris, lived seven years in Savoy, and finally became a canon at Cambrai. According to Adam of Fulda, D. made many changes in notation; he is the reputed inventor of white (open) notes. Fr. X. Haberl (in the 4th book of the 'Vschr. f. M. W.' 1885) gives a list of 150 comps. found in the libraries of Rome, Bologna, and Trieste, incl. masses (finished and fragmentary), motets, a magnificat, other church-music, French chansons, etc. Other MSS. are in the libraries at Paris, Brussels, Cambrai, and Munich.—Cf. F. X. Haberl, Wilhelm Du Fay, in 'Bausteine für Musikgeschichte' (1885); Ch. van den Borren, G. D. Son importance historique (Liège, 1909).

Dufranne [dü-frähn'], Hector, dramatic baritone; b. Belgium. Début as Valentine in Faust, at La Monnaie, Brussels, Sept. 9, 1896; next season at Cov. Garden; from 1899 member of Op.-Comique; 1908 at Hammerstein's Manhattan Op. House, N. Y.; 1910–13 member Chicago Op. Co.; has created principal baritone rôles in Pelléas et Mélisande, La Carmelita (Hahn), Monna Vanna (Février), Grisélidis, Messidor (Bruneau), etc.; has sung in Carmen, Samson et Dalila, Lakmé, Roméo et Juliette, Manon, l'Attaque du Moulin, Tannhäuser, Lohengrin, Rheingold, Aida, Hérodiade, Iphigénie en Tauride (Gluck), Figaro, etc.

Dugazon [dü-găh-zŏhn'], Louise-Rosalie (née Lefèvre), b. Berlin, 1753; went to Paris in 1761, and d. there Sept. 22, 1821. Although not a trained vocalist, the grace and charm of her singing and acting in 'comédies à ariettes' (comedy-operas, operettas, etc.) aroused the utmost enthusiasm at her very début as Pauline in Grétry's Sylvain (July 30, 1774, Comédie-Italienne). Among her principal rôles were those of Babet (in Blaise et Babet), Justine (Alexis et Justine); her impersonations were so animated and original, even when advancing years obliged her to sing 'older' parts, that rôles of this description have ever since been distinguished as 'Jeunes Dugazon,' and 'Mères Dugazon.' She retired finally in 1806.

Dug'gan, Joseph Francis, pianist and comp.; b. Dublin, July 10, 1817; d. (?). He was accompt. of the recitatives in Italian Opera, New York, and cond. of John Wilson's English opera-troupe, and of German opera; taught in Phila., Baltimore, and Washington; was principal of and prof. in the Phila. Mus. Inst., 1841. From 1844–5 he taught in Paris; lived in Edinburgh and London, and became prof. of singing in the Guildhall School of Music.—He wrote 2 successful operas, Pierre (London, 1853) and Léonie (London, 1854), and 3 others (MS.); 2 symphonies, 6 string-quartets, numerous pf.-pieces; also publ. The Singing-Master's Asst., and transls. of Albrechtsberger's Science of Music (Phila., 1842) and of Fétis' Counterpoint and Fugue.

Du'iffoprug'gar (properly Tieffenbrucker), Caspar, b. Tieffenbrugg, Bavaria, 1514 [date established by Dr. Coutaigne of Lyons, in his work Gaspar Duiffoproucart et les luthiers lyonnais du XVII^e siècle (Paris, 1893)]; d. Lyons, Dec. 16, 1571. Long reputed to be the first maker of violins; but Vidal, in his Les Instruments à archet, states that all the so-called D. violins are spurious, having been made by Vuillaume, who in 1827 conceived the idea of making violins after the pattern of a 'viola da gamba' by D. Apparently, the latter learned his trade in Italy, the usual spellings of his name showing it to be Italianized rather than Gallicized; he settled in Lyons in 1553, and was naturalized in 1559.

Dukas [dü-käh'], Paul, b. Paris, Oct. 1, 1865. From 1882–8 pupil at the Cons. of G. Mathias (pf.), Th. Dubois (harm.) and E. Guiraud (comp.); won 1st prize for cpt. and fugue in 1886, and second Prix de Rome with a cantata Velléda (1888); mus. critic of the 'Revue Hebdomadaire' and 'Gazette des Beaux-Arts'; 1906, Chev. Légion d'Honneur; since 1909 prof. of orch. class and member of 'Conseil de l'enseignement supérieur' at the Cons. He is a composer of solid attainments, whose talent shows to greatest advantage in the larger instrumental forms, which he handles with mastery.—Works: 3 overtures, King Lear (1883), Götz von Berlichingen (1884), Polyeucte (1891); a symph. in C (1896); an orchl. scherzo, l'Apprenti-Sorcier (1897; his most famous work); an opera, Ariane et Barbe-Bleu (Op.-Com., 1907; New York, 1911); a ballet, La Péri (1910); Villanelle for horn and pf. (1906); for pf.: Sonata in E♭ m.; Variations, interlude et finale on a theme of Rameau; Prélude élégiaque. Together with Saint-Saëns he completed Guiraud's opera Frédégonde (Gr.-Op., 1895.)—Cf. O. Séré, Musiciens français d'aujourd'hui (2d ed. Paris, 1911); G. Samazeuilh, P. D. (Paris, 1913).

Dul'cken, Ferdinand Quentin, pianist; b. London, June 1, 1837; d. New York, 1902; was a pupil, in Leipzig Cons., of Mendelssohn, Moscheles, Gade, Hauptmann, and (for organ) Becker; also later of F. Hiller at Cologne. He became prof. at the Warsaw Cons.; lived in Paris 4 years; made many concert-tours in Europe (with Wieniawski, Vieuxtemps, de Kontski, etc.); went to America in 1876, and travelled with Remenyi, Joseffy, Essipov, and Marie Rôze; lived for several years in New York, where he taught harm. at the National Cons.—Works: An opera, Wieslav; a solemn mass; cantatas; pf.-pieces, songs, etc.

Dul'cken, Luise, pianist (née David [a sister of Ferd. David]); b. Hamburg, March 20, 1811; d. London, April 12, 1850. She was taught by C. F. G. Schwencke and Wilh. Grund; played in public, in Germany, when but 11 years of age; she married in 1828, and went to London, where she met with brilliant success as a pianist and teacher. Queen Victoria was one of her very numerous pupils.

Dulichius (Dulich, Deilich, Deulich), Philippus, b. Chemnitz, Dec. (bapt. 19th), 1562; d. Stettin, March 25, 1631; probably a pupil of A. Gabrieli in Venice; from 1587 until his death cantor in Stettin. Of his numerous works (exclusively vocal) the most important are Novum opus musicum duarum partium continens dicta insigniora ex evangeliis (Stettin, 1598–9); Centuriae octon. et septen. vocum harmonias sacras laudibus sanctissimae Triados consacratas continentes (4 parts, Stettin, 1607,'8,'10,'12). R. Schwartz publ. 7 choruses from the Centuriae (1896); the complete Centuriae are publ. in 'Dkm. deutscher Tonkunst' (xxxi, xli).—Cf. R. Schwartz, P. D., in 'Monatsschr. für Gottesdienst und Kirchliche Kunst' (1896).—See Q.-Lex.

Du Locle, Camille (Du Commun), born Orange, Vaucluse, in 1832; d. Nice, Oct. (?), 1903. He was secretary of the Opéra under Perrin's direction; later, director of the Opéra-Comique. The libretti of Verdi's Don Carlos (French), and Reyer's Sigurd and Salammbô, were from his pen; also, in collaboration with Nuitter, of Verdi's Aida (in French), Duvernoy's Hallé, and La Force du destin.

Dülon, Friedrich Ludwig, a blind flutist; b. Oranienburg, n. Potsdam, Oct. 14, 1769; d. Würzburg, July 7, 1826. He was taught by his father (flute) and Angerstein of Stendal (theory); in 1783 his concert-travels began, and extended all over Europe. From 1796–1800 he was chamber-musician at the Petrograd court; then lived in Stendal, and settled (1823) in Würzburg. He wrote an autobiography: Dülons des blinden Flötenspielers Leben und Meinungen, von ihm selbst bearbeitet (Zurich, 2 vols., 1807–8, edited by Wieland).—Works: A flute-concerto; 9 duets and variations for flute and violin; flute-duets; caprices for flute.

Dulov, Prince Georg, b. Moscow, June 4, 1875. He received his first instruction from his mother, an excellent pianist; then pupil of Klammroth and of Hřímaly (vln.) at the Imp. Cons. of Moscow; 1897–1901 vlnst. in the quartet of Duke Georg of Mecklenburg; since 1901 professor at the Moscow Cons.

Has published a number of concert-pieces for vln. and orch. or pf.; technical studies and a school for vln.; has also ed. comps. of earlier masters with added accompaniment.

Dumesnil [dü-mä-nēl'], Suzanne (Zaïde), stage-soprano, especially fetching in boy-parts; b. Havre, France, Nov. 6, 1884. At 17 she already had won a reputation in Paris as a singer of quaint 18th-century songs; prosecuting her studies under Louis Delaquerrière for 18 months, she made her début in 1903 at the Opéra-Comique, and was eng. there for four years (1903–7). In Nov., 1909, she first appeared in New York (Manhattan Opera House) as Georgette in Les Dragons de Villars. She created the rôles of Angioletta in La Reine Fiammette, Coriuna in Aphrodite, and Théobald in La Fille de Roland; Angioletta, and Yniold (in Pelléas et Mélisande), are her favorite rôles; others are Gavroche (Louise), Chahte (Amour d'Orphée), Frasquita (Carmen), Poussette (Manon), Jean (Le Portrait de Manon), Brigitte (Domino noir), Frédéric (Mignon), Ellen (Lakmé).

Dumont [dü-mon'], Henri, b. Villers l'Evèque, n. Liège, 1610; d. Paris, May 8, 1684; was chorister at Maestricht, ordained priest at Liège, and org. at St. Paul's, Paris, from 1639–84. Works: 5 Messes Royales en plain-chant (Paris, 1699 [?]; 4th ed. 1701); 3 books of Meslanges a 2, 3, 4, 5 (Paris, 1649, '57, '61); 5 books of motets a 2-4; etc.—Cf. H. Quittard, Un musicien en France au XVII^e siècle. H. D. (in 'Mercure de France,' 1907); A. Gastoué, Les Messes Royales de H. D. (Paris, 1912).—See Q.-Lex.

Duncan, Edmonstoune, writer, comp.; b. Sale, Cheshire, Engl., 1866. Educated at R. C. M. (scholarship 1883–6), pupil of Sir Hubert Parry, Sir Geo. Martin, Ernst Pauer and Sir F. Bridge. Correspondent of the 'Musical Standard,' 'Musical Times,' 'Musical Opinion,' 'Choir and Organist,' 'Musical Record,' 'The Musician' (Boston), 'New Music Review' (N. Y.).—Works Perseus, opera (1892); Ye Mariners of England, ode for ch. and orch. (1889); Mass in F m. (1892); Ode to Music, for solo, ch. and orch. (1893); To a Nightingale (Milton) for sop. and small orch. (1895); quintet for flute, clar., horn, bassoon and pf. (1895); sonata, D m., for pf.; trio in E m.; about 100 pieces for pf.; do. for organ; many songs. He also has written several books, the more important of which are Life of Schubert (1905); Story of English Minstrelsy (1907); History of Music (1908); Encyclopedia of Musical Terms (1913); Elementary Musical Composition (1913); Ultra-modernism in Music; Art of Pianoforte Playing (2 vols., 1913).

Dunham, Henry Morton, b. Brockton, Mass., July 29, 1853. Graduate of the N. E. Cons. (1873), and later of the Boston Univ. Coll. of Music at Boston (1875); among his teachers were G. E. Whiting (org.), J. C. D. Parker (pf.) and J. K. Paine (comp.); org. of Porter Cong. Church, Brockton, 1875–83; of Ruggles St. Baptist Church, Boston, 1883–96; Shawmut Cong. Church, Boston, 1896–1906, and Harvard Church, Brookline, 1906–12, when he retired. Prof. in New Eng. Cons. since 1880; director of music at Lassell Seminary, Auburndale, since 1910.—Publ. works: 'Organ School' (in 4 books); 3 organ-sonatas (in G m., F m., and D m.); marches, preludes, fugues, passacaglias, and other organ-music; has also made numerous organ-arrangements.—A System of Technique for Pf.; Capriccio brillante for pf.; The Choir-Manual; Te Deum in D*; Hymn Music* (3 books); etc.

Dunhill, Thomas Frederick, b. Hampstead, London, Feb. 1, 1877. Ent. R. C. M. in 1893, and studied with F. Taylor and C. V. Stanford; won scholarship for comp. in 1897; 1899–1908, asst.-prof. of pf. at Eton Coll.; since 1905, prof. of harm. and cpt. at R. C. M.; in 1907 he founded the 'Concerts of British Chamber Music,' which occupy a prominent place in the London musical season.—Works: Valse-Fantasia, for flute and orch.; Capricious Variations, for vcl. and orch.; a pf.-quintet in C m.; quintet for vln., vcl., clar., horn and pf., in E♭; a pf.-quartet, in B m.; a quintet for horn and string-quartet, in F m.; Rhapsody in A m., for orch.; Comrades, for bar. and orch.; The Wind among the Reeds, song-cycle for ten. and orch.

Du'ni, Egidio Romualdo, b. Matera, n. Otranto (Naples), Feb. 9, 1709; d. Paris, June 11, 1775. He first studied in the Cons. 'della Madonna di Loreto,' under Durante; then in the Cons. 'della Pietà de' Turchini.' His first opera, Nerone (Rome, 1735), was a great popular success, completely eclipsing Pergolesi's Olimpiade. Composing industriously, he visited Vienna; was made m. di capp. at S. Nicolò di Bari, in Naples; went to Holland, Paris, and London (1744); became tutor at the Court of Parma, where, encouraged by the Duke, he began composing French operettas, the first of which, Ninette à la cour (Paris, 1755), was so well received that D. settled in Paris, where he brought out a swarm of light and frivolous stage-pieces which just suited the prevailing taste. He is looked upon as one of the founders of French opéra bouffe. He wrote about 13 Italian operas, and 20 in French.—See Q.-Lex.

Dunkley, Ferdinand (Luis), b. London, England, July 16, 1869. Pupil, 1886–90, at R. A. M. (Scholarship), of Parry, Bridge, Martin, Gladstone, Sharpe, and Barnet.

Awarded diploma, F. R. C. O., 1886. Organist and choirmaster of St. Jude's, London, E. C., 1885–7; of St. Aubyn's, London, S. E., 1888–93; and Director of Music at Battersea Grammar School, London, S. W., 1892–3; was engaged in 1893, by Bishop Doane, as Director of Music at St. Agnes' School, Albany, N. Y.; was also organist and choirmaster at State St. Presby. Church, Albany, 1894–6, and since 1897, at Trinity M. E. Church, Albany.—Publ. works: The Wreck of the Hesperus, ballade for soli, ch. and orch.; River Scenes, for pf.; Élégie, for pf.; many songs. A MS. orchestral suite took prize of 50 guineas (1889).

Dunn, John, fine concert-violinist; b. Hull, Feb. 16, 1866. He received his first instruction from his brother, who was cond. of the Hull Th. Orch.; from 1878–81, pupil at Leipzig Cons. of Schradieck (vln.), E. Fr. Richter (harm.), and S. Jadassohn (cpt.); début at Prom. Conc., London, Oct., 1882; has toured England and Germany with success. He has written several pieces for vln., a cadenza to Beethoven's concerto, and a concerto for vln. and orch. (MS.).

Dunstable [Dunstaple], John, b. Dunstable, Bedfordshire, England, circa 1370; d. Walbrook, Dec. 24, 1453. Eminent contrapuntist, rivalling his contemporaries Binchois and Dufay, and noted by Tinctor as one of the 'fathers' of counterpoint. Until the discovery of six volumes of MSS. in the library of the cathedral of Trent (known as the 'Trent Codices') by F. X. Haberl, in 1884, practically nothing was known of D.'s works; Adler and Koller, in 1900, publ. six sacred and a number of secular pieces of D. from these Codices in vol. vii of 'Dkm. der Tonkunst in Österreich.' The only works previously publ. were a 3-part chanson, O Rosa bella (by Morelot, in De la musique au XV^e siècle; also by Ambros in his Geschichte d. Musik, vol. ii, appdx.) and four pieces (Gloria and 3 hymns) by E. Woodridge in 'Early English Harmony.' So far 45 works of D. have been discovered in libraries in Modena, Bologna, Oxford. The British Museum possesses 31 pieces copied by W. B. Squire from a MS. in the Estensian library of Modena.—An examination of these works of D. revealed not only the existence of a highly developed art in England early in the 15th century, slightly antedating the oldest known French school (Busnois, Binchois, Dufay), but also showed that D. had transferred the early style of the Florentine secular chanson, with instrumental accomp., to sacred compositions. Of his work Riemann says: 'Because of a surprising simplicity and grandeur of the melodic line D. actually stands forth as an epoch-making personality.'—Cf. H. Riemann, Handbuch der Musikgeschichte (Leipzig, 1907, ii, 1, pp. 106, 109 et seq.).

Duparc [Fouques Duparc], (Marie-Eugène-) Henri, b. Paris, Jan. 21, 1848. Pupil of César Franck from 1872–5; one of the founders of the 'Société Nationale de Musique.' A nervous affection compelled him to renounce all artistic activity in 1885, since when he has been living in retirement in Switzerland. Franck considered him the most gifted of all his pupils; 16 songs, written before 1878, are of extraordinary beauty and originality, being placed by several critics above similar works by any other French composer. Among several works destroyed by D. himself were a sonata for vcl. and pf., Poème nocturne, and a suite for orch. His extant works are a symphonic poem, Lénore (1875), Aux Étoiles, for orch. (early work, publ. 1910); Feuilles volantes, 6 pieces for pf.; La Fuite, duet for sop. and ten. (1872); and the songs Sérénade, Romance de Mignon, Galop, Chanson triste, Soupir, Invitation au Voyage, La Vague et la Cloche, Extase, Sérénade florentine, Le Manoir de Rosamonde, Testament, Phydilé, Lamento, Élégie, La Vie antérieure, Au Pays où se fait la guerre.—Cf. O. Séré, Musiciens français d'aujourd'hui (2d ed., Paris, 1911).

Dupont [dü-pŏhn'], Auguste, excellent pianist; b. Ensival, near Liège, Feb. 9, 1827; d. Brussels, Dec. 17, 1890. His teacher was Jalheau at the Liège Cons.; he travelled in England and Germany, and in 1852 was app. prof. of pf. at Brussels Cons. He was not only a player of remarkable brilliancy, but also highly successful as a teacher and composer.—Works: Grand concerto-symphonie for pf. and orch.; concerto in F m.; many characteristic pieces (generally salon-music) for pf.; pf.-études; also an École de Piano, written for the Brussels Cons., containing masterpieces from the 16th–19th centuries in chronological order.

Dupont, Gabriel, b. Caen, 1878. Pupil of his father, the organist at the Cathedral; then of Widor at the Paris Cons.; won Prix de Rome in 1901. At the Sonzogno competition of 1903 his opera La Cabrera was awarded the prize of 50,000 francs over 238 rivals, and was prod. with enormous success at Milan (1904); other works: La Glu (Cannes, 1910), La Farce du Cuvier (Brussels, 1912). A + 1911

Dupont, Jean-François, b. Rotterdam, 1822; d. Nuremberg, March 21, 1875. Pupil, at Leipzig Cons., of Mendelssohn (comp.) and David (vln.); went to Hamburg in 1854; was Kapellm. at Linz (1856), and Nuremberg (1858–74).—He wrote large choral and orchestral works, and produced the 3-act grand opera Bianca Siffredi (Linz, 1855).

Dupont, Joseph (aîné), violinist; b. Liège, Aug. 21, 1821; d. there Feb. 13, 1861. He studied at the Liège Cons. under Wanson and Prume, and was app. prof. there when but 17.—Works: 2 operas, Riberio Pinto (comic), and l'Île d'or; church-music; a string-quartet, and a string-quintet; solo pieces and études for violin, etc.

Dupont, Joseph (le jeune), brother of Auguste; b. Ensival, near Liège, Jan. 3, 1838; d. Brussels, Dec. 21, 1899. Studied in the Conservatories at Liège and Brussels, taking the Grand prix de Rome. In 1867, cond. at Warsaw; in 1871, cond. at the Imp. Th. in Moscow; in 1872, app. prof. of harm. at Brussels Cons.; he also became conductor at the Théâtre de la Monnaie, of the Society of Musicians, and of the Popular Concerts (succeeding Vieuxtemps).

Dupont, Pierre, b. Rochetaillée, n. Lyons, April 23, 1821; d. St.-Etienne, July 25, 1870. The son of a laborer, and himself uneducated, he made a name by his political and rustic ditties, of which he wrote the words, and then sang the airs to Reyer, who put them into shape. His political songs (Le Pain, Le Chant des ouvriers, etc.) created such disturbances that he was banished in 1851, but pardoned in 1852, after the 'coup d'état.'

Duport [dü-pohr'], Jean-Louis, the brother of Jean-Pierre, and a still more famous 'cellist; b. Paris, Oct. 4, 1749; d. there Sept. 7, 1819. He first played in public at the 'Concerts Spirituels' in 1768. He joined his brother in Berlin at the outbreak of the Revolution; returning in 1806, he became musician to Charles IV, the ex-king of Spain, at Marseilles; returned to Paris in 1812, where he was soon regarded as the foremost French 'cellist, joined the imperial orch. (remaining a member when it became the royal orch.), and was app. prof. in the Cons. (suppressed 1815).—Works: 6 'cello-concertos; sonatas, duos, airs variées, 9 nocturnes (for harp and 'cello), etc. His Essai sur le doigter du violoncelle et la conduite de l'archet, avec une suite d'exercices, is still a standard text-book, and practically laid the foundations of modern 'cello virtuosity.

Duport, Jean-Pierre, famous 'cellist; b. Paris, Nov. 27, 1741; d. Berlin, Dec. 31, 1818. In Berlin he was first 'cello in the court orch. from 1773, and superintendent of the court concerts from 1787–1806; pensioned 1811.—Works: 3 duos for 2 'celli; 6 sonatas for 'cello and bass.

Duprato, Jules-Laurent, b. Nîmes, Aug. 20, 1827; d. Paris, May 20, 1892. Pupil of Leborne at the Paris Cons., where his cantata Damoclès won the Grand prix de Rome in 1848. After study in Italy and Germany, he settled in Paris as a composer; in 1866 he was app. asst.-teacher, and in 1872 prof. of harm., at the Cons. He produced 12 opéras comiques and wrote 3 others which were not performed; 4 cantatas; choruses for equal voices; songs, etc.

Duprez [dü-prā'], Louis-Gilbert, dram. tenor; b. Paris, Dec. 6, 1806; d. there Sept. 23, 1896. His fine boy-voice gained him admission to Choron's Institute; after diligent vocal and theoretical study, he made his début as Count Almaviva at the Odéon, in 1825. Dissatisfied with the results, he subjected himself to a long course of training in Italy, and in 1836 succeeded Nourrit at the Opéra. He was app. prof. of lyrical declamation at the Cons. in 1842, but resigned in 1850 to establish a vocal school of his own, which flourished. After his retirement (1855) from the stage, he prod. several operas, an oratorio, a mass, etc., without great success. But his vocal methods, L'art du chant (1845) and La Mélodie, études complémentaires vocales et dramatiques de l'Art du chant (1846), are justly celebrated.

Dupuis [dü-püē'], Albert, b. Verviers, March 1, 1877. Pupil of d'Indy at the Schola Cantorum in Paris; winner of Belgian Prix de Rome with Chanson d'Halewyn (1904; prod. as 3-act opera at Brussels, 1913); now (1916) dir. of the Cons. at Verviers.—Works: The operas l'Idylle (Verviers, 1896); Bilitis (Verviers, 1899); Jean Michel (Brussels, 1903); Martylle (ib., 1905); Fidelaine (Liège, 1910); Le Château de Bretèche (Nice, 1913); La Passion (Monte Carlo, 1916); La Captivité de Babylone (bibl. dram, not yet prod.); the choral works with orch. Les Cloches nuptiales, Œdipe à Colone and Cortège lyrique. Another grand opera is La Victoire, almost completed 1916.

Dupuis, Sylvain, b. Liège, Nov. 9, 1856. Pupil of the Liège Cons., winning the Prix de Rome in 1881; teacher of cpt. there; conductor of the singing-society La Légia; estab. in 1888 the 'Nouveaux Concerts Symphoniques'; app. 1st cond. at Th. La Monnaie in Brussels, 1900, and cond. of the 'Concerts Populaires'; since 1911 dir. of the Cons. at Liège; member of the Belgian Academy.—Works: 2 operas, Cour d'Ognon; Moïna; 3 cantatas, La Cloche de Roland, Camoëns, and Chant de la Création; a symphonic poem, Macbeth; a concertino for oboe and orch.; 2 suites for orch.; pieces for violin; ditto for vcl.; male choruses; etc.

Durand [dü-rähn'], Émile, b. St.-Brieuc, Côtes du Nord, Feb. 16, 1830; d. Neuilly,

May 6, 1903. While still a student at the Paris Cons., he was app. (1850) teacher of an elementary singing-class, and in 1871 prof. of harmony.—Works: Operettas l'Élixir de Cornélius (1868), l'Astronome du Pont Neuf (1869), and others; male choruses, and songs; also a Traité d'Harmonie and Traité de Composition musicale.

Durand, Marie-Auguste, b. Paris, July 18, 1830; d. there May 31, 1909. Organ-pupil of Benoist; in 1849, organist at St.-Ambroise, then at Ste.-Geneviève, St.-Roch, and (1862–74) St.-Vincent de Paul. In 1870 he entered into partnership with Schönewerk (acquiring Flaxland's music-publishing business), at first as 'Durand & Schönewerk,' later as 'Durand & Fils,' now Durand & Cie., and making a specialty of publishing modern works (by Joncières, Lalo, Massenet, Saint-Saëns, Widor, Debussy, etc.). He also occupied himself with mus. criticism and composition (masses, songs, dance-pieces, and especially music for harmonium).

Duran'te, Francesco, celebrated church-comp. and gifted teacher; b. Fratta Maggiore, Naples, March 15, 1684; d. Naples, Aug. 13, 1755. He studied in Naples at the Cons. 'dei Poveri di Gesù Cristo,' under Gaetano Greco; later under Aless. Scarlatti in the Cons. San Onofrio, of which he was made Director in 1718. He afterwards became maestro at the Cons. of Santa Maria di Loreto, his salary here being not quite $100 per annum. After Scarlatti, and with Leo, Durante ranks as one of the founders and a chief representative of the 'Neapolitan school' of composition. He devoted himself almost exclusively to sacred music, in which the breadth, vigor, and resourcefulness of his style are more in evidence than marked originality. He was one of the greatest teachers that ever lived; his illustrious pupils Duni, Traetta, Vinci, Jommelli, Piccinni, Guglielmi, Pergolesi, Paisiello, and others, took almost complete possession of the European lyric stage during the latter half of the 18th century.—The library of the Paris Cons. contains a rich collection of his works, in MS.: 13 masses, and fragments of masses; 16 psalms, 16 motets, several antiphons and hymns; besides 12 madrigals, 6 harpsichord-sonatas, etc. His Lamentations of Jeremiah and a Pastoral Mass are in the Vienna Library (in MS.). His few published works are found in the collections of Schlesinger, Rochlitz, Commer, and the Fitzwilliam Music; Karmrodt of Halle printed a grand Magnificat (with additional accompaniments by Robert Franz); Br. & H. published 12 duetti da camera.—See Q.-Lex.

Dürr'ner, Ruprecht Johannes Julius, b. Ansbach, Bavaria, July 15, 1810; d. Edinburgh, June 10, 1859. Pupil of Friedrich Schneider at Dessau; from 1831–42, cantor at Ansbach; then studied under Mendelssohn and Hauptmann at Leipzig, and settled in Edinburgh as a conductor and vocal teacher. His choruses and quartets for male voices won great favor.

Durutte [dü-rüt'], François-Camille-Antoine (comte), b. Ypres, East Flanders, Oct. 15, 1803; d. Paris, Sept. 24, 1881. Settled in Metz.—Wrote Esthétique musicale. Technie ou lois générales du système harmonique (1855), supplemented by a Résumé élémentaire de la technie harmonique, etc. (1876), in which he presents a new system of harmony, which aroused considerable discussion, and was found impracticable. He composed operas, chamber-music, and church-music.

Dussek [Dusek, Duschek] [dŏŏ'shek], Franz, b. Chotĕborky, Bohemia, Dec. 8, 1736; d. Prague, Feb. 12, 1799. Pianist, pupil of Wagenseil at Vienna; settled in Prague, 1763, winning fame as a teacher and performer.—Published several sonatas (1773, 1774, 1799), and a pf.-concerto (op. 1); left in MS. symphonies, concertos, quartets, trios, and sonatas.

Dussek [Dusek], Johann Ladislaus, b. Čáslav (Tschaslau), Bohemia, Feb. 9, 1761; d. St.-Germain-en-Laye, March 20, 1812. At first a boy-soprano at the Minorite church, Iglau, he was taught music by Father Spenar, while attending the Jesuit college; was organist at the Jesuit church in Kuttenberg for 2 years, and while studying theology at Prague Univ. found time to get a thorough musical training, so that after graduation he obtained, through Count Männer, his patron, the post of organist at the church of St.-Rimbaut, Mechlin. Thence he went to Bergen-op-Zoom, and (1782) to Amsterdam; then spent a year at The Hague, and in 1783 studied under C. Ph. E. Bach at Hamburg; won renown as a pianist and as a performer on Hessel's 'harmonica' in Berlin (1784), and Petrograd, then accepting an appointment from Prince Radziwill, with whom he lived in Lithuania for over a year. He played before Marie Antoinette in 1786, at Paris; soon went to Italy, and returned to Paris in 1788, whence the Revolution drove him to London. Here he married Sofia Corri, a singer, in 1792, and undertook a music-business with his father-in-law; but his careless habits, and love of luxury and ease, ill fitted him for commercial pursuits; the enterprise failed, and he fled to Hamburg in 1800 to escape his creditors. Here he appears to have stayed about 2 years, giving concerts and teaching. In 1802 he gave a concert at Prague, and paid a long visit to his father at Čáslav; was successively in the service of Prince Louis Ferdinand of Prussia (d. 1806) —to whom his Élégie harmonique, op. 61, is dedicated—the Prince of Isenberg, and finally (1808) Prince Talleyrand in Paris.—D. was the pioneer of the group of Bohemian and Polish musicians; the originality of his pf.-comps. has a 'national' flavor, and still keeps them alive. An an executant he was sui generis, disputing with Clementi the honor of inventing the 'singing-touch.' Besides 2 English operas, given in London without much success, a solemn mass (composed at the age of 13), several early oratorios, and considerable church-music, he published nearly 100 works for pf. (many without opus-number); among them being 12 concertos, a symphonie concertante for 2 pfs., a quintet, a quartet, 10 trios, 80 sonatas with vln., 9 4-hand sonatas, 3 4-hand fugues, 53 sonatas for pf. solo, and many rondos, fantasias, variations and waltzes. He also published a Method for pf. at London, which appeared later in French and German.

Dustmann [dŏŏst'-], Marie Luise (née Meyer), dramatic soprano; b. Aix-la-Chapelle, Aug. 22, 1831; d. Charlottenburg (Berlin), March 2, 1899. Début Breslau (1849); after this she was engaged at Kassel (under Spohr), at Dresden ('53), Prague ('54), and Vienna ('57). She sang as a 'star' in the larger German cities, Stockholm, and London. Married D. (a bookseller) in 1858; made 'Kammersängerin' at Vienna in 1860; taught for some time at Vienna Cons.

Duval [dü-vähl'], Edmond, b. Enghien, Hainault, Aug. 22, 1809. He entered the Paris Cons. in 1828, but was dismissed in 1832 because of irregular attendance. Returning to Mechlin, he became deeply interested in Abbé Janssen's 'Vrais Principes du chant grégorien', and was entrusted by the bishop with the revision of the church-ritual of the diocese. In furtherance of this plan he visited Rome; after his return, the following 'revised versions' of ecclesiastical song were issued: Graduale romanum, etc. (1848), Vesperale, Manuale chori (1850), Processionale (1851), Pastorale Mechliniense (1852), and Rituale (1854), based on Italian publications of the 16th, 17th, and 18th centuries. He also publ. a series of 'studies' on the above, and a Traité d'accompagnement du plain-chant par l'orgue, etc. Fétis considers both plan and execution of these works to be totally wrong.

Duvernoy [dü-vär-nwäh'], Charles, brother of Frédéric; b. Montbéliard, 1766; d. Paris, Feb. 28, 1845; a clarinettist; came to Paris in 1810, and was first clarinet at the Th. de Monsieur and the Feydeau, retiring in 1824. Till 1802 he was also prof. at the Cons.—Works: 2 sonatas for clarinet; variations as duets for 2 clarinets.

Duvernoy, Charles-François, b. Paris, April 16, 1796; d. there Nov., 1872. Opera-singer in the Opéra-Com., Paris, and (1851) teacher of operatic singing in the Cons.; 1856, superintendent of the 'Pensionnat des élèves du chant.'

Duvernoy (or Duvernois), Frédéric, b. Montbéliard, Oct. 16, 1765; d. Paris, July 19, 1838. A self-taught horn-player, he became first horn at the Grand Opéra, and until 1815 prof. at the Cons. He published a great number of pieces for horn, which are now forgotten; and a Méthode de cor mixte, explaining his peculiar style of playing.

Duvernoy, Henri-Louis-Charles, son of Charles; b. Paris, Nov. 16, 1820; d. there Jan., 1906. Pupil of Halévy and Zimmerman at Paris Cons., where (1839) he was asst.-prof., and in 1848 full prof., of solfeggio; he trained many distinguished pupils. Publ. (with Kuhn) Nouveaux choix de psaumes et de cantiques (1848); Solfège des chanteurs (1855); Solfège à changements de clefs (1857); and Solfège artistique (1860); also some 100 light pianoforte-pieces.

Duvernoy, Jean-Baptiste, composer and pf.-teacher at Paris; dates of birth and death unknown. Beginning about 1825, he publ. several hundred piano-pieces and variations, generally of a light and easy character, and a number of interesting and valuable studies for pianoforte.

Duvernoy, Victor-Alphonse, b. Paris, Aug. 31, 1842; d. there March 7, 1907. He was a pupil of Bazin and Marmontel at the Paris Cons., taking the first prize for pf.-playing in the latter's class (1855). In 1869 he founded, together with Léonard (1st vln.), Stiehle, Trombetta and Jacquard, a series of chamber-music concerts; he devoted his time otherwise to composing and teaching, and held a professorship in the Cons. For some 11 years, musical critic of the 'République française'; chevalier of the Legion of Honor, and an officer of public instruction. As a dramatic composer he produced the 3-act opera Sardanapale (Liège, 1892; successful), the 'scène lyrique' Cléopâtre (at the Concerts Colonne), and the 4-act opera Hellé (Grand Opéra, 1896). His symphonic poem La tempête, produced at the Concerts Colonne, won the City of Paris prize in 1880; he also wrote a ballet, Bacchus (1902); an overture, Hernani; several other orchestral pieces, and much music for piano.

Dvořák [dvŏhr'zhahk], Antonin, b. Mühlhausen [Nelahozeves], Bohemia, Sept. 8, 1841; d. Prague, May 1, 1904. His father, an innkeeper, wished him to learn the butcher's trade; but he, having learned to play the violin from the village schoolmaster, left home at the age of 16, and entered the Prague Organ-School, studying under Pitzsch, and earning a precarious livelihood as violinist in a small orchestra. After graduation from the School in 1862, he joined the orch. of the National Th. as a viola-player. It was not until 1873 that a composition of importance gained a hearing; but then the production of a hymn for male chorus and orch. attracted such wide notice that he received (1875) a government stipend, and devoted himself to composition with increasing success, becoming the most famous of Bohemian national composers. Liszt, Brahms and Bülow, by securing the performance of his works, and encouraging him in every way, did much to obtain for his compositions the vogue which they deservedly enjoy, despite an overlavish employment of Bohemian mannerisms in melody and rhythm. In 1873 he gave up playing in orchestras, when he was appointed organist at St. Adalbert's in Prague; and when his fame as composer spread, numerous pupils flocked to him, and a professorship for comp. at the Cons. was offered him. In 1884 he was invited to conduct his Stabat Mater in London. It was received with such enthusiasm that in the fall of the same year D. conducted it at the Worcester Festival, and was commissioned to write a new work for the Birmingham Festival of 1885 (The Spectre's Bride). The following year (1886) he visited England again to direct his oratorio St. Ludmila at the Leeds Festival; in 1891 Cambridge conferred upon him the degree of Mus. Doc. (hon. c.). Fom 1892–5 he was the artistic director of the National Cons., New York; then returned to Prague as prof. at the Cons., of which he was made artistic director in 1901 (with Knittl as admin. director). He was the first musician to be made a life-member of the Austrian House of Lords.—A composer of singular versatility and fecundity, the most prominent characteristics of his music are an inexhaustible, spontaneous melodic invention, a well-nigh unexampled rhythmic variety, an exhaustive employment of national folk-tunes and their melodic peculiarities, and an intensity of harmonic vigor which, in his finest works (probably the chamber-music), has an electrifying effect, though sometimes bordering on the crude and rough. It is music straight from heart and soul, rather than carefully weighed composition. Since his death, regret has been freely expressed that D. gave so much time to opera. It is true that his stage-works have not met with the same warm welcome in Germany as in their native land and tongue; furthermore, the libretti are said to be weak. But aside from that it seems D., like some other composers, was constantly hampered by the word. His genius undoubtedly finds fullest and really natural expression in 'absolute' music; even a general program, as in his symphonic poems, seems to have acted as a check upon his spontaneity.—Biographical essay (in German) by J. Zubatsky (1886); in English by W. H. Hadow in 'Studies in Modern Music,' 2nd Series (London, 1895; 2nd ed. 1904); D. G. Mason, From Grieg to Brahms (New York, 1902).

Dwight, John Sullivan, a well-known musical critic, and editor of 'Dwight's Journal of Music'; b. Boston, Mass., May 13, 1813; d. there Sept. 5, 1893. He graduated at Harvard in 1832, and was one of the founders and most active members of the Harvard Musical Assoc. After studying for the ministry, he in 1840 took charge of the Unitarian Ch. at Northampton, Mass. His literary and socialistic proclivities, however, gained the mastery; he gave up his pastorate, and entered the ill-starred Brook Farm Community as a teacher of German music and the classics. Returning to Boston in 1848, after the failure of the socialistic experiment, he devoted himself to literature, founded the 'Journal' in 1852, and remained its editor-in-chief until its discontinuance in 1881. A prominent feature in this paper were the valuable historical essays of A. W. Thayer. D. also published excellent Translations of Select Minor Poems from the German of Goethe and Schiller, with Notes.—Biography by George Willis Cooke: J. S. D., Brook-Farmer, Editor, and Critic of Music (Boston, 1899); Cooke also edited D.'s correspondence with George William Curtis (Boston, 1898).

Dykes, Rev. John Bacchus, b. Kingston-upon-Hull, Engl., March 10, 1823; d. St. Leonard's, Jan. 22, 1876. An English divine and composer, educated at Cambridge; minor canon and precentor at Durham cath., 1849, where he also cond. the Music Soc. He took the degree of Mus. Doc. in 1861, and was vicar of St. Oswald, Durham, from 1862. Some of his hymns are peculiarly fine; he likewise composed a service in F; the 23d Psalm (The Lord is my shepherd); anthems; and part-songs.

E.

Eames [āmz], Emma, distinguished dram. soprano; b. of American parentage at Shanghai, China, Aug. 13, 1867. At the age of 5 she went with her mother, a talented musician and her first teacher, to the latter's native town of Bath, Maine; from 1883 she studied under Miss Munger, at Boston, and from 1886–8 at Paris, under Mme. Marchesi (voice) and M. Pluque (stage-deportment, etc.). She was eng. for the Opéra-Com. in 1888, expecting to appear in La Traviata; but, by reason of vexatious delays, cancelled this engagement, and made her début at the Grand Opéra, Mar. 13, 1889, as Juliette in Gounod's Roméo et J., succeeding with great applause to a rôle previously sung by the Patti. She sang in the Opéra for 2 years, creating the rôles of Colombe in Ascanio by Saint-Saëns, and of Zaïre in De la Nux's like-named opera. Engaged for Covent Garden, London (début April 7, 1891, as Marguerite in Faust); in this year she married the painter Julian Story, from whom she was divorced in 1907; in December appeared in New York with the de Reszkés, as Juliette; after this she sang regularly in New York and London in their respective seasons (excepting the winters of 1892–3, at Madrid, and 1895–6, during temporary ill-health). She bade farewell to the stage in a grand performance of La Tosca at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, February 15, 1909. In 1911 she married the baritone, Emilio de Go-gorza, and has since then been living alternately in Paris and Bath, Me. She received from Queen Victoria the Jubilee Medal, and was decorated by the French Academy with the order of 'Les Palmes Académiques.' Mme. E. sang in English, French, Italian and German; her repertory included the following rôles: Juliette, Marguerite, Colombe, Zaïre, Desdemona, Santuzza, La Tosca, Traviata, Amelia (Ballo in Maschera), Micaëla (Carmen), Countess (Figaro), Yasodhara (Light of Asia), Elsa, Elisabeth, Eva, Sieglinde (Walküre), Aida (a classic impersonation), Mrs. Ford (Falstaff), Donna Elvira, Ghiselle, Lady of Longford, Mireille, Charlotte (Werther), and Valentine (Huguenots).

Eastcott, Richard, b. Exeter, England, 1740; d. as chaplain at Livery Dale, Devonshire, 1828. Publ. Sketches of the Origin, Progress and Effects of Musick, with an account of the Ancient Bards and Minstrels, illustrated with various Historical Facts, Anecdotes, etc. (Bath, 1793); The Harmony of the Muses (songs); 6 pf.-sonatas.

Eaton, Louis, b. Waltham, Mass., Feb. 24, 1872. Studied vln. with B. Listemann, 1884–92, and with C. M. Loeffler, 1896–1902; comp. with B. Cutter and pf. with Jessie Downer; taught at N. E. Cons., 1897–8; then toured U. S. and Canada for 6 years with Bostonia Sextet Club; concert-master of Jordan Hall Orch. and Aborn Opera Co.; first violinist with Boston Opera Co., 1909–11; music director Park Theatre, Boston, 1911–14; since 1915 in Hartford, Conn., as music director at Strand Th. In 1899 he married the pianist Jessie Downer (b. Middlebury, Vt., Nov. 17, 1872), and with her and the 'cellist Arthur Hadley formed the Downer-Eaton Trio, which enjoyed an enviable reputation in the N. E. States and gave first American performances of many new chamber-music comps. (trios by Rachmaninov, Rasse, Chevillard, Bronsart, etc.). E. has published some vln.-studies, compiled some albums of pf.-trios, and made orchestral arrangements.

Eaton, Louis H., b. Taunton, Mass., May 9, 1861. Organist successively at Taunton and Milwaukee (1885–98); he studied with Guilmant at Paris 1900–1, when he was eng. as organist and mus. director at Trinity Episcopal Ch., San Francisco. He is a skilful organizer, trainer and conductor of choirs.

E'beling, Christoph Daniel, b. Garmissen, n. Hildesheim, 1741; d. Hamburg, June 30, 1817, as prof. of history in the Gymnasium and custodian of the City Library. Publ. Versuch einer auserlesenen musikalischen Bibliothek (Hamburg, 1770); Ueber die Oper ('Hannoversches Magazin' for 1768); also translations of Burney's Musical Tour, of Chastelaux' Essai sur l'union de la musique et de la poésie, and of the English text of Handel's Messiah (w. Klopstock).

E'beling, Johann Georg, b. Lüneburg, July (bapt. 11th), 1627; d. Stettin, 1676. In 1662, musical director and teacher at St. Nicolai, Berlin; from 1668, prof. of music at the Gymnasium Carolinum, Stettin. Publ. Pauli Gerhardi geistliche Andachten, 120 sacred songs w. 2 vlns. and continuo (Berlin, 1666–7, 1669; Nuremberg, 1682); Archaeologiae orphicae sive antiquitates musicae (1676); and a 'concert' for clavichord and other instruments.—See Q.-Lex.

E'bell, Heinrich Karl, b. Neuruppin, Dec. 30, 1775; d. Oppeln, March 12, 1824. A lawyer by profession, he was a pupil of Türk and Reichardt in music, and from 1801–4 Kapellm. at Breslau. He comp. 10 operas and vaudevilles, an oratorio, six cantatas, 5 symphonies, 4 string-quartets, songs, etc.

E'berhard, Johann August, b. Halberstadt, Aug. 31, 1739; d. Halle, Jan. 6, 1809, as prof. of philos. He wrote a Theorie der schönen Künste und Wissenschaften (Berlin, 1783; 3d ed. 1790), a Handbuch der Aesthetik (Halle, 1803–5, 4 vols.), and several short essays on musical subjects in his Gemischte Schriften (Halle, 1784, 1788), and in the 'Musikalisches Wochenblatt' (Berlin, 1805).

E'berl, Anton, one of the most famous pianists of a century ago, and a gifted comp.; b. Vienna, June 13, 1766; d. there March 11, 1807. In 1782 he produced the opera Die Zigeuner, followed (1783) by La Marchande de modes, these attracting the attention and winning the friendship of Mozart and Gluck. He made a concert-tour with Mozart's widow; lived 1796–1800 in Petrograd as Kapellm.; revisited Russia in 1803, and travelled through Germany in 1806. Besides 3 more operas, he wrote a cantata, symphonies, pf.-concertos, much chamber-music, many pf.-pieces (especially sonatas), songs, etc.—See Q.-Lex.

E'berlin, Daniel, b. Nuremberg, c. 1630; d. Kassel, 1691. A music-student in Rome, he became captain in the Papal army; was Kapellm. in Kassel in 1678; Kapellm., tutor to the princes, private secretary and director of the mint, at Eisenach; a banker in Hamburg and Altona; and finally militia-captain at Kassel. He was a good contrapuntist and violinist; also a celebrated composer at his time; but only 3 vln.-trios (Nuremberg, 1675) are extant.

E'berlin [Eberle], Johann Ernst, b. Jettenbach, Swabia, March 27, 1702; d. Salzburg, June 21, 1762, as Kapellm. and Truchsess (carver) to the archbishop.—Published works: XI Toccate e Fughe per l'organo (Augsburg, 1747; several reprints); fugues and toccatas in Commer's 'Musica sacra'; 2 motets (publ. by Schott); 2 sonatas (publ. by Haffner); 5 pieces in L. Mozart's 'Der Morgen und der Abend' (Augsburg, 1759).—In MS.: 13 oratorios in Ratisbon (Proske's Library); an offertory and Miserere (Berlin Library); a volume of organ-pieces (R. Inst. for Church-music, Berlin).—See Q.-Lex.

E'bers, Karl Friedrich, b. Kassel, March 25, 1770; d. Berlin, Sept. 9, 1836. Intended for the army, he preferred music; became Kapellm. at the theatres in Schwerin and Pest, and conducted a singing-society at Magdeburg. He brought out 4 operas in Pest (1796–7); also wrote symphonies, overtures, sonatas and other pieces for pf., songs, etc., none of special vitality. His transcriptions for pf. were popular.—See Q.-Lex.

E'berwein, Karl, b. Weimar, Nov. 10, 1786; d. there March 2, 1868. A violinist and composer; in 1803, court musician, and later conductor of the court orch. He was a friend of Goethe, who often mentions him, and for whom he composed some songs. He wrote 2 operas, the music to Holtei's Leonore and to Preciosa; an overture to Goethe's Proserpine; also cantatas, a string-quartet, a flute-concerto, songs, etc.—His brother, E'berwein, Traugott Maximilian, born Weimar, Oct. 27, 1775; d. Rudolstadt, Dec. 2, 1831. Pupil of Kunze in Frankfort, and Schick in Mayence; 1797 Hofmusikus, 1817 Kapellm., to the Prince of Rudolstadt.—Works: 11 operas; symphonies, overtures; much church-music; songs.—See Q.-Lex.

Ec'card, Johannes, b. Mühlhausen, Thuringia, 1553; d. Königsberg, 1611. Pupil of Joachim von Burgk, and (1571–4) of Orlandus Lassus; 1578, director of J. Fugger's private orch. at Augsburg; in 1583 vice-Kapellm., and in 1599 full Kapellm., at Königsberg. In 1608 he was called to Berlin as Kapellm. to the Elector. An eminent composer of sacred music. With von Burgk he published 20 Odae sacrae (1594); Crepundia sacra, christliche Liedlein mit 4 Stimmen (in 2 Parts, 1577, 1596; 2d ed. 1608); his own published works are 24 Neue deutsche Lieder mit 4 und 5 Stimmen (1578); 14 Neue deutsche Lieder (1589); 5-stimmige geistliche Lieder (1597); Preussische Festlieder (1598); some of the above have been reprinted in modern form.—Also a motet, O Lamm Gottes; a chorus, O Freude; and occasional songs.—See Q.-Lex.

Eccarius-Sieber, Artur, b. Gotha, May 23, 1864. Pupil of Patzig at the Cons. there; established himself as teacher in Zurich, where he founded the 'Schweizerische Akademie der Tonkunst' (1891); since 1900 in Düsseldorf as teacher and critic. Elgar, Sir Edward William, b. Broadheath, n. Worcester, England, June 2, 1857. He received his musical education chiefly from his father, who was organist at St. George's R. C. Church for 37 years. At an early age he assisted his father at the organ, and took part in the rehearsals and concerts of the Worcester Glee Club; in 1877 he took a few violin-lessons in London from Pollitzer. For a time he played in Stockley's orch. in Birmingham, was appointed conductor of the Worcester Amateur Instrumental Society, and in 1885 succeeded his father as organist at St. George's. After his marriage to a daughter of Sir Henry Roberts, in 1889, he tried his fortune in London; but, unable to obtain a hearing, withdrew two years later to Malverne, where he devoted himself to teaching and composition. In 1890 his overture Froissart, op. 19, was played at the Worcester Fest.; in 1893 his cantata The Black Knight was produced, and 3 years later the same association brought out a choral work, Scenes from the Bavarian Highlands, and a short oratorio, The Light of Life. The performance, in the same year, of the cantata King Olaf, at the North Staffordshire Fest.

at Hanley, brought the composer's name into prominence; and after the splendid interpretation of his Enigma Variations by Hans Richter and his cycle Sea Pictures, by Clara Butt at the Norwich Fest. of 1899, E. was recognized as among the foremost living English composers. The Dream of Gerontius, which still remains his masterpiece, was produced at the Birmingham Fest. of 1900 with moderate success. Its almost sensational success at the Nether-Rhenish Fest. of 1902, and the high tribute paid to it by R. Strauss on that occasion, led to a revision of judgment at home, with the result that the performances at Worcester, Sheffield and London, in 1903, drew such vast and enthusiastic crowds, that the following year a 3-day Elgar Fest. was held at Covent Garden. Since then he has been regarded as the greatest of living English masters. Honor after honor was showered upon him. He is Hon. A. R. A. M.; Hon. Freeman of the city of Worcester; Mus. Doc., Cantab. (1900), Dunelm (1904), Oxford (1905), Yale (1905); LL. D., Leeds (1904), Aberdeen (1906), Univ. of Pa., U. S. A. (1907); member of many foreign Academies; was knighted in 1904, and received the Order of Merit in 1911. From 1905–8 he was Peyton prof. of music at Birmingham; in 1906 he visited the U. S. and conducted his Apostles at the Cincinnati May Festival.—Works: The oratorios op. 29, The Light of Life (Worcester, 1890); op. 38, The Dream of Gerontius (Birmingham, 1900); op. 49, The Apostles (ib., 1903) and op. 51, The Kingdom (ib., 1906), are Parts I and II of a trilogy, of which Part III is not yet completed. Cantatas: Op. 25, The Black Knight (1893); op. 30, King Olaf (1896); op. 33, The Banner of St. George (1897); op. 35, Caractacus (1898); op. 44, Coronation Ode (1902); op. 69, The Music Makers (1912). Elias Salomonis, monk at Sainte-Astère, Périgord, wrote in 1274 a treatise Scientia artis musicae (printed by Gerbert, 'Scriptores,' vol. iii), of peculiar value as the oldest work giving rules for improvised counterpoint.

Ella, John, b. Thirsk, Yorkshire, Dec. 19, 1802; d. London, Oct. 2, 1888. Intended for the law, he took violin-lessons from Fémy, and joined the orch. of the King's Th., London, 1822, later playing also in the concerts of Antient Mus. and the Philh. Meanwhile he studied harmony under Attwood; in 1845 he was a pupil of Fétis in Brussels for cpt. and comp.; in this year he founded the 'Musical Winter Evenings' (1845–59). The 'analytical programmes' written by Ella for these concerts were an improvement on those already introduced by John Thompson in 1837 for the Edinburgh Professional Society. E. was appointed lecturer on music at the London Institution in 1855. He gave up active work in 1880.—Writings: Lectures on Dram. Music abroad and at home (1872); Mus. Sketches abroad and at home (3 editions: 1861, '69, '78); Records of the Mus. Union (1845–78); Personal Memoir of Meyerbeer, with an analysis of 'Les Huguenots' (1868); etc.

Ell'berg, Ernst Henrik, b. Söderhamm, Sweden, Dec. 11, 1868. Pupil of the Cons. at Stockholm; vlnst. in the court-orch.; since 1903 prof. of comp. at the Cons. Has written a symph. in D; 2 concert-overtures; Introd. and Fugue for string-orch.; a ballet-pantomime, Askungen (Stockholm, 1907); a string-quartet in E♭; a string-quintet; male choruses.

Eller, Louis, violin virtuoso; b. Graz, June 9, 1820; d. Pau, July 12, 1862. A pupil of Hysel, from 1836 he made tours in Austria, Hungary, Switzerland, and southern Europe (with Gottschalk to Spain and Portugal). For violin he wrote a Valse diabolique, a Rhapsodie hongroise, a Menuet sentimentale, fantasias, études, etc.

Ellerton, John Lodge, poet and extraordinarily prolific amateur composer; b. Chester, Jan. 11, 1801; d. London, Jan. 3, 1873.

An Oxford graduate, he studied counterpoint for 2 years under Pietro Terziani at Rome, where he composed 7 Italian operas; and lived for some time in Germany.—Works: 7 Italian operas, 3 English, 1 German; an oratorio, Paradise Lost; 5 symphonies, 4 concert-overtures, 3 quintets, 44 string-quartets, 3 string-trios, 8 trios for various instruments, 13 sonatas, 61 glees, 83 vocal duets, songs.

Ellicott, Rosalind Frances, b. Cambridge, England, Nov. 14, 1857. Studied at R. A. M. for 1 year (1875–6), and later with Thomas Wingham from 1885–92; elected A. R. A. M. in 1896; from 1885–95 she received several commissions to write works for the Gloucester and Cheltenham Festivals; retired from active musical work in 1900.—Works: The cantatas Radiant Sister of the Day (Cheltenham, 1887), Elysium (Gloucester, 1889), The Birth of Song (ib., 1892), Henry of Navarre (Oxford, 1894); Fantasie for pf. and orch. in A m. (Gloucester, 1895); a Dramatic overture; a Concert overture; 2 pf.-trios (D m., G); a vln.-sonata in F; a pf.-quartet in B m.; a string-quartet in B♭; part-songs and songs.

Elling, Catherinus, b. Christiania, Sept. 13, 1858. Studied music with native teachers; then in Leipzig (1877–8) and Berlin (1886–96); organist at Oslo; instr. at the Cons. at Christiania; in 1908 a subvention was granted him by the state for the pursuit of his studies of Norwegian folk-melodies, on which he has published various essays; has also written biographies of Ole Bull, Grieg, Svendsen and Kjerulf. He is the comp. of an opera, Kosakkerne (Christiania, 1897); an oratoria, The Prodigal Son; a symphony in A; incid. music to A Midsummer Night's Dream; chamber-music, and many songs.

Ellis, Alexander John, b. Hoxton (London), June 14, 1814; d. Kensington, Oct. 28, 1890. Cambridge graduate (1837), F. R. S. (1864), President of the Philological Society; etc. A distinguished writer on musical science, he published valuable papers, in the Proceedings of the Royal Society, On the Conditions . . . of a Perfect Musical Scale on Instruments with Fixed Tones (1864), On the Physical Constitutions and Relations of Musical Chords (1864), On the Temperament of Instruments with Fixed Tones (1864), and On Musical Duodenes; or, The Theory of Constructing Instruments with Fixed Tones in Just or Practically Just Intonation (1874). Papers containing new theories, etc., for the Musical Association are as follows: The Basis of Music (1877), Pronunciation for Singers (1877), and Speech in Song (1878). He was awarded a silver medal for his valuable writings on Musical Pitch for the 'Proceedings' of the Society of Arts (1877, 1880, and 1881; publ. separately, 1880–1; and in summary form in the Appendix to the second edition of his translation of Helmholtz's Lehre von den Tonempfindungen [1st ed. 1875; 2d ed. 1885]); also the Tonometrical Observations, or Some Existing Non-harmonic Scales (Royal Society, 1884), and On the Musical Scales of Various Nations (Society of Arts, 1885). He likewise translated Ohm's Geist der mathematischen Analyse (1868), and Preyer's Über die Gränzen der Tonwahrnehmung (1876–7, Proceedings of the Musical Association).

El'man, Mischa, remarkable violinist; b. Talnoie, Russia, Jan. 20, 1892. At the age of 6 he was taken by his father to Odessa and placed under Fidelmann, a pupil of Brodsky. Both technically and mentally his progress was so extraordinary that Leopold Auer, hearing him in 1902, prevailed upon the Tsar to suspend the regulation preventing Jews from entering the Imperial Cons. at Petrograd; accordingly the boy was Auer's pupil at the Cons. from 1902–4, when he made his début at Petrograd with sensational success; his tour of Germany was a succession of triumphs, and, in spite of his youth, he was ranked among the foremost violinists of the day; in England he was received with equal warmth, and his annual tours of the U. S. (since 1908) were but duplications of his European triumphs; in the first three seasons he had appeared with every important symph. orch. (with the Boston Symph. Orch. alone in 31 concerts). His tone is large, his technic stupendous, his intonation unerring; his conception and interpretation leave no room for doubt as to his artistic maturity and seriousness of purpose.

Elm'blad, Johannes, dramatic bass; b. Stockholm, Aug. 22, 1853. Pupil of Stockhausen and Garcia; chosen by Wagner to create the rôle of Donner in 1876, but refused in deference to the objections of his father, a professor of theology. From 1880, opera-singer, touring Europe and America. Sang the rôle of Fafner at Bayreuth in 1896. Since 1897 engaged at the Stockholm Municipal Th.

El'menreich, Albert, actor in the court theatre at Schwerin; b. Karlsruhe, Feb. 10, 1816; d. Lübeck, May 30, 1905. Composer of the operas Gundel or Die beiden Kaiser (Schwerin, 1849); Der Schmied von Gretna Green (ib., 1856); Der Auferstandene (ib., 1858).

El'senheimer, Nicholas J., b. Wiesbaden, June 17, 1866. Taught music by his father; took degree of LL. D., at Heidelberg; studied cpt., etc., under G. Jakobsthal, Strassburg. Went to America, 1890; prof. of pf., theory and musical literature at College of Music, Cincinnati, from 1890–1906; org. of various churches there; soloist with Cincinnati and Chicago Symphony Orchs.; also pianist with the Marion Quartet, and has given, with R. Gorno, recitals on 2 pianos; since 1907 in New York as prof. at the Granberry Piano School and choirmaster of St. Ignatius' Ch.—Works: Valerian, cantata for male ch., bar. solo and orch.; Die Weihe der Künste, cantata for mixed ch., soli and orch. (won prize of N. A. Sängerbund, 1899); Künstlers Erdenwallen, symphonic poem; The Angels' Lullaby, for bass solo, vocal quartet, string-quartet and org.; Mass in E♭; Belshazzar, dramatic ballade for tenor (or soprano); Humoresque for string-orch.; Eventide, chorus for female voices with string-accompaniment.

Els'ner, Joseph Xaver, b. Grottkau, Silesia, June 29, 1769; d. Warsaw, April 18, 1854. Violinist in the theatre orch. at Brünn, then Kapellm. at Lemberg and (1799) Warsaw theatres. He was Chopin's teacher at Warsaw, and founded there a school for organists, out of which grew the Cons., of which latter he was the director till 1830.—Works: 19 operas, several ballets, duo-dramas, incid. music, symphonies, concertos, cantatas, sacred music, all of slight general interest. He publ. 2 essays on the treatment of the Polish language in vocal music.—See Q.-Lex.

Elson, Arthur, author; son of Louis C.; b. Boston, Nov. 18, 1873. Studied harmony with J. K. Paine at Harvard; at N. E. Cons.; and with Louis C. Elson. Grad. of Harvard (A. B.) and Mass. Inst. of Tech. (S. B.).—Works: A Critical History of the Opera (1901); Orchestral Instruments and Their Use (1902); Woman's Work in Music (1903); Modern Composers of Europe; Music Club Programs from All Nations (1906); The Musician's Guide (1913); The Book of Musical Knowledge (1915). He is now (1916) preparing a Pioneer School Music Course.

Elson, Louis Charles, b. Boston, Mass., April 17, 1848. Pupil of Aug. Kreissmann at Boston in singing, and of Karl Gloggner-Castelli at Leipzig in theory. Returning to Boston, he assumed the editorship of the 'Vox Humana'; then joined the staff of the 'Mus. Herald'; was for several years musical editor of the 'Boston Courier,' and is now (1916) of the 'Advertiser.' Since 1881, prof. of musical theory and lecturer on the orch. and on musical history at the N. E. Cons. of Music. He has had remarkable success, East, South, and West, as a popular lecturer on musical subjects. Was for 7 years 'City Lecturer on Music' at Boston (240 lectures), and twice lecturer at Lowell Inst. (18 lectures); correspondent of musical journals in Berlin, Paris and Buenos Aires; ed.-in-chief of 'University Encyclopædia of Music' (10 vols., 1912).—Writings: Curiosities of Music, The History of German Song, The Theory of Music, The Realm of Music, German Songs and Song-writers, European Reminiscences, Syllabus of Musical History, Great Composers and Their Works (Boston; 1899); Our National Music and its Sources (1900); Shakespeare in Music (1903); History of American Music (1905; 2d ed. 1915); Music Dictionary (1909); Folk-songs of Many Nations (1910); Mistakes and Disputed Points in Music (1913). E. has also composed various operettas, songs, and instrumental works; besides translations and arrangements of over 2,000 songs, operas, etc.

El'terlein, Ernst von (pen-name of Ernst Gottschald), b. Elterlein, Saxony, Oct. 19, 1826. By profession a jurist, he has written a popular æsthetic analysis of Beethoven's pf.-sonatas (1857; 5th ed. 1895) and symphonies (1858).

Elvey, Sir George (Job), b. Canterbury, March 27, 1816; d. Windlesham, Surrey, Dec. 9, 1893; chorister at Canterbury cath., and pupil of Skeats, then of C. Potter and Dr. Crotch at R. A. M. From 1835–82 he was organist and master of the boys at St. George's chapel, Windsor, succeeding H. Skeats, Jr.; Mus. Bac., Oxon., 1838; Mus. Doc., 1840; knighted in 1871.—Works: 2 oratorios, several odes, anthems, services, chants, glees, part-songs, a Festal March for orch.; Introd. and Gavot for vln. and pf.; Christmas Bells, impromptu for organ, etc.—His widow published The Life and Reminiscences of Sir George Elvey (London, 1894).

Elvey, Stephen, b. Canterbury, June 27, 1805; d. Oxford, Oct. 6, 1860. Pupil of Skeats at Canterbury cath.; organist of New College, Oxford, in 1830; Mus. Bac., Oxon., 1831; Mus. Doc., 1838. Choragus at Oxford, 1848–60.—Works: Services, anthems, hymns, and songs; The Psalter, or Canticles and Psalms, Pointed for Chanting, upon a New Principle (London; 6 editions up to 1866).

Elwart [-vahr'], Antoine-Aimable-Élie, b. Paris, Nov. 18, 1808; d. there Oct. 14, 1877. A chorister at St.-Eustache when 10 years old, he was apprenticed at 13 to a mechanic, but ran away, and joined a small theatre-orch. as violinist. From 1825–34 he studied in the Cons. (Fétis, Le Sueur), taking the Grand prix de Rome; from 1832-4, and, after his sojourn in Italy, from 1836–40, he was asst.-prof. in Reicha's composition-class; he then took a class of his own till his resignation in 1871. Among his pupils were Gouvy, Grisar, and Weckerlin.—Works: An opera, Les Catalans (Rouen, 1840); others in MS.; an 'oratorio-symphonie' Noé, ou le déluge universelle (Paris, 1845); La naissance d'Ève (Cons., 1846); Les noces de Cana, a mystery; Ruth et Booz, a vocal symphony; masses, can-tatas, a Te Deum, a Miserere, and other church-music; also symphonies, overtures, chamber-music etc., in MS. He is still better known, however, by his musico-literary achievements. He wrote Duprez, sa vie artistique, avec une biographie authentique de son maître A. Choron (1838), Théorie musicale (Solfège progressif, etc., 1840), Feuille harmonique (Theory of Chords, 1841), Le chanteur accompagnateur (Thorough-bass, graces, organ-point, etc., 1844), Traité du contrepoint et de la fugue, Essai sur la Transposition, Études élémentaires de musique (1845), L'art de chanter en chœur, L'art de jouer impromptu de l'alto-viola, Solfège de jeune âge, Le contrepoint et la fugue appliqués au style idéal, Lutrin et Orphéon (theoretical and practical vocal studies), Histoire de la Société des Concerts du Conservatoire (1860; 2d ed. 1863), Manuel des aspirants aux grades de chef et de souschef de musique dans l'armée française (1862), Petit manuel d'instrumentation (1864), Histoire des concerts populaires (1864). His projected complete edition of his own compositions (1867–70) reached only vol. iii.

Elwes, Gervase, celebrated concert tenor; b. Billing, Northans, Nov. 15, 1866. He began life as a diplomat, and while serving at Vienna (1891–5) studied comp. with Mandyczewski, without intention of abandoning his chosen profession. In Paris he continued his theoretical studies, and had his voice cultivated by Bouhy; then studied at Brussels with Démest, and in London with H. Russel and V. Beigel; début, May, 1903, at Westmoreland Fest., Kendal; has since appeared at all the important English festivals; made a very successful tour of Germany in 1907, and of the U. S. in 1909; in 1914 he sang in Amsterdam. His specialty is oratorio; has sung Elgar's Dream of Gerontius almost 100 times; also an excellent interpreter of Brahms.

Emerson, Luther Orlando, b. Parsonsfield, Mass., Aug. 3, 1820; still living (1916) in Hyde Park, Mass. A composer of minor pieces of church-music, a very popular conductor of the early musical conventions, the precursors of the present-day 'festival,' and a compiler of numerous successful collections of songs and hymn-tunes: The Romberg Collection (1853), The Golden Wreath (1857, Sunday-school music), The Golden Harp (1860), The Sabbath Harmony (1860), The Harp of Judah (1863), Merry Chimes (1865), Jubilate (1866), and The Chorus Wreath.

Emery, Stephen Albert, b. Paris, Maine, Oct. 4, 1841; d. Boston, April 15, 1891. His first teacher was H. S. Edwards, of Portland; in 1862 he studied under Plaidy, Papperitz, Richter, and Hauptmann, at Leipzig, and afterwards at Dresden under Fritz Spindler (pf.). Returned to Portland, 1864; went to Boston in 1866, taught in the N. E. Cons. there from 1867; on the foundation of the College of Music of Boston Univ., he was appointed prof. of harm. and cpt. He was also asst.-editor of the 'Musical Herald.'—Works: Sonatinas and other pieces for pf.; string-quartets; part-songs; songs; also 2 textbooks, Foundation Studies in Pf.-Playing, and Elements of Harmony (1880; 2d ed. 1907).

Emmanuel [-nüel'], Maurice, b. Bar-sur-Aube, May 2, 1862. Studied at Paris Cons. (1880–7) under Savard, Dubois, Delibes and Bourgault-Ducoudray; then specialized in the musical history of antiquity under Gevaert in Brussels; Docteur ès Lettres (Sorbonne, 1895) with the theses Essai sur l'orchestique grecque (La danse grecque antique) and Éducation du danseur grec (both publ. 1896); prof. of Hist. of Art at Lycée Racine and Lycée Lamartine, 1898–1905; as m. de chap. at Ste.-Clothilde (1904–7) he gave model performances of masterpieces in the a cappella style; since 1910 prof. of the hist. of music at the Paris Cons. (successor to Bourgault-Ducoudray); after the death of Malherbe (1911) he took the latter's place as editor (jointly with Saint-Saëns and Teneo) of the monumental edition of Rameau's works published by Durand; has edited 6 vols. of Bach's works (Suites, Partitas, Fant. chrom., Concerto ital.) in Durand's new edition of the classic masters (1915–16). E. won the Kastner-Bourgault prize, awarded by the Académie, with his scholarly Histoire de la langue musicale (2 vols., Paris, 1911); also wrote Traité de l'accompagnement modal des Psaumes (Lyons, 1913). To Lavignac's 'Encyclopédie de la Musique' he contributed an authoritative Traité de la Musique grecque antique (vol. i, Paris, 1911). Of great value are his reports on musical instruction in Germany, Les Conservatoires de l'Allemagne et de l'Autriche (in 'Revue de Paris,' 1898) and La musique dans les universités allemandes (ib., 1900). In a series of articles, Le Chant à l'école ('Grande Revue,' 1910–11) he has laid the foundations of a new system of vocal instruction in the common schools; further articles: La vie réelle en musique ('Revue de Paris,' 1900), Prose et musique (ib., 1901), Éloge funèbre de Bourgault-Ducoudray ('Monde Musical,' 1911). Besides occupying a distinguished position as musicologist, he is also noteworthy as a composer: Pierrot Peintre (1-act pantomime, 1886); Ouverture pour un conte for orch. (1887); Terre de Bretagne, symph. poem for soli, ch. and orch. (1890); Airs rythmés, for harp and wood-wind (1895); Suite sur des airs populaires grecs, for vln. and pf. (1907); 3 Odelettes Anacréontiques, for voice, flute solo and orch. (1911); 8 Chansons Bourguignonnes, for soli, ch. and orch. (1912); 2 string-quartets (1889, 1903); sonata for organ; ditto for pf.; songs (In Memoriam [words by R. Vallery-Rador], with vcl. and vln., 30 Chansons Bourguignonnes, etc.). A 3-act opera, Prométhée enchaîné (after Æschylus), was completed in 1915.

Em'merich, Robert, b. Hanau, July 23, 1836; d. Baden-Baden, July 11, 1891. While a law-student at Bonn, he took music-lessons of Alb. Dietrich and Th. Stauffer; served in the army 1859–73, and then devoted himself to music. Lived 1873–8 at Darmstadt, and produced the operas Der Schwedensee (Weimar, 1874), Van Dyck (Stettin, 1875), and Ascanio; 2 symphonies, a cantata, etc. From 1878–9, theatre Kapellm. at Magdeburg; then settled in Stuttgart, where he conducted the Male Choral Union from 1889.

Encina [-thē'-], Juan del, b. La Encina, near Salamanca, circa 1469; d. there 1529(?). In 1498 he went to Rome, where, under Leo X, he was m. di capp.; later he took orders, travelled in the Orient, and, after his return, was canon at León and Málaga. He is not only the father of the Spanish drama, but also important as a musician who exerted considerable influence on the early oratorio. If he did not personally collect, he was at least instrumental in having collected, the 459 bailadas and villancicos for 2–4 voices (among them 68 of his own composition), forming the 'Cancionera Musicál de los Siglos XV y XVI.' This collection, of the greatest value for the history of music for that period, was published by order of the Spanish Academy by F. A. Barbieri (Madrid, 1894).—Cf. R. Mitjana, Sobre J. del E., músico y poeta (Madrid and Barcelona, 1895).

Enck'hausen, Heinrich Friedrich, b. Celle, Aug. 28, 1799; d. Hanover, Jan. 15, 1885. Pupil of Aloys Schmitt, in Berlin and Hanover, succeeding him as court organist and director of the Singakademie; he was also court pianist.—Works: Der Savoyard, opera (Hanover, 1832); orchestral and sacred music; pf.-pieces and études; and a standard book of chorals.

En'de, Heinrich vom, music-publisher; b. Essen-on-Ruhr, Aug. 12, 1858; died Cologne, Jan. 20, 1904. He composed a considerable number of male choruses (Das Kätzchen, Es ist ein Brünnlein geflossen), songs, and pf.-pieces; also published E. T. A. Hoffmanns musikalische Schriften, Dynamik des Klavierspiels (1899), and Schatzkästlein (practical explanation of musical forms).

Enes'co, Georges, b. Cordaremi, Rumania, Aug. 7, 1881. He began to play the violin when only 4 years old; from 1888–93 he was a pupil at the Vienna Cons. of Hellmesberger (vln.) and R. Fuchs (theory), winning first prize in vln.-playing and harmony (1892); 1894–9 he studied at the Paris Cons. with Marsick (vln.), Fauré and Massenet (comp.); won second accessit for cpt. and fugue (1897) and first prize for violin-playing (1899); at the same time he studied vcl., organ and pf., attaining more than ordinary proficiency on all these instruments. His talent for comp. manifested itself very early, his first efforts (not publ.) dating from his student days in Vienna; in 1897 he gave in Paris the first concert of his own works (a string-quintet, pf.-suite, vln.-sonata, and songs), which attracted the attention of Colonne, who prod. the following year the youthful composer's op. 1, Poème Roumain. 1899–1900 he toured as a violin-virtuoso, and was appointed court-violinist to the Queen of Rumania; since then he has been living in Paris, devoting his time chiefly to comp., appearing as a performer only at rare intervals.—Works: 2 symphonies, 2 suites, 3 rhapsodies, a pastoral fantasy (all for orch.); a dixtuor for strings and wind-instrs.; an octet in C for 4 vlns., 2 vlas. and 2 vcls.; 2 vln.-sonatas; a pf.-quintet; a suite for pf. and vln.; a suite for pf.; variations for 2 pfs.; pieces for vcl.; songs.

Eng'el, David Hermann, b. Neuruppin, Jan. 22, 1816; d. Merseburg, May 3, 1877. Organist and composer, pupil of Schneider in Dessau, and Hesse in Breslau; 1848, organist in cathedral, and teacher in the Gymnasium, at Merseberg.—Works: A comic opera Prinz Carneval (Berlin, 1862); oratorio Winfried; psalms and organ-pieces; also published a Choralbuch, and Beitrag zur Geschichte des Orgelbauwesens (1855).

Eng'el, Gustav Eduard, writer, critic, and singing-teacher; b. Königsberg, Oct. 29, 1823; d. Berlin, July 19, 1895. A philosophical student at Berlin, he also attended Marx's lectures on musical science, and took singing-lessons of H. Kotzold; sang in the Singakademie and the Domchor; taught 1 year in the 'Graues Kloster,' and then devoted himself to music-teaching and writing. In 1853 he became critic for the 'Spener'sche Zeitung,' and in 1861 for the 'Vossische Zeitung.' 1862, singing-teacher in Kullak's academy; 1874, in the Hochschule, with the title of Professor. Among his vocal pupils are Bulss, Krolop, Therese Malten, Lola Beeth, and Jetta Finkenstein.—Works: Sängerbrevier [daily vocal exercises] (1860); Übersetzungen und Vortragsbezeichnungen; Die Vokaltheorie von Helmholtz, und die Kopfstimme (1867); Das mathematische Harmonium (1881); Aesthetik der Tonkunst (1884), and a Mathematisch-harmonische Analyse des 'Don Juan' [Mozart's Don Giovanni].

Eng'el, Johann Jakob, b. Parchim, Mecklenburg, Sept. 11, 1741; d. there June 28, 1802; tutor to the Crown Prince (Friedr. Wilhelm III) at Berlin, and theatre-director.

His essay Über die musikalische Mahlerey, an den königlichen Kapellm. Herrn Reichardt (1780) is of decided value.

Eng'el, Karl, important musical historiographer; b. Thiedenwiese, near Hanover, July 6, 1818; d. by suicide at Kensington, London, Nov. 17, 1882. Pupil of Enckhausen at Hanover (organ), and of Hummel (pf.) and Lobe at Weimar. After residing in Hamburg, Warsaw, and Berlin, he went to Manchester, England, in 1846, and in 1850 to London. Here he became an influential writer, and an authority of the highest rank on musical history and musical instruments. Published The Pianist's Handbook (1853), Pf.-School for Young Beginners (1855), and Reflections on Church-Music (1856); his life-work began with The Music of the most Ancient Nations, particularly of the Assyrians, Egyptians, and Hebrews (1864), followed by An Introd. to the Study of National Music . . . (1866); Musical Instruments of all Countries (1869); Cat. of the Special Exhibition of Ancient Musical Instrs. (2d ed. 1873); Descr. Catalogue of the Musical Instruments in the South Kensington Museum (1874); Musical Myths and Facts (1876); The Literature of National Music (1879, reprinted from articles in the 'Times'); Researches into the Early History of the Violin Family (1883). Among his unpublished MSS. is a large hist. of the musical instrs. of the world (4 quarto vols. with over 800 illustrations).

Eng'elsberg, E. S. (pen-name of Dr. Eduard Schön), b. Engelsberg, Silesia, Jan. 23, 1825; d. Deutsch-Jasnik, May 27, 1879. A jurist, and ministerial councillor, he comp. widely popular humoristic quartets for men's voices; also pf.-sonatas, string-quartets and works for orch., the publication of which he expressly forbade in his will.

En'na, August, b. Nakskov, Denmark, May 13, 1860. His father was a poor shoemaker; his grandfather, an Italian soldier in Napoleon's army, married a German girl, and settled in Denmark. In 1870 the family moved to Copenhagen. August attended the free schools, learned to play the pf. by himself, at 17 had a little mediocre instruction in violin-playing and theory; otherwise wholly self-taught, he studied diligently (theory and instrumentation). Being but a middling violinist, he could not enter the Copenhagen orch., and therefore joined a small 'international' orch. on a trip to Finland (1880). Played on several instrs., even the big drum before a circus tent. Returned in 6 months to Copenhagen; composed the operetta A Village-Tale, which was produced (1880) in provincial theatres; played for dancing lessons, and taught piano, for about 12 cents an hour. His dance-music was often improvised. 1883, conductor for a prov. troupe, for which he often wrote the act-tunes, and even comp. 10 overtures and 2 operas, Areta (1882) and Aglaja (1884). After these practical experiences he began to study seriously, in 1884, with Schjorring (vln.), Matthesson-Hansen (organ), and Rasmussen (comp.) at Copenhagen. He was now able to publish songs, pf.-pieces, an orchestral suite, and a symph., which, by attracting Gade's attention, gained for Enna the great Ancker scholarship for composers, enabling him to study in Germany (1888–9). The fruit of this period was an opera, The Witch, produced Jan. 24, 1892, at the R. Opera House in Copenhagen with brilliant and, for a Danish comp., unheard-of success. In Germany, as Die Hexe, the work was equally successful. E.'s other operas are: Die Feen (Berlin, 1893); Kleopatra (Copenhagen, 1893); Aucassin und Nicolette (ib., 1895); Das Streichholzmädel (ib., 1897); Lamia (ib., 1897); Ung Elskov (ib., 1902); Nattergalen (ib., 1912); Gloria Arsena (ib., 1913). He further wrote the ballets The Shepherdess and the Chimney-sweep (Copenhagen, 1901) and St. Cecilia's Golden Shoe (ib., 1904); Mutterliebe for ch. and orch.; a vln.-concerto in D; 2 symphonies (D m., C m.); Märchen, symphonic tone-pictures; a Festival Overture, pf.-pieces and songs.—An opera, Komödianten (finished 1916), has not yet been produced.

Ep'stein, Julius, b. Agram, Aug. 14, 1832. Pupil there of Lichtenegger, and at Vienna of Halm (pf.) and Rufinatscha (comp.). Distinguished pianist and teacher; 1867–1901, prof. of pf. at the Vienna Cons.; one of the editors of Br. & H.'s monumental edition of Schubert's works; Ignaz Brüll and Marcella Sembrich were his pupils.—His two daughters, Rudolfine ('cellist) and Eugenie (violinist), made a successful concert-tour through Austria and Germany in the season of 1876–7.

Ep'stein, Richard, b. Vienna, Jan. 26, 1869. Pupil at the Cons. of his father, Julius E., and R. Fuchs (comp.); spent 2 years in Berlin and Dresden in further study; prof. of pf. at Vienna Cons.; lived in London (1904–14) as teacher and ensemble-player; since then in New York. Although he has appeared as soloist, he excels as an accompanist, in which capacity he has frequently been heard with such artists as Sembrich, Fremstad, Culp, Gerhardt, Destinn, Elman, Kreisler, and as assisting artist with famous chamber-music organizations (Joachim, Rosé, and Bohemian quartets, etc.).

Érard [ā-rahr'], Sébastien, the famous maker of pianos and harps; b. Strassburg, April 5, 1752; d. in his château La Muette, near Paris, Aug. 5, 1831. His family-name was originally Erhard; his father was a cabinet-maker by trade, and in his shop Séb. worked till 16, when his father died. He was now engaged by a Paris harpsichord-maker, who dismissed him "for wanting to know everything"; under a second employer his ingenuity made a stir in the musical world, and the invention of a 'clavecin mécanique' (described by Abbé Roussier, 1776) made him famous. The Duchess of Villeroy became his patroness, and fitted up in her home a workshop for Érard, in which (1777) he finished the first pianoforte made in France. In the meantime, his brother, Jean-Baptiste, joined him, and they founded an instr.-factory in the Rue Bourbon. Their growing success aroused the jealousy of the Luthiers, a branch of the Fan-makers' Guild (to which the brothers did not belong), which sought to prevent them from working; but the interposition of Louis XVI, who conferred on Sébastien a special brevet for the manufacture of 'forté-pianos,' ended the difficulty. Érard soon invented the 'piano organisé,' with two keyboards, one for piano and the other for a small organ; he also became interested in the harp, and invented the ingenious double-action mechanism, perfected in 1811. From 1786–96 he was in London; returning to Paris, he made his first grand piano, and employed the English action until his invention, in 1809, of the repetition action since widely adopted, which is regarded as his supreme achievement. An 'orgue expressif,' built for the Tuileries, was his last great work.—His nephew, Pierre Érard (1796–1855), succeeded him; he published The Harp in its present improved state compared with the original Pedal Harp (1821), and Perfectionnements apportés dans le mécanisme du piano par les Érards depuis l'origine de cet instrument jusqu'à l'exposition de 1834 (1834). Pierre's successor was his wife's nephew, Pierre Schäffer (d. 1878); the present head of the firm is the Comte de Franqueville.

Eratos'thenes, b. Cyrene, 276 B. C.; died Alexandria, Egypt, 195 B. C. A writer on mathematics, and custodian of the Alexandria library. His Katasterismoi contain scattered notes on Greek music and instrs., especially the lyra (Germ. transl. by Schaubach, 1796; Bernhardy edited an edition of the original text, publ. 1822). His work on Music is lost; Ptolemy quotes his division of the tetrachord.

Fanelli, Ernest, b. Paris, June 29, 1860. At the age of 13 he played the kettledrums in a small orchestra; entered the Paris Cons. in 1876 and studied comp. with Delibes. From 1883–7 he worked on a series of symph. pictures, Thèbes (still unfinished), inspired by Gautier's Roman de la Momie; from this he turned his attention to an orchestral suite, Impressions pastorales; next followed 4 Humoresques for orch.; L'Effroi du Soleil, lyric scene; Suite Rabelaisienne; a pf.-quintet. Unable to secure a hearing, he lost courage, and ceased writing in 1893. At the same time he disappeared, and for the next 20 years lived in poverty and obscurity. Early in 1912 he applied to Pierné for work as a copyist, submitting his score of Thèbes as a specimen of his handwriting. P. was struck by the music, and produced the fragment at the Colonne concert of March 17, 1912; the following winter it was played by the N. Y. Symphony Orch. The musical value of this work (as well as that of all of Fanelli's comps.) is small; but what created almost a sensation was the fact, that in a work written in 1883, when Debussy was still a student at the Cons., F. actually anticipated modern impressionism. Even after F. had thus been brought into prominence, he has not resumed composition; the character of the works mentioned is best described by the term 'grotesque.'—Cf. M.-D. Calvocoressi, An Unknown Composer of Today, in 'M. T.,' April, 1912.

Faning, Eaton, English conductor and composer; b. Helston, Cornwall, May 20, 1850. Pupil 1870–6 of the R. A. M. (Bennett, Steggall), winning the Mendelssohn scholarship in 1873 and the Lucas medal in 1876. Mus. Bac., Cantab., 1894; Mus. Doc., 1899; appointed prof. of pf. at R. A. M. in 1878; also taught at the Natl. Training School of Music and R. C. M.; gave up these posts in 1885 when he became director of music at Harrow School, where he remained till 1901; then member of Assoc. Bd. of R. A. M. and R. C. M.; examiner for musical degrees at Cambridge Univ., 1904–9; now (1916) member of Board of Studies, London Univ.—Works: 3 operettas, The Two Majors (1877), Mock Turtle (1881), and The Head of the Poll (1882); a dramatic cantata, Liberty (1882); cantata for female voices, Buttercups and Daisies; church-music; symphony in C m.; overture, The Holiday; quartets, choruses, songs, etc. Cf. 'M. T.,' Aug., 1901 (p. 513).

Fano, (Guido) Alberto, b. Padua, May 18, 1875. Pupil of Cesare Pollini in Padua; while continuing his musical studies with G. Martucci in Bologna, he studied law at the Univ., taking the degree of Dr. juris in 1898; in 1900, app. teacher of pf. at the Liceo Musicale in Bologna; 1905, director of the Cons. in Parma; since 1911, artistic director of the Cons. in Naples.—Works: Juturna (opera; not yet prod.); a concert-overture; a symph. prelude; La Tentazione di Gesù, symph. poem; Astrea, for soli, ch. and orch.; a vln.-sonata (awarded prize by the 'Milan Soc. del Quartetto,' 1898); a vcl.-sonata; pf.-pieces; songs.

Fargas y Soler, Antonio, Spanish writer, published Biografías de los Músicos, etc. (issued since 1866, in parts, as a supplement to the Madrid paper 'La España musical'); also a Diccionario de Música.

Farinel'li (a stage-name; his real name was Carlo Broschi) [brŏhs'kē], celebrated artificial soprano; b. Naples, June 24, 1705; d. Bologna, July 15, 1782. Taught by Porpora, he first sang in Naples with great success, being playfully called 'il Ragazzo' (the Boy) on account of his youth. At his début at Rome, 1722, in Porpora's opera Eumene, he was the object of enthusiastic ovations; his fame spread, and the Italian cities vied with each other to obtain an opportunity of hearing him. Only once—at Bologna, 1727, in a contest with Bernacchi—was he outdone by any rival; and he profited by this defeat, taking lessons of Bernacchi, and thus becoming unrivalled in bravura and coloratura. He visited Vienna in 1724, '28, and '31; at the instance of the emperor, Charles VI, during his last visit he acquired lyric breadth and expression, and became in every way the first of European singers. Going to London in 1734, when the contest between Handel and his enemies was at its height, he joined the latter (headed by Porpora), with the result that Handel's operatic forces suffered overwhelming defeat, and the great composer thenceforward bent his energies to oratorio-writing. In London Farinelli remained for 2 years, amassing a fortune; he then (1736) proceeded to Madrid, where his wonderful art cured King Philip V of his melancholy, and the grateful monarch insisted on retaining F.'s services. The latter lived in Madrid, with a salary of 50,000 francs, as the King's friend and confidential adviser; his influence even extended through the reign of Philip's successor, Ferdinand VI; at the accession of Charles III, in 1759, he was sent away. He erected a palatial villa near Bologna, in 1761, where he lived and died in seclusion.—Cf. G. Sacchi, Vita del Cav. Don Carlo Broschi, detto Farinelli (Venice, 1784).

Farinel'li, Giuseppe, prolific dramatic composer; b. Este, May 7, 1769; d. Trieste, Dec. 12, 1836. Pupil, from 1785, of the Cons.

della Pietà de' Turchini at Naples, his teachers being Barbiello, Fago, Sala, and Tritto; his first opera, Il Dottorato di Pulchinella, produced in 1792, at Naples (?), was followed by 50 or 60 others, not original, but in very happy imitation of Cimarosa's style, and chiefly comic. From 1810–17 he lived at Turin; then went to Venice, and finally (1819) settled in Trieste as maestro and organist at the Cath. of S. Giusto. He also wrote several oratorios, cantatas, 5 grand masses, 2 Te Deums, and other ch.-music.—See Q.-Lex.

Farjeon, Harry, son of the English novelist B. L. F., and grandson of the famous actor Joseph Jefferson; b. (as a British subject) Hohokus, N. J., May 6, 1878. From 1895–1901, pupil at R. A. M. of S. Webbe (pf.), and B. Haynes and F. Corder (comp.); won the Goring Thomas scholarship in 1897, the Lucas Medal, the medal of the Worshipful Company of Musicians, the Burns Prize and the R. A. M. Club prize; A. R. A. M., 1901; app. prof. at Blackheath Cons., 1902; since 1903, prof. of comp. at R. A. M.—Works: The opera Floretta (London, 1899); 2 operettas, The Registry Office (ib., 1900) and A Gentleman of the Road (ib., 1902); Ballet of the Trees (ib., 1915); concerto for pf. and orch. in D; Hans Andersen Suite for orch.; Mowgli, symphonic poem; Air for vln. on a ground bass; 2 recitations, with pf. accomp., La Belle Dame sans Merci and Christ's Eve; numerous pf.-comps. (Minature Sonata, in B♭, Pictures from Greece, A Summer Suite, etc.). The score of a symphonic poem, Summer Vision (regarded by the comp. as his best work), was sent to Germany for performance and lost.

Far'kas, Edmund [Hungarian Ödön], b. Puszta-Monostor (Heves), Hungary, in 1852. Of a noble Hungarian family, he was intended for a civil engineer; but, preferring music, took the 4-year course at the R. Mus. Acad., in Pest, in 3 years (teachers Volkmann, Ábrányi, Erkel); a year after graduation, he was app. director of the Cons. at Klausenburg, Transylvania. Here he also acted for a time as opera-cond., and contributed mus. articles to various periodicals. F. is a diligent and successful comp.; in 1876, while still a student of engineering, he produced the 1-act opera Bayadér (Pest, Aug. 23); with a Mass in E he won the Haynald Prize of 300 florins; this was quickly followed by 12 Lieder (Dalok), the ballads Klara Zách and Szondy, several mixed choruses, and the orchestral works Tagesanbruch (Virradat), Abendlied (Estidal), Abenddämmerung (Alkony), and Dies irae; a symphony and 5 string-quartets are favorite program-pieces; a Festouvertüre also won a prize.—Operas: Feenquelle [Tündérforrás], in 1 act (Klausenburg, 1892); Die Büsser [Vezeklök], in 3 acts (Pest, 1893); Balassa Bálint, comic, in 3 acts (Pest, 1896); and Das Blutgericht [Tetemre hivás] (ib., 1900). F. aims especially at the development of the national (Hungarian) element in his music.

Farmer, Henry, b. Nottingham, England, May 13, 1819; d. there June 25, 1891. A self-taught violinist and organist, he also had a music-shop in Nottingham; and composed a Mass in B♭, violin-concertos and other music for violin, orchestral overture Calypso, glees, pf.-pieces, songs, etc. Also published New Violin School; The Violin Student; New Violin Tutor; Tutor for American Organ and Harmonium.

Farmer, John, b. Nottingham, Aug. 16, 1836; d. Oxford, July 17, 1901. Pupil of Leipzig Cons., and of Aug. Späth at Koburg. Taught in a Zurich music-school for some years; 1862-85, he was music-master at Harrow School, then organist of Baliol College, Oxford, where he founded a musical society, giving regular concerts.—Works: An oratorio, Christ and His Soldiers (1878); a fairy opera, Cinderella (1882); comic cantata, Froggy would a-wooing go (1887); a Requiem; Nursery-rhymes for ch. and orch.; 2 septets (C and D) for flute, pf., and strings; a pf.-quintet; etc. Has edited numerous class song-books.

Farnsworth, Charles Hubert, b. Cesarea, Turkey, Nov. 29, 1859. Pupil of B. D. Allen (organ) at Worcester, Mass.; having held various positions as organist, he was head of music dept. at Colorado Univ., 1888–1900; since 1900 at Teachers' Coll., Columbia Univ., N. Y., as adj. and assoc. prof.; has published several educational works on music (Education through Music, etc.); contributor to Macmillan's 'Encyclopædia of Education' and Scribner's 'High School Education.'

Farrar [făr-rahr'], Geraldine, lyric soprano (coloratura); b. Melrose, Mass., Feb. 28, 1882. Began study under Mrs. J. H. Long of Boston, where she made her professional début as a concert-singer at the age of 14; continued with Trabadello in Paris and Lilli Lehmann at Berlin, where her successful début at the Royal Opera on Oct. 15, 1901, as Marguerite in Faust, led to immediate engagement for 3 years; contract renewed repeatedly, so that she has been a regular member uninterruptedly since. Her American début at the Metr. O. H., New York, on Nov. 26, 1906, as Juliette in Roméo et Juliette, was equally successful; she has sung there ever since, and has also starred in most leading Continental opera houses. Her repertory embraces standard rôles of modern French, Germ. and Italian opera: Marguerite (Faust; Mefistofele; Damnation de Faust), Juliette, Micaëla and Carmen (Carmen), Mignon, Angela (Le Domino noir), Manon (Massenet), Charlotte (Werther), Zerlina and Elvira (Don Giovanni), Susanna and Cherubino (Figaro), Mimi (La Bohème), La Tosca, Madama Butterfly, Desdemona (Otello), Gilda, Violetta, Elsa, Elisabeth, Eva; she created the principal soprano rôles in Mascagni's Amica (1905), Camondo's The Clown (1905), Saint-Saëns l'Ancêtre (1906), Humperdinck's Königskinder (1910); also in the Berlin première of Massenet's Manon (1903) and the American premières of Dukas' Ariane et Barbe-Bleue (1911) and Charpentier's Julien (1914). The real dramatic timbre of her voice, capable of every shade of expression, combined with the subtlety and consummate charm of her acting, won for her instantly the hearts of both European and American audiences. No more striking proof of her convincing histrionic powers can be adduced than the sensational success of the film-production of her Carmen (1915); in this field she has since added The Temptation and Maria Rosa (1916). On Feb. 8, 1916, she married the actor Lou Tellegen (real name, van Dommelen).—Cf. H. T. Finck, Success in Music (New York, 1909), and her autobiography, G. F. (Boston, 1916).

Farrenc [făh-răhn'], Jacques-Hippolyte-Aristide, b. Marseilles, April 9, 1794; d. Paris, Jan. 31, 1865. In 1815 he became second flute at the Th. Italien, Paris; studied at the Cons. from 1806; established a music-shop, taught, and composed (a concerto, sonatas, variations, etc., for flute). The historic concerts given by, and the writings of, Fétis, aroused his interest in the history of music; for several years he diligently collected material for the rectification of existing biographies, but generously turned it over to Fétis for use in the 2d edition of his great work, on which Farrenc also read proofs. Jointly with E. Fétis he published Trésor des pianistes (20 vols., 1861–72), a collection of pf.-music from the 16th century to Mendelssohn, with historical notes. From 1854 he contrib. papers to 'La France musicale' and other journals.

Farrenc, Jeanne-Louise (née Dumont), wife of preceding; b. Paris, May 31, 1804; d. there Sept. 15, 1875. She was a pupil of Reicha; Moscheles and Hummel also influenced her studies. She married in 1821. In 1842 she was app. prof. of pf.-playing at the Cons., retiring on a pension in 1873. She was a fine pianist and remarkable composer (symphonies, overtures, a nonet, a sextet, quintets, quartets, and trios; sonatas for pf. and vln., a variety of pf.-pieces, etc.); most of her works were published, and many were often played in public; the 'Prix Chartier' was twice awarded to her. After her husband's death she continued his part of the work on the Trésor des pianistes; she is the authoress of Traité des abréviations employées par les clavecinistes des XVII^e^ et XVIII^e^ siècles (1897).

Farwell, Arthur, b. St. Paul, Minn., April 23, 1872. After graduation from the Mass. Inst. of Technology, in 1893, he spent the next six years studying music with Homer Norris in Boston, Humperdinck in Berlin and Guilmant in Paris; 1899–1901, lecturer on music at Cornell Univ.; in 1909 he joined the editorial staff of Mus. America; 1910–13, director of municipal concerts in N. Y. City; 1915, succeeded D. Mannes as director of Mus. School Settlement in N. Y. In Dec., 1901, he established at Newton Center, Mass., the Wa-Wan Press, which "is an enterprize organized and directly conducted by composers, in the interest of the best American composition. It aims to promote, by publication and public hearings, the most progressive, characteristic and serious works of American composers, known or unknown, and to present compositions based on the melodies and folk-lore of the American Indians." F.'s compositions comprise Amer. Indian Melodies; Folk-songs of the South and West; Navajo War Dance; Symbolistic Studies; 3 pf.-pieces on Indian themes, Dawn (also arranged for orch.), Ichibuzzi, The Domain of Hurakan; Hymn to Liberty; incidental music to Joseph and His Brethren and The Garden of Paradise; music for the pageants at Meriden, N. H. (1913), and Darien, Conn. (1913), and Percy Mackay's Caliban by the Yellow Sands (N. Y., May, 1916; masque written for the Shakespeare tercentenary).

Fasch, Johann Friedrich, b. Buttelstädt, near Weimar, April 15, 1688; d. Zerbst, Dec. 5, 1758, where he was court Kapellm. Pupil of Kuhnau at Leipzig, and later (1713) of Graupner and Grunewald at Darmstadt; in 1721 he went to Lucaveč, Bohemia, as Kapellm. to Count Morzin; after 1722, Kapellm. at Zerbst. A catalogue of his works, compiled in 1743, enumerates 7 complete series of church-cantatas, 12 masses, 69 overtures, 21 concertos (for vln., fl., oboe, etc.), of which nothing has been printed. However, many scores are preserved in MS. in the libraries of Darmstadt, Dresden, Leipzig and Brussels; in the archives of the Thomasschule at Leipzig are the parts of five orchestral suites of F. in the handwriting of J. S. Bach, who entertained a very high opinion of the works of his contemporary. H. Riemann has publ. 5 trio-sonatas and a quatuor in 'Collegium Musicum,' and 2 orchestral suites in B. & H.'s 'Orchesterbibliothek.' — His autobiography appeared in vol. iii of F. W. Marpurg's Historisch-kritische beyträge zur aufnahme der musik (Berlin, 1754–78). Cf. also J. A. Hiller, Fasch, Karl Friedrich Christian, son of Joh. Friedr.; b. Zerbst, Nov. 18, 1736; d. Berlin, Aug. 3, 1800. Weakly as a child, his musical talent developed rapidly; in 1756, at Benda's recommendation, he was app. cembalist to Frederick the Great at Berlin, as C. Ph. E. Bach's assistant. During the Seven Years' War he eked out his meagre salary, paid in depreciated paper money, by teaching; from 1774–6 he was Kapellm. at the opera. He retained his salaried post after Frederick gave up flute-practice, and had leisure for composing church-music (publ., in 6 vols., in 1839), and developed great contrapuntal skill. Choral reunions begun in 1790 led, in 1792, to the foundation of the famous 'Singakademie,' which flourished, under Fasch's conductorship, from the start and is still among the foremost choral societies of Germany (present cond., G. Schumann [since 1900]).—Cf. F. Zelter, Biographie von K. Fr. Chr. F. (1801); M. Blumner, Geschichte der Berliner Singakademie (1891).—See Q.-Lex.

Fauchey [foh-shā′], Paul, b. 1858. Former chef du chant at the Opéra-Comique; brought out a 3-act 'opéra-comique populaire,' La Carmagnole (Paris, Folies-Dram., 1897).

Faure [fohr], Jean-Baptiste, dram. baritone; b. Moulins, Allier, Jan. 15, 1830; d. Paris, Nov. 9, 1914. Entered the Paris Cons. in 1851; was also choir-boy at St.-Nicholas-des-Champs, and at the Madeleine, where Trévaux was his teacher. He finished his Cons. Course under Ponchard and Moreau-Sainti, taking first prize in the class for comic opera; début at the Op.-Com., Oct. 20, 1852, in Massé's Galathée. From 1852–60 he was engaged at the Opéra-Comique, singing principal rôles after the retirement of Bataille and Bussine, his successes equalling those of Duprez in his best days. From 1861–76 he was first bar. at the Opéra. His farewell appearance occurred in Hamlet, May 13, 1876, after which he appeared only one season in London (1877) and one in Vienna (1878); for some years after that he still appeared with enormous success in concerts. In 1857 he was app. prof. at the Cons. but resigned after a short period. Among the numerous rôles which he created the more important are Duke of Greenwich in Auber's Jenny Bell (1855); Marquis d'Hérigny in Auber's Manon Lescaut (1856); Crêvecœur in Gevaert's Quentin Durward (1858); Hoël in Meyerbeer's Pardon de Ploërmel (1859); Nelusko in Meyerbeer's l'Africaine (1865); Marquis de Posa in Verdi's Don Carlos (1867); Hamlet in Thomas' Hamlet (1868). He was unsurpassed in Les Huguenots, Le Prophète, Guillaume Tell, La Muette de Portici, Faust, Don Giovanni. F. wrote a number of songs and L'Art du Chant.—In 1859 he married Constance-Caroline Lefebvre (1828–1905), who sang the 'Dugazon' (q. v.) rôles at the Op.-Com. (1858–67).

Fauré [foh-rā′], Gabriel-Urbain, composer; b. Pamiers, Ariège, May 13, 1845. Pupil of Niedermeyer, Dietsch, and Saint-Saëns; 1866, organist at Rennes, then at St.-Sulpice and St.-Honoré; m. de chap. (1877) and (1896) organist at the Madeleine; also, in 1896, prof. of comp., cpt., and fugue, etc., at the Cons., succeeding Massenet; in 1905 he succeeded Dubois as director of the Cons.; 1909, elected member of the Académie (successor to Reyer); 1910, Commander of the Légion d'Honneur.—Works: Three operas, l'Organiste (Paris, 1887); Prométhée (Béziers, 1900); Pénélope (Paris, 1913); incid. music to Dumas' Caligula, Haraucourt's Shylock, Maeterlinck's Pelléas et Mélisande, and Clemenceau's Le Voile du Bonheur; La Naissance de Venus, for soli, ch. and orch.; a Chœur des Djinns; Requiem; symphony in D m.; vln.-concerto; orchestral suite in F; 2 pf.-quartets (C m., G m.); Élégie for 'cello; Berceuse and Romance for vln. and orch.; a well-known vln.-sonata (1878); a pf.-quintet in D m.; songs, duets, etc. He took the 'Prix Chartier' for chamber-music in 1885 and 1893. —Cf. O. Séré, Musiciens français d'aujourd'hui (2d ed. Paris, 1911); L. Vuillemin, G. F. et son œuvre (Paris, 1914).

Faust, Karl, bandmaster; b. Neisse, Silesia, Feb. 18, 1825; d. Bad Cudowa, Sept. 12, 1892, where he was conductor of the Badekapelle. From 1853–65, bandmaster at Luxemburg, Frankfort-on-Oder, and Breslau; then conductor of the Silesian Concert-Orch.; 1869–80, music director at Waldenburg.—His works consist of favorite dance-music and marches.

Fausti'na. See HASSE, FAUSTINA.

Favarger [făh-văhr-zhā′], René, b. Paris, 1815; d. Étretat, near Havre, Aug. 3, 1868. He lived in London, as a teacher, for years; his graceful pf.-pieces (many so-called Fantasias, also a Bolero, a Rêverie, a Nocturne, etc.) were exceedingly popular in England, France, and Germany.

Favre, Jules. Pen-name of W. M. WATSON.

Fawcett, John, b. Wennington, Lancashire, Dec. 8, 1789; d. Bolton, Lancashire, Oct. 26, 1867. A shoemaker by trade, he became a music-teacher in Bolton, and comp.

much sacred music: An oratorio, Paradise (1865); a Christmas piece, The Seraphic Choir (1840); and many minor pieces in various collections.

Fawcett, John, son of the above; b. Bolton, 1824; d. Manchester, July 1, 1857. Organist, pupil of Bennett in R. A. M.; Mus. Bac., Oxon., 1852.—Wrote a cantata, Supplication and Thanksgiving; also anthems, glees, songs, and pf.-pieces.

Fay, Amy, b. Bayou Goula, Miss., May 21, 1844. Pianist, pupil in Berlin of Tausig and Kullak, in Weimar of Liszt. Published (Chicago, 1881; 20th ed. 1912) Music-Study in Germany, a book which has been widely read, and translated into French and Germ. Resides in New York as a music-teacher and lecturer.

Fay, Guillaume du. See DUFAY.

Fayolle [-yŏhl'], François-Joseph-Marie, writer on music; b. Paris, Aug. 15, 1774; d. there Dec. 2, 1852. Publ. (with Choron) Dictionnaire historique des musiciens . . . (1810–11, 2 vols.; transl. for the most part from Gerber's old work, with numerous errors); Notices sur Corelli, Tartini, Gaviniés, Pugnani et Viotti (1810); Sur les drames lyriques et leur exécution (1813); Paganini et Bériot (1830).

Fechner [feyh'-], Gustav Theodor, b. Gross-Särchen, Niederlausitz, April 19, 1801; d. Leipzig, Nov. 18, 1887. Prof. of physics at Leipzig from 1834. Published Repertorium der Experimentalphysik, in which musical phenomena are treated; also Elemente der Psychophysik (1860, 2 vols.), and Vorschule der Aesthetik (1870, 2 vols.), valuable as establishing a basis of musical esthetics.

Fedeli [-dā'lē], Vito, b. Foligno, June 19, 1866. Pupil of A. Leonardi and E. Terziani in Rome; director of the Cons. at Novara.—Works: The operas La Vergine della Montagna (Reggio-Calabria, 1897) and Varsovia (Rome, 1900); several masses a capp.; do. w. orch. or organ; pieces for orch; choruses; songs. He has contributed some valuable historical articles to the 'Rivista Mus. It.' and the 'Sbd.' and 'Ztschr. Int. M.-G.'

Federici [-rē'chē], Vincenzo, dramatic comp.; b. Pesaro, 1764; d. Milan, Sept. 20, 1827 (Sept. 26, 1826?). Orphaned at 16, he made his way to London, where he supported himself by teaching, became cembalist at the Italian opera, and in 1790 prod. his first opera, l'Olimpiade, which was followed by several others. Recalled to Italy in 1803, he wrote various successful operas for Milan and Turin; was app. in 1809 prof. of cpt. at Milan Cons., and (1825) Censore (Director) of the same, succeeding A. Minoja. He comp., in all, 14 serious operas, and 1 comic opera, La Locandiera scaltra (Paris, 1812).—See Q.-Lex.

Federlein [fā'dĕr-līn], Gottfried H., son of Gottlieb F.; b. New York, Dec. 31, 1883. Pupil of his father, W. B. Keeler (pf.), E. J. Biedermann (theory), H. E. Parkhurst and W. R. Hedden (org.); from 1905–7 studied comp. at Inst. of Mus. Art, New York, with P. Goetschius and L. V. Saar; since 1910 org. for the Soc. for Ethical Culture, and, since 1915, also org. at Temple Emanu-El; has given org.-recitals in New York and the Eastern States; 1907, F. A. G. O.; winner of Clemson Prize and Medal for best anthem for mixed voices and org. (1915).—Has publ. services, anthems, org.-pieces and songs.

Federlein, Gottlieb (Heinrich), b. Neustadt-an-der-Aisch, near Nuremberg, Nov. 5, 1835. Pupil, in Munich Cons., of Rheinberger (comp.), Wanner (pf.), Jos. Walter (vln.), and Julius Hey (voice). He has had several positions as org.; now (1916) retired and living in New York.—Besides numerous songs, F. has publ. an excellent School of Voice-culture and Essays on Wagner's Ring of the Nibelung.

Felix, Dr. Hugo, operetta-composer; b. Vienna, Nov. 19, 1866. Works: Husarenblut (Vienna, 1894); Das Kätzchen (Lemberg [Polish], 1890, and Vienna, 1892); Rhodope (Berlin, 1900); Madame Sherry (Berlin, 1902); Die Merveilleusen (?) and Sein Bébé (?).

Fenaro'li, Fedele, distinguished teacher; b. Lanciano, Abruzzi, Apr. 25, 1730; d. Naples, Jan. 1, 1818. Entered the Cons. of S. M. di Loreto, Naples, in 1744, studying under Leo, and later Durante; in 1755 he was app. prof. of cpt. and comp. at the Cons. della Pietà, Naples, a post which he held till death. He trained many eminent musicians (Cimarosa, Zingarelli, Mercadante, Conti, etc.). He publ. Partimenti e regole musicali and Regole musicali per i principianti di cembalo (Naples, 1795). His compositions (the oratorio Abigaile, 1760; masses w. orch.; a requiem, motets, cantatas, etc.) are sound specimens of harmonization and part-leading, but quite wanting in originality.—See Q.-Lex.

Fe'o, Francesco, celebrated composer and singing-teacher; b. Naples, c. 1685; d. (?). He was a pupil of Ghizzi, whom he succeeded, in 1740, as teacher at the Naples Cons. della Pietà. His first opera, L'Amor tirannico, ossia Zenobia, was given at Naples in 1713, and was followed by 5 others up to 1731. Feo also wrote 3 intermezzi, an oratorio, masses, and other church-music.—See Q.-Lex.

Fernandez-Caballe'ro (fĕr-nāhn'dāth kăh-băh-l'yā'rŏh), Manuel, b. Murcia, Mar. 14, 1835; d. Madrid, Feb. 20, 1906. Pupil at Madrid Cons. of Fuertes (harm.) and Eslava (comp.); then devoted himself wholly to composition, and became very popular as a writer of 'zarzuelas,' of which he wrote about 220; elected mem. of the Acad. in 1902. A few of his most successful works are Los Dineros del Sacristan and Los Africanistas (Barcelona, 1894); El cabo primero (Barcelona, 1895); La Rueda de la Fortuna (Madrid, '96); Los Estudiantes (Madrid, 1900). He has also written sacred music.

Ferrabos'co (or Ferabosco), Alfonso, b. Bologna, Jan. (bapt. 18th), 1543; d. there Aug. 12, 1588; was at one time musician to the Duke of Savoy; 1562–78 in London, in the service of Queen Elizabeth. Publ. madrigals a 4 (1542), a 5 (1587), and others a 5–8 in Pevernage's 'Harmonia celeste,' printed by Phalèse (1583).—See Q.-Lex.

Ferrabos'co, Alfonso, natural son of preceding; b. Greenwich, England, c. 1575; d. there March (buried 11th), 1628. About 1605 he became tutor to Prince Henry, to whom he dedicated a volume of Ayres (1609). Some of his pieces were printed in Leighton's 'Teares'; he also publ. Lessons for 1, 2, and 3 Viols, and Fancies for viols.—Cf. G. E. Arkwright, Notes on the F. Family (in 'Mus. Antiquary', July, 1912); G. Livi, The F. Family (ib., April, 1913).—See Q.-Lex.

Ferrabos'co, Costantino, for several years in the emperor's service at Vienna, publ. a volume of Canzonette in 1591.

Ferrabos'co, Domenico Maria, b. Bologna, Feb. 14, 1513; d. there Feb., 1574; in 1546 m. di capp. at Basilica Vaticana, Rome; member of the Papal choir from 1550–55; motets and madrigals by him were publ. by Gardano in 1554 and 1557. MS. comps. are in the Vatican library.—See Q.-Lex.

Ferran'ti. See Zani di Ferranti.

Ferra'ri, Benedetto (called Della Tiorba from his proficiency on the theorbo), b. Reggio d'Emilia, 1597; d. Modena, Oct. 22, 1681. Studied music at Rome; proceeded thence to Venice, where he wrote libretti and composed operas; his Andromeda (music by Manelli da Tivoli) was the first (1637) ever publicly played, and was produced at F.'s private expense. From 1645–51 he was court m. di capp. at Modena; then held like appointments in Vienna and Ratisbon; was again in Modena 1653–62, and finally from 1674 till his death. Six opera-libretti (1644–51), the MS. orchestral introd. to his ballet Dafne, and an oratorio, Sansone, are all that is left of his works. He also publ. Musiche varie a voce sola (1638).

Ferra'ri, Carlo, brother of Domenico; b. Piacenza, 1730; d. Parma, 1789. A fine 'cellist; played at Paris (1758) in a Concert Spirituel; was in the service of the Duke of Parma from 1765 until his death. Reputed in Italy to be the first 'cellist to use his thumb as a 'capotasto.'

Ferra'ri, Carlotta, famous dramatic composer; b. Lodi, Italy, Jan. 27, 1837; d. Bologna, Nov. 23, 1907. Pupil of Strepponi and Panzini, and (1844–50) of Mazzucato at Milan Cons. She herself wrote the libretti and music of the following successful operas: Ugo (Milan, 1857), Sofia (Lodi, 1866), Eleonora d'Arborea (Cagliari, 1871); she also composed several masses (a Requiem for Turin, 1868), and songs (for which she wrote the words).

Ferra'ri, Domenico, b. Piacenza, early in the 18th century; d. Paris, 1780. Excellent violinist, pupil of Tartini; he lived for a time at Cremona, gave concerts in Paris in 1754, was leader of the Stuttgart orch. during some years, and settled in Paris. He is said to have been the first artist to employ harmonics. Of his works 36 violin-sonatas, 6 trio-sonatas and a vl.-concerto are extant.

Ferra'ri, Emilio, b. 1851; composer of the operas Il Bandito (Casale Monferrato, 1880), Notte d'Aprile (Milan, 1887), Il Cantico de' Cantici (ib., 1898), Primavera (ib., 1907), L'Avaro (ib., 1913).

Ferra'ri, Francisca, celebrated harp-player; b. Christiania, circa 1809; d. Gross-Salzbrunn, Silesia, Oct. 5, 1828. She played with brilliant success in Leipzig (1826) and Magdeburg (1827).

Ferra'ri, Gabriella, Italian pianist and composer; b. Italy, 1851. Pupil of the Milan Cons. and, later, in Paris of Ketten (pf.), Dubois and Gounod (comp.); at the age of 12 she was exhibited as a pianistic prodigy, but after the completion of her studies she settled in Paris as composer; she became favorably known through pf.-pieces (Rhapsodie espagnole, Le Ruisseau, Hirondelle, etc.) and songs (Larmes en Songe, Chant d'Exil, Chant d'Amour, etc.); she then wrote for orch. (suites, etc.), and finally ventured upon dramatic comp. with the operas Le dernier amour (Paris, 1895), Le Tartare (ib., 1906), Le Cobzar (Monte Carlo, 1909).

Ferra'ri, Giacomo Gotifredo, b. Roveredo, Tyrol, 1759; d. London, Dec., 1842. St. in Verona under Marcola, Borsaro, and Abbate Cubri; for 2 years with Father Marianus Stecher in the monastery of Mariaberg, near Chur; and under Latilla at Naples. Through Campan, maître d'hôtel to Marie Antoinette, he became accompanist to the queen, and later cembalist at the Théâtre Feydeau (1791–3). His opera, Les Événements imprévus (1794?), having been done to death by the critics, he left Paris, made a concert-tour in the Netherlands, and then settled in London as a singing-teacher and composer.—

Works: 3 Italian operas given in London, La Villanella rapita (1787), I due Svizzeri (1798), L'Eroina di Raab (1799); 2 ballets; many pcs. for pf., harp, flute, and voice; Concise Treatment of Italian Singing (1815?); Instructions . . . in the Art of Singing (1827); Studio di musica teorica e pratica; and autobiographical Aneddoti (1830, 2 vols.).

Ferra'ri, Serafino Amadeo de', b. Genoa, 1824; d. there Mar. 31, 1885, as Director of the Cons. A pianist, organist, and dramatic comp.—Operas: Catalina (not given), Don Carlo (Genoa, 1853; prod. later as Filippo II), Pipele (1856), Il Matrimonio per concorso (1858), Il Menestrello (1861), Il Cadetto di Guascogna (1864); the ballet Delia; masses, songs, etc.

Ferra'ri-Fonta'na, Edoardo, dramatic tenor; b. Rome, Italy, July 8, 1878. The son of a distinguished physician, he at first intended to follow his father's profession; but having completed his medical studies, he entered the diplomatic service in 1902 as secretary to the Italian Consul at Montevideo. Here he became interested in music, which he studied diligently without a teacher, and began to sing in amateur performances of lighter operas. He returned to Italy in 1906, and, without further study, sang in various theatres with ever increasing success. His opportunity came at Turin, when the principal tenor of the Teatro Regio was suddenly taken ill, and F.-F. unexpectedly made his début in grand opera on March 2, 1910, as Tristan(!). His success was instantaneous and overwhelming, so that within the following two years he sang at Rome, Naples, Bologna, Milan and Buenos Aires, and was recognized as one of the foremost interpreters of Wagner in Italy. In Buenos Aires he sang with Margarete Matzenauer, whom he married June 26, 1912; in 1913 he created the rôle of Avito in Montemezzi's Amore dei tre Re; 1913–14 he was eng. for the Boston Op. Co., and was received with enthusiasm also at the M. O. H. He possesses a voice of great sensuous beauty and much power, admirably suited to heroic parts; besides, he is favored with a splendid stage-presence and fine histrionic ability. His répertoire comprises the principal tenor parts in Tannhäuser, Lohengrin, Tristan und Isolde, Siegfried (all in German and Italian), Pagliacci, Carmen, Norma, Amore dei tre Re, Girl of the Golden West, Radcliff, Aida, Otello, Samson et Dalila, Cavalleria Rusticana, I Giojelli della Madonna, etc.

Ferra'ta, Giuseppe, born Gradoli, Romagna, Jan. 1, 1865. At the age of 14 he won a scholarship at the Liceo of the R. Academy of St. Cecilia, Rome, where he studied with G. Sgambati, E. Terziani and A. Leonardi; graduated in 1885, winning the prize of the Ministry of Publ. Instruction; then had the good fortune of benefiting from the last lessons that Liszt gave; from 1885–90 he toured Italy as a pianist; for some time he was director of Beaver Coll. of Mus. in Pittsburgh; now (1916) head of pf.-dept. and prof. of comp. at Newcomb Coll., Tulane Univ., New Orleans; knighted by the King of Portugal in 1887; Commendatore della Corona d'Italia, 1914; member R. Philharm. Soc. of Rome.—Works: Op. 5, Concerto for pf. and orch. in D m.; op. 15, Messe solennelle in E, for soli, chorus and orch.; op. 28, String-quartet in G (1st prize of Art Soc. of Pittsburgh, 1908); op. 31, Suite for pf. and vl. (1st prize, do.); op. 35, Dies Irae for 8-part ch. (1st prize, do.); op. 40, Symphony in D♭, with chorus; organ-pieces and songs.

Ferret'ti (or Feretti), Giovanni, born Venice, c. 1540. Publ. 5 books of Canzoni alla napoletana a 5 (1567–91), 2 books of the same a 6 (1576, 1579), and a vol. of Madrigali a 5 (1588).—See Q.-Lex.

Ferret'ti, Don Paolo, eminent musicologist; b. Subiaco. Studied theology at the Benedictine Coll. of San Anselmo in Rome; taught in the monastery of Torrechiara, n. Parma; now (1916) abbot of the Benedictine monastery San Giovanni at Parma; chairman of the mus. commission of the diocese of Parma and member of the executive committee of the Italian St. Cecilia Soc. His investigations regarding the rhythmic treatment of Gregorian Chant have placed him among the foremost musical scholars of today. He has publ. Principi teorici e pratici de Canto Gregoriano (1906) and Il Cursus metrico e il Ritmo delle melodie del Canto Gregoriano (1913).

Fer'ri, Baldassare, celebrated artificial soprano; b. Perugia, Dec. 9, 1610; d. there Sept. 8, 1680. At 11 he was choir-boy to Cardinal Crescenzio, in Orvieto, in whose service he remained till 1655, when the Swedish invasion broke up the court, and F. entered the service of Ferdinand III, at Vienna. At the age of 65 he retired to his native city. From all accounts, F. appears to have been the most extraordinary singer who ever lived. His vocal technique was perfect, his breath inexhaustible, and his style, whether in pathetic singing or coloratura, faultless; all this with a voice of incomparable beauty.—Cf. G. Conestabile, Notizie biografiche di B. F. (1846).

Fer'ri, Nicola, composer and singing-teacher; b. Mola di Bari, Italy, Nov. 4, 1831; d. London, Mar. 26, 1886. Of precocious development, he wrote an opera, Luigi Rolla, at the age of 16; then entered the Naples Cons., studying under Merca-dante. After a lengthy sojourn in Paris, he established himself in London, and became prof. of singing at the Guildhall S. of Music.—Works: The operas Luigi Rolla, Lara, and others; and many beautiful songs.

Ferrier [fĕh-r'yā'], Paul-Raoul-Michel-Marie, dramatist and librettist; b. Montpellier, Mar. 28, 1843. He is the author of a vast number of light comedies, and has written many libretti for operas and operettas of temporary vogue in Paris; e.g., La Marocaine, Les Mousquetaires au couvent, Fanfan la Tulipe, La Nuit aux soufflets, Tabarin, La Vie mondaine, Les petits Mousquetaires, Joséphine vendue par ses sœurs, Le Valet de cœur, La Vénus d'Arles, Cendrillonette, Le Fétiche, Sansonnet, Le Coq, Mlle. Asmodée, Mé-na-ka, Miss Robinson, Calendal, Chilpéric, La Dot de Brigitte, Le Carnet du Diable, Le Capitole, Le Carillon, etc.

Ferron, Adolphe, b. Vienna, May 21, 1855; in 1892, Kapellm. at the Th. Unter den Linden, Berlin; 1897, Kapellm. at Carl-Theater, Vienna. Has prod. the 'Gesangsposse' Adam und Eva (Berlin, 1891); the 3-act operetta Sataniel (Dresden, 1886); the 1-act operetta Daphne (Berlin, 1892); the 3-act vaudev.-operetta Das Krokodil (Berlin, 1897); and a number of farces.

Ferro'ni, Vincenzo Emidio Carmine, b. Tramutola, southern Italy, Feb. 17, 1858. St. at Paris Cons. (1876–83) under Savard (harm.; 1st prize in 1880) and Massenet (comp.; 1st prize in 1883). From 1881, asst.-prof. ('suppléant') of harm. at Paris Cons.; since 1888, prof. of comp. at Milan Cons., succeeding Ponchielli. Also mus. director of the Milan 'Famiglia Artistica'; Chevalier of Ital. Crown (1897).—Works: The opera Rudello (Milan, 1892); the 3-act opera-seria Ettore Fieramosca (Como, 1896); Il Carbonaro (Milan, 1900); overture to Ariosto, f. orch.; Rhapsodie espagnole f. orch.; Hymne d'un pâtre lydien (Figaro 1st prize, 1885, among 614 competitors); numerous songs; salon-pcs. f. pf.; Idylle f. vln. and harp (or pf.); Les Cigales, scherzo f. vln. and pf.; organ-music; etc.

Ferté. See PAPILLON DE LA FERTÉ.

Fes'ca, Alexander Ernst, pianist, son of Friedr. E.; b. Karlsruhe, May 22, 1820; d. Brunswick, Feb. 22, 1849. He was taught by Rungenhagen, Schneider, and Taubert, in Berlin; made sensational concert-tours from 1839–40, was appointed chamber-virtuoso to Prince Fürstenberg in 1841, and settled in Brunswick 1842. He brought out 2 operas, Marietta (1839) and Die Franzosen in Spanien (1841), in Karlsruhe; and 2 more, Der Troubadour (1847) and Ulrich von Hutten (1849), at Brunswick; though light in style, they gave promise of a distinguished career. He wrote, besides, a pf.-sextet, 2 pf.-trios, a grand sonata f. pf. and vln., and many exceedingly popular songs (the 'Fesca Album' contains 48).

Fes'ca, Friedrich Ernst, b. Magdeburg, Feb. 15, 1789; d. Karlsruhe, May 24, 1826. A violinist, he was taught in Magdeburg, where he played in concerts, and in 1805 by A. E. Müller at Leipzig, also playing in the Gewandhaus Orch. In 1806 the Duke of Oldenburg gave him a place in his orch.; in 1808 he joined the orch. of King Jérôme of Westphalia, at Kassel. On the dissolution of the pseudo-kingdom in 1813, he went to Vienna for a short time; in 1815 he became a member, and soon after leader, of the Karlsruhe orch. He died of consumption.—Among his works, his chamber-music (20 quartets and 5 quintets) ranks highest; but he also wrote 2 operas, Cantemira (1819) and Omar und Leila (Karlsruhe, 1823); 3 symphonies, 4 overtures, etc.

Fesch, Willem de, b. Amsterdam (?), c. 1700; d. London (?), c. 1760. He was org. at Notre Dame in Antwerp about 1725, and was dismissed in Oct., 1731; went to London, where he prod. with great succ. his oratorios Judith (1733) and Joseph (1745). Several books of canzonets and songs, as well as numerous chamber-music works, were publ. at Amsterdam.—See Q.-Lex.

Fes'ta, Costanzo, b. Rome, circa 1490; d. there Apr. 10, 1545. He was a singer in the Pontifical Chapel from abt. 1517, and a contrapuntist of importance, being regarded as a forerunner of Palestrina. Among his numerous works, which bear considerable resemblance to those of Palestrina, may be noted motets a 3 (1543), madrigals a 3 (1556), litanies (1583); many motets and madrigals in contemp. colls. ('Motetti della corona,' Petrucci, 1549); and a Te Deum a 4 (publ. in Rome, 1596), still sung in the Vatican on solemn festivals; a Credo and other works are in MS. in the Vatican.—See Q.-Lex.

Fes'ta, Francesca, a stage-singer of note; b. Naples, 1778; d. Petrograd 1836; sang in Italy, in Paris at the Odéon (1809–11), and again in Italy as Signora Festa-Maffei; in 1821 at Munich, and 1829 at Petrograd.

Fes'ta, Giuseppe Maria, b. Trani, 1771; d. Naples, Apr. 7, 1839. An eminent violinist and cond., pupil of F. Mercieri; concert-giver in Italian cities and (1802) Paris, where he was app. cond. of the Opéra orch. Settled in Naples 1805, as violinist in the San Carlo Th., later as cond. of the theatre-orch. He publ. a few violin-quartets.

Fest'ing, Michael Christian, b. London (?), c. 1680; d. there July 24, 1752. Violinist, pupil of Richard Jones and Geminiani. First violin in the Philharmonic; in 1742, cond. at Ranelagh Gardens. In 1738 he established, with Dr. Greene and others, the 'Society of Musicians,' for the maintenance of impoverished musicians and their families. —Works: Numerous solos and concertos f. violin; 18 sonatos f. 2 vlns. and bass; 4 symphonies concertantes f. 2 flutes, and 4 do. f. 2 vlns.; odes, cantatas, songs, etc.—See Q.-Lex.

Fétis, Êdouard-Louis-François, son of Fr.-Jos.; b. Bouvignes, n. Dinant, May 16, 1812; d. Brussels, Jan. 31, 1909. Edited his father's 'Revue musicale' 1833–35; edited the musical (later art-) feuilleton of the 'Indépendance belge'; and was for years librarian of the Brussels Library. Publ. Les Musiciens belges (1848; 2 vols.) and Les Artistes belges à l'étranger (1857–65; 2 vols.).—His brother, Adolphe-Louis-Eugène, b. Paris, Aug. 20, 1820; d. there Mar. 20, 1873. Pupil of his father, and of H. Herz (pf.); lived in Brussels and Antwerp, and from 1856 in Paris as a music-teacher. Prod. an opera, and comp. music f. pf. and harmonium.

Fétis [fā-tēs'], François-Joseph, erudite musical theorist, historian, and critic; b. Mons, Belgium, Mar. 25, 1784; d. Brussels, Mar. 26, 1871. His father, maître de chapelle and organist at the cathedral, was his first teacher; his first instr. was the violin, and at 7 he wrote violin-duets. In his ninth year he composed a concerto for violin with orch.; and at 9 was organist to the Noble Chapter of Sainte-Waudru. From 1800–3, in the Paris Cons., he studied harmony under Rey, and piano-playing under Boieldieu and Pradher. In 1803 he visited Vienna, there studying counterpoint, fugue, and masterworks of German music. Hence his pronounced predilection for harmonic modulation, so marked in his compositions, several of which (a symphony, an overture, wind-octets, and sonatas and caprices for pf.) were publ. at this time. From this period, too, dates his first important theoretico-literary work (never completed), an investigation of Guido d'Arezzo's system and of the history of notation. He even started a mus. periodical in 1804, but it soon died. To his fruitful study of musical history and science he was prompted by the perusal of Catel's new method of harmony antagonizing Rameau's system (in which latter Rey blindly believed). In 1806 F. commenced the revision of the plain-song and entire ritual of the Roman Church, a vast undertaking completed, with numberless interruptions, after 30 years' patient research, and not yet publ. A wealthy marriage in the same year enabled him to pursue his studies at ease for a time; but the fortune was lost in 1811, and he retired to the Ardennes, where he occupied himself with composition and philosophical researches into the theory of harmony, leading to a formulation of the modern theory of tonality. In 1813 he was app. organist of the collegiate church of St.-Pierre at Douai, and teacher of harmony and singing in the municipal music-school. From this period date La Science de l'organiste and the Méthode élémentaire d'harmonie et d'accompagnement (sent to the Institut in 1816; publ. 1824). He went to Paris in 1818; publ. some pf.-music, and brought out several successful operas. In 1821 he was app. prof. of composition at the Cons.; in 1824 his Traité du contrepoint et de la fugue was publ. as a Cons. text-book. In 1827 he became librarian of the Cons., and founded his unique journal 'La Revue musicale,' which he edited alone until 1832 (its publication ceased in 1835). He also wrote for 'Le National' and 'Le Temps.' His industry was untiring; he worked from 16 to 18 hours a day. In 1828 he competed for the prize of the Netherlands Royal Inst. with a memoir, Quels ont été les mérites des Néerlandais dans la musique, principalement aux XIV^e–XVI^e siècles . . . ; Kiesewetter's essay won the prize, but F.'s was also printed by the Inst. In 1832 he began his famous historical lectures and concerts (the idea originated with Choron). In 1833 he was called to Brussels as m. de chap. to King Leopold I, and Director of the Cons.; during his 39 years' tenure of the latter position, the Cons. flourished as never before. He also cond. the concerts of the Academy, which elected him a member in 1845. On the jubilee of his wedding, in 1859, F.'s mass for 5 solo parts with chorus was sung in the church of Notre-Dame du Sablon; and his bust by Geefs was unveiled in the courtyard of the Cons.—Fétis was a sound harmonist and contrapuntist; his thorough training enabled him to pursue his theoretico-historical researches with musicianly intelligence and correspondingly important results. As an historian, he is apt to be prolix, opinionated, and is not invariably impartial or reliable. As early as 1806 he commenced collecting materials for his great Biographie universelle des musiciens et bibliographie générale de la musique in 8 volumes (1837–1844; 2nd ed. 1860–65; Suppl. of 2 vols. 1878–1880, edited by A. Pougin). It is a veritable mine of information, and still a most valuable work of reference, despite the faults noted above; mediæval music, and the modern music of France, Italy, and the Netherlands, have received especial attention. Other writings not mentioned are Traité de l'accompagnement de la partition (1829); Solfèges progressifs (1827); La musique mise à la portée de tout le monde (1830, often republ.;

Ger. transl. by Blum, 1833; Engl. eds. London, 1831, and Boston, Mass., 1842); Manuel des principes de musique (1837); Manuel des jeunes compositeurs, des chefs de musique militaire, et des directeurs d'orchestre (1837); Méthode des méthodes de piano (1837); Méthode des méthodes de chant (1840); Méthode élémentaire du plain-chant (1843); Traité complet de la théorie et de la pratique de l'harmonie (1844); Notice biogr. de Nicolò Paganini (1851; w. short history of the violin); Antoine Stradivari (1856; w. researches on bowed instrs.); 2 reports on mus. instrs. at the Exposition univ. de Paris en 1855 (1856), and the Exp. univ. de Paris en 1867 (1867); Histoire générale de la musique (5 vols.; only down to the 15th century.—Compositions: 6 operas (1820–32); symphonies, a fantasia, and an overture f. orch.; a sextet, 3 quintets, a quartet, etc.; sonatas, variations, fantasias, etc., f. piano; his sacred works comprise masses, a requiem, motets, Lamentations, Te Deum, Miserere, etc. His very valuable library of 7,325 vols. was acquired by the Bibliothèque Royale of Brussels; a catalogue was publ. in 1877.—Autobiographical sketch in his great Dictionary. L. Alvin publ. a Notice sur F.-J. Fétis (Brussels, 1874); Gollmick wrote on Herr Fétis (Leipzig, 1852).

Feurich [foi'riyh], Julius, pianoforte-maker; born Leipzig, Mar. 19, 1821; d. there July 16, 1900. He established his factory in 1851, and made a specialty of uprights; his son and successor, Hermann (b. Leipzig, 1854), turned his attention more to concert-grands.

Fevin [fŭ-văn'], Antoine [Antonius] de, a contrapuntist contemporary with Josquin, but of whose life no details are known.—Works: 3 masses (printed by Petrucci, 1515); 3 masses (printed by Antiquis, 1516); masses a 4 (Vienna Library, MS.); motets in Petrucci's 'Motetti della corona' (1514), and other colls.; and French chansons in colls. of 1540 and 1545.—See Q.-Lex.

Fevin, Robert [Robertus], a native of Cambrai, probably a contemporary of A. Fevin. He was m. di capp. to the Duke of Savoy. One mass, Le vilain jaloux, is in Petrucci's 'Missae Ant. de Fevin'; another, on La sol fa re mi, is in MS. in the Munich library.

Fèvre, le. See LEFÈVRE.

Février [fā-vr'yā'], Henri, b. Paris, Oct. 2, 1875. Pupil at the Cons. of Fauré, Leroux, Pugno and Massenet; composer of the operas Le roi aveugle (Op.-Com., 1906); Monna Vanna (Opéra, 1909; Boston, 1913); and the operettas Agnès dame galante (1912), La Princesse et le Porcher (1912), Carmosine (1913). Another grand opera, Ghismonda, was finished in 1915, but has not yet been prod. (1916).

Fi'bich, Zdenko, b. Šeboršitz, Bohemia, Dec. 21, 1850; d. Prague, Oct. 15, 1900. He was taught at Prague, the Leipzig Cons. (1865), and by Vincenz Lachner at Mannheim (1869). In 1876 he was app. asst.-Kapellm. at the National Th., Prague; in 1878, director of the Russian Church choir; in 1899 app. dramaturgist of the Boh. Nat. Th. at Prague. As a composer, he was one of the foremost in the young Czech group.—Works: The operas (produced in Prague) Bukowin (1874), Blaník (1881), The Bride of Messina (1884), The Storm (1895, 3 acts), Hédy (1896, after Byron's 'Don Juan,' in 4 acts), Sárka, 3 acts (1898; very succ.); and his masterpiece, The Fall of Arcona (1900); music to the dram. trilogy Hippodamia, by Vrchliky (Prague, 1891); 3 symphonies (F, E♭, E m.); the symphonic poems Othello, Zaboj and Slavoj, Toman and the Nymph, Vesna, Vigiliae, and At evening; several orchestral overtures (Lustspiel-Ouvertüre, A Night on Karlstein, Comenius, Udalrich and Božena); a choral ballad, Die Windsbraut; the melodramas The Watersprite, The Flowers' Revenge, Christmas Day, Eternity, Queen Emma, Hakon; a Spring Romanza for ch. and orch.; 2 string-quartets, a pf.-quartet in E m., piano-pieces, songs, choruses. Also a Method for pf.—Cf. C. L. Richter, Z. F. (Prague, 1899).

Fi'by, Heinrich, b. Vienna, May 15, 1834; pupil of the Cons.; cond. and solo violin at Laibach theatre; from 1857, city musical director at Znaim, where he founded a music-school and a singing society; the directorship of the school he resigned in 1902, while he still (1916) is cond. of the chor. soc.; in 1884 he founded the 'Deutscher Sängergauverband im südlichen Mähren.'—Works: 3 operettas; part-songs for male chorus (widely known, especially Oestreich, mein Vaterland).

Ficht'ner, Pauline. See ERDMANNSDÖRFFER.

Fiebach [fē'bah], Otto, b. Ohlau, Silesia, Feb. 9, 1851; living in Königsberg as org., dir. of a Cons. and mus.-dir. at the Univ. He is the composer of a secular oratorio, Die neun Musen, and of the operas Prinz Dominik (Danzig, 1885), Loreley (ib., 1886), Bei frommen Hirten (Dresden, 1891), Der Offizier der Königin (ib., 1900), Robert u. Bertram (Danzig, 1903), Die Herzogin von Marlborough (accepted for Berlin, 1916); also wrote Die Physiologie der Tonkunst (1891).

Fied'ler, (August) Max, b. Zittau, Dec. 31, 1859. Piano-pupil of his father, and studied the organ and theory with G. Albrecht; attended the Leipzig Cons., 1877–80, and won the Holstein scholarship. In 1882 app. teacher at the Hamburg Cons.; in 1903 dir.; 1904 succeeded Barth as cond. of the Hamburg Philharm. Soc. Although he had won an enviable reputation as a concert-pianist, he practically abandoned that career (appearing only occasionally in ensemble), and rapidly won distinction as a conductor. From 1908–12 he was cond. of the Boston Symph. Orch.; he then returned to Germany, taking up his residence in Berlin; since 1916 cond. of the Symph. Orch. at Essen. He has written a symph. (D m.), a pf.-quintet and a string-quartet, a Lustspiel-Ouvertüre, pf.-pieces and songs.

Field, John, a pianist and composer of marked originality; b. Dublin, July 26, 1782; d. Moscow, Jan. 11, 1837. His father was a violinist; his grandfather, an organist, gave him his first instruction in theory and piano-playing. Though an apt pupil, he was treated with undue severity at home, and subsequently apprenticed to Clementi, then in the full tide of his success; from him he had regular lessons till 1804, being employed in his master's salesrooms to show off the pianos to customers. He went with Clementi to Paris in 1802, and created a genuine sensation by his interpretation of Bach's and Handel's fugues; yet he was kept at his mechanical duties until Clementi took him in 1804 to Petrograd, where they parted company, Field settling there as a teacher and virtuoso of extraordinary popularity. On a tour to Moscow in 1823, he met with even more brilliant success. After a Russian tournée, he appeared in London (1832), playing a concerto of his own at the Philharmonic; proceeded thence to Paris, and (1833) through Belgium and Switzerland to Italy, where, however, his pianistic peculiarities were not appreciated. Prostrated by a combination of physical disorders, he lay for nine months in a Naples hospital; he was rescued by a Russian family named Raemanov, and taken back to Moscow, playing in Vienna, on the way, with accustomed success. But his powers were fast waning, and he died a few years later.—F. won lasting fame less as an exceptionally gifted virtuoso than as an original composer, forming the link in the history of pf.-playing between Clementi (in his later period) and Chopin. Though all the rest of his piano-works should be forgotten, as most of them are already, his memory is fragrantly and lastingly embalmed in his Nocturnes. Not only the name, but also the whole style and matter of these pieces, were strikingly new and original. Up to his time a composition had, as a matter of course, to be written in the form of a sonata, a rondo, or something of the sort. F. was the first to introduce a style in no way derived from the established categories, and in which feeling and melody, freed from the trammels of set form, reign supreme. He opened the way for all productions which have since appeared under the various titles of Songs without Words, Impromptus, Ballades, etc.; to him we may trace the origin of fanciful pieces designed to portray subjective and profound emotion; to these 'night-pieces,' so aptly named by their author, Chopin and the pianists following him owe, more or less directly, much of their inspiration.—Works for pf.: 7 Concertos (No. 1, in E♭; 2, A♭; 3, E♭; 4, E♭ [the most popular]; 5, C; 6, C; 7, C m.); 4 Sonatas (in A, E, C m., and B); 2 Airs en Rondeau; Air russe; Air russe varié (4 hands); Chanson russe varié, in D m.; Polonaise, in E♭; Reviens, reviens, Romanza and Cavatina in E; 4 Romances; Rondeau, in A; 2 Rondeaux favoris, in E and A; Rondeau with 2 vlns., vla. and bass; Since then I'm doomed, variation in C; Speed the Plough, Rondeau in B♭; 2 Divertissements with 2 vlns., vla. and bass, in E and A; 2 Fantasias, in A and G; 18 Nocturnes; Exercice modulé dans tous les tons majeurs et mineurs.—Cf. H. Dessauer, J. F., sein Leben und seine Werke (Langensalza, 1912); also F. Liszt, J. F. und seine Nocturnes (in vol. iv of 'Gesammelte Schriften,' Leipzig, 1882).

Fie'litz, Alexander von, b. Leipzig, Dec. 28, 1860; pupil of J. Schulhoff (pf.) and Kretschmer (comp.) in Dresden, where several sacred compositions for chorus, and an orchestral work, were publicly performed. He embraced the career of an opera-conductor, filling positions in Zurich, Lübeck, and Leipzig (City Th.); a nervous disorder forced him to give up this work, and from 1887–97 he lived in Italy (chiefly Capri); after his return he lived in Berlin, and taught some time in Stern's Cons.; from 1905–8 he was in Chicago, teaching in Ziegfeld's Cons.; also organized and conducted for one season the Chicago Symph. Orch. (not the same orch. as the present famous organization of that name, which was then the 'Theo. Thomas Orch.'); in 1908 he returned to Berlin, resuming his former position at Stern's Cons., succeeding G. Holländer as director (1916).—Works: Op. 6, 6 Songs on Tuscan folk-poems; op. 7, Kinder des Südens, 3 pf.-pieces; op. 8, Ich kann's nicht fassen (scene from Grillparzer's Ahnfrau); op. 9–13, songs; op. 15, Schön Gretlein, 7 songs; op. 17, 4 pf.-pieces; op. 24, 3 songs (Geibel); op. 25, Romanze for pf. and vln.; op. 27, Fantaisie for pf.; op. 28, 4 Lyric pf.-pieces; op. 29, 4 Songs; op. 37, 4 Stimmungsbilder for pf.; op. 40, 8 Mädchenlieder (P. Heyse); op. 47, 3 Narrenlieder (O. J. Bierbaum); also 2 operas, Vendetta (Lübeck, 1891), and Das stille Dorf (Hamburg, 1900).

Filip'pi, Filippo, composer and critic; b. Vicenza, Jan. 13, 1830; d. Milan, June 25, 1887. Studied law at Padua, taking his degree in 1853. But in 1852 he had begun his career as a critic with a warm defense of Verdi's Rigoletto; he renounced the law, studied music at Venice and Vienna, became, in 1859, editor of the Milanese 'Gazzetta Musicale,' and in 1859 music-critic of the newly-founded 'Perseveranza.' He publ. a collection of essays on great musicians, Musica e Musicisti, in 1879; as a zealous Wagnerite he also wrote a pamphlet, Riccardo Wagner (in German, 1876, as Richard W.: eine mus. Reise in das Reich der Zukunft); he also wrote Della vita e delle opere di Adolfo Fumagalli (Milan).—Comps.: 1 str.-quintet, 9 str.-quartets, 1 pf.-trio; pf.-pieces, songs.

Filip'pi, Giuseppe de', b. Milan, May 12, 1825; d. Neuilly, near Paris, June 23, 1887. Lived in Paris as a writer from 1846; contributed articles to Pougin's supplement to Fétis' Biogr. univ.; published a Guide dans les théâtres (with Chaudet, 1857), and a Parallèle des théâtres modernes de l'Europe (1860).

Fil'ke, Max, b. Steubendorf-Leobschütz, Silesia, Oct. 5, 1855; d. Breslau, Oct. 8, 1911. Pupil of Brosig in Breslau, of Haberl at the Kirchenmusikschule of Ratisbon (1877), and of Piutti at the Leipzig Cons. (1880); 1881, choirmaster at Straubing; 1890, conductor of the 'Sängerkreis' at Cologne; from 1891, music-director at the Cathedral in Breslau and prof. at the R. Inst. for Church-music. His numerous comps. for the church assign him a distinguished position among modern composers of sacred music.—Works: Masses, with orch., op. 47; op. 55, E♭m.; op. 58, E♭; op. 80, G; op. 87, F; op. 90, D; op. 101, Te Deum; op. 111, Requiem; Litanies, Hymns, etc.; also a number of secular choruses for male and mixed voices.

Fillmore, John Comfort, b. Franklin, New London Co., Conn., Feb. 4, 1843; d. there Aug. 15, 1898. Pupil of Geo. W. Steele at Oberlin Coll., Ohio, 1862 (organ); then of Leipzig Cons., 1865–7. Director of the musical dept. in Oberlin Coll., 1867; in Ripon College, Wis., 1868–78; in Milwaukee College for Women, 1878–84. Founded, in 1884, the 'Milwaukee School of Music' in Milwaukee, Wis., of which he was the director until 1895, when he took charge of the School of Music of Pomona Coll., Claremont, Cal.—Publ. Pianoforte Music: its History, with Greatest Masters (Chicago, 1883); New Lessons in Harmony (1887); Lessons in Mus. History (1888); On the Value of Certain Modern Theories [i. e., von Oettingen's and Riemann's]; A Study of Omaha Indian Music (with Miss Alice C. Fletcher and F. La Flesche; Peabody Museum, 1893); magazine articles on aboriginal folk-music; musical essays; lectures in various cities, and papers read at important gatherings. Also transl. into Engl. Riemann's Klavierschule and Natur der Harmonik.

Filtsch, Karl, b. Hermannstadt, Transylvania, July 8, 1830; d. Vienna, March 11, 1845. An infant prodigy, piano-pupil of Chopin and Liszt in Paris (1842), and gave concerts there and at London in 1843.

Filtz (Fils, Filz), Anton, b. probably in Bohemia, circa 1730; d. Mannheim, March (buried 14th), 1760; pupil of J. Stamitz; from 1754 first 'cellist in the Mannheim Orch. He belongs to the school of the Mannheim Symphonists, the originators of the classic instrumental style; that his works must have enjoyed great popularity seems to be proved by the numerous reprints issued at London and Amsterdam, pirated from the original Paris editions; these works show a very fertile invention, while the technical workmanship cannot rival the masterly treatment of similar works by Stamitz. Schubart calls him 'the best symphonic writer that ever lived' (1790). There have been preserved 41 symphonies, numerous trio-sonatas, string-trios, sonatas for vl., vcl., flute, etc., and concertos for various instrs. Riemann has publ. 4 symphs. in 'Dkm. der Tonkunst in Bayern' (vols. iii, 1, and vii, 2); 2 trios in A and C, ib. (vol. xv); and one, in E♭, in 'Collegium Musicum.'

Finck, Heinrich, born 1445; d. Vienna, June 9, 1527. Eminent German contrapuntist, was taught at Cracow, where he was Kapellm. to the court of John Albert I (1482), Alexander (1501), and Sigismund I (1506); from 1510–13 he lived in Stuttgart, and then, till 1524, in Salzburg; it seems probable that after 1524 he was 'regens chori' at the Schottenkloster in Vienna, where he died. Extant works: Schöne auserlesene Lieder des hochberühmten Heinrici Finckens (Nuremberg, 1536); other songs publ. by Salblinger (1545), and by Rhaw (1542). Vol. iii of the 'Gesells. für Musikforschung' contains songs, hymns, and motets.—See Q.-Lex.

Finck, Henry Theophilus, mus. writer and critic, born Bethel, Missouri, Sept. 22, 1854. Brought up in Oregon. Graduate, 1876, of Harvard (studied theory and hist. of music with Prof. J. K. Paine). Attended the first Bayreuth Festival, 1876, and studied a year at Munich; intimacy with Wagner's music-dramas bore fruit in Wagner and His Works (N. Y., 1893, 2 vols.; Germ. transl., Breslau, 1897). Spent a year in Munich; from 1877–8, studied anthropology at Harvard; then, as recipient of a fellowship, spent 3 more years in Berlin, Heidelberg, and Vienna studying comparative psychology, and writing mus. letters for N. Y. 'Nation.' Now living in New York as mus. editor of the N. Y. 'Evening Post' and 'Nation'; since 1888, lecturer on history of music at the Natl. Cons. —F. has always been an energetic and consistent champion of musical progress. Other musical writings: Chopin, and Other Musical Essays (1889); Paderewski and His Art (in 'Looker-On,' Oct., 1895); Pictorial Wagner (1899); Anton Seidl (1899); Songs and Song Writers (1900); Grieg and His Music (1909); Success in Music and how it is won (1909); Massenet and His Operas (1910). Books not connected with music: Romantic Love and Personal Beauty (1887); Pacific Coast Scenic Tour (1890); Spain and Morocco (1891); Lotus Time in Japan (1898); Primitive Love and Love-Stories (1899); Food and Flavor (1913). He also edited Fifty Master-Songs (1902); Fifty Schubert Songs (1903); Fifty Grieg Songs (1909).

Finck, Hermann, grand-nephew of Heinrich; b. Pirna, Saxony, March 21, 1527; d. Wittenberg, Dec. 28, 1558. Studied at Wittenberg (1545), and became organist there. Publ. Practica musica (1556), a valuable theoretical work; composed chorals.

Finck'e, Fritz, b. Wismar, May 1, 1846. Pupil of Leipzig Cons.; violinist in theatre-orch., Frankfort, then org. at Wismar; in 1879 teacher of singing at the Peabody Inst., Baltimore.—Publ. Anschlagselemente (1871), and pf.-pcs.

Find'eisen, Nikolai Fedorovitch, b. Petrograd, July 24, 1868; pupil of Philip and Nikolai Sokolov; founder (1893) and editor of the 'Russische Musikzeitung,' one of the most influential and ably edited of Russian journals; also contributor to many other journals in Russia and other countries; founded in 1909, with A. Siloti, the 'Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde'; since 1902 has travelled extensively through Russia as lecturer on musical topics.—Works: A. N. Verstovsky (1890); Musical Sketches and Silhouettes (1891); Glinka in Spain (1896); The Mastersingers of the Middle Ages (1897); M. J. Glinka (1898); Catalogue of the Manuscripts, Letters and Portraits of M. J. Glinka (1898); Glinka und seine Oper Russlan und Ludmilla (Munich, 1899, in German); A. N. Serov (1900); A. Dargomyzhsky (1902); History of the Russian Lied (1903); Musical Antiquity (1903–1910), a collection of musico-historical essays; A. Rubinstein (1905); Collected Letters of Glinka (1907–8); Rimsky-Korsakov (1908); V. V. Bessel (1909); History of the Petrograd Section of the Imp. Russ. Mus. Soc., 1859–1909 (1909); S. V. Smolensky (1910); From Unedited Letters of V. V. Stassov (1912). F. was one of the principal contributors to the Russian editions of Riemann's Musiklexikon (1901 and 1916).

Findeisen, Otto, b. Brünn, Dec. 23, 1862; in 1890, Kapellm. of the Wilhelm-Th., at Magdeburg; now (1916) in Leipzig; has produced the 3-act operetta Der alte Dessauer (Magdeburg, Wilhelm-Th., 1890; very succ.) and the 3-act 'Volksoper' Hennigs von Treffenfeld (ib., 1891; succ.); the 'Märchenspiel' Frau Holle (Berlin, 1904); and the operettas Kleopatra (Hamburg, 1897); Der Spottvogel (Bremen, 1898); Der Sühneprinz (Leipzig, 1904); 's Poussierschlössl (ib., 1907); Sonnenguckerl (Vienna, 1908); Meister Pinkebank (ib., 1909); Die goldene Gans (Leipzig, 1910); Jung Habenichts und das Silberprinzesschen (Dresden, 1913).

Fink, Christian, b. Dettingen, Württemberg, Aug. 9, 1831; d. Esslingen, Sept. 5, 1911. Pupil of the Esslingen Seminary, the Leipzig Cons. (1853–5), and Johann Schneider in Dresden; lived as organist and teacher at Leipzig till 1860; then at Esslingen as first teacher of music in the Seminary, and organist and mus. dir. at the principal church. Received title of Prof. in 1862.—Publ. sonatas, fugues, trios, preludes, exercises, etc., for org.; also psalms, motets, pf.-pieces (4 sonatas), songs, etc.

Fink, Gottfried Wilhelm, writer and teacher; b. Sulza, Thuringia, Mar. 7, 1783; d. Halle, Aug. 27, 1846. Theological student at Leipzig (1804), and preached for a time, but turned to music. He publ. Über Takt, Taktarten, etc., in 1818, in the 'Allgem. mus. Zeitung,' of which he was the editor 1827–41. He was app. mus. director at Leipzig Univ. in 1842, and received the honorary title of Dr. phil. He was an indefatigable writer, but his numerous books were soon forgotten because of lack of originality. He contributed to Ersch and Gruber's 'Encyclopädie,' to the 8th ed. of Brockhaus' 'Konversationslexikon,' and Schilling's 'Universallexikon der Tonkunst.'—Comps.: Pieces for pf. and vln.; terzets and quartets for male voices (Häusliche Andachten); ballads and songs; he also publ. (1843) Musikal. Hausschatz der Deutschen, a collection of 1000 songs.

Fi'no, Giocondo, b. Turin, May 3, 1867. Submitting to the wishes of his parents, he studied Oriental languages and theology (receiving the minor orders), but finally devoted himself to the study of music under Bolzoni in Turin, where he now (1916) lives as teacher and composer.—Works: A mass; a string-quartet; a suite for orch., Nubi di Vita; biblical opera Il Battista (Turin, 1906); an oratorio, Noëmi e Ruth (Bergamo, 1908); the opera La Festa del Grano (Turin, 1910); an opera, Visioni di Dante, is to be produced at Rome (1916); and La Bisbetica Domata is also ready for production; now engaged on another opera, Campane a Gloria.

Fioravan'ti, Valentino, b. Rome, Sept. 11, 1764; d. Capua, June 16, 1837. His teachers were Jannaconi at Rome, and Sala, Fenaroli, Monopoli and Tritta at Naples. Returning to Rome in 1781 (1782?), he began his career as an opera-conductor; his first opera, Le Avventure di Bertoldino, was prod. at Rome in 1784. In 1786 he went to Naples and brought out Gli Inganni fortunati the same year, followed up to 1799 by 7 others, the last, Le Cantatrici villane (Naples, 1799), being considered his best work, as it was the most successful. He visited Paris in 1807, and prod. there I Virtuosi ambulanti; spent 5 years in Lisbon, as opera-composer and cond., writing 10 operas (among them Camilla, given later at Naples as Nefte). In 1816 he succeeded Jannaconi as maestro at St. Peter's and now devoted himself wholly to church-music, a Stabat Mater and a Miserere being his best sacred comps.; but his church-music was not as good of its kind as his comic operas, of which he produced 77 between 1784 and 1824.—His autobiogr. was publ. by G. Roberti in 'La Gazzetta musicale' (1895). —See Q.-Lex.

Fioravan'ti, Vincenzo, son of Valentino; b. Rome, April 5, 1799; d. Naples, March 28, 1877. He studied secretly under Jannaconi, but finished his musical education with his father. His début as a composer was made with the opera La Pulcinella molinara (Naples, 1819); this was followed by about 40 others, all in buffa style. In 1839 he was maestro in the Cathedral of Lanciano; from 1867–72, director of the Albergo dei Poveri, Naples.

Fioril'lo, Federigo, violinist and comp.; b. Brunswick, 1753; d. some time after 1823. He was taught by his father, Ignazio F.; went to Poland in 1780, became Kapellm. at Riga in 1783, lived in Paris 1785–8, then going to London, where he played the viola in Salomon's quartet. He was heard of later in Amsterdam; and (1823) in Paris.—Works: The famous Études de Violon, 36 Caprices, is the best-known; he also wrote concertos, quintets, quartets, violin-duos, etc.—[Fétis gives a list.]—See Q.-Lex.

Fioril'lo, Ignazio, b. Naples, May 11, 1715; d. Fritzlar, near Kassel, June, 1787. A pupil of Leo and Durante, he became an opera-composer, his first venture being the opera seria Mandane (Venice, 1736). He produced Artamene (Milan, 1738), and Il Vincitor di se stesso (Venice, 1741); after long travels, he was app. Kapellm. to the court of Brunswick (1754), and from 1762–80 held a like post in Kassel, retiring to Fritzlar on a pension. In Kassel he brought out 4 operas. An oratorio, Isacco, a Requiem and other masses, and 3 Te Deums, are also noteworthy.

Fiqué, Karl, pianist; b. St. Magnus, near Bremen, April 17, 1867; pupil at Leipzig Cons. of C. Reinecke (pf.) and S. Jadassohn (comp.); since 1887, organist of Zion Luth. Ch. in Brooklyn, and (since 1904) conductor of 'United Singers of Brooklyn'; from 1897–1915, lecturer at the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences; he is a very successful lecture-recitalist, and has also appeared as solo pianist; married (1896) the soprano Katherine Noack. He has written 2 comic operas, Papa Priesewitz (Brooklyn, 1898) and Der falsche Mufti (N. Y., 1901); a string-quartet in E m.; several choral works and numerous pf.-pcs.

Fisch'er, Adolf, organist; b. Uckermünde, Pomerania, June 23, 1827; d. Breslau, Dec. 7, 1893. Pupil of A. W. Bach, Rungenhagen, and Grell (1845–51). In 1853, organist at Frankfort, and director of the Singakademie, with (1865) title of Royal Mus. Dir.; in 1870, first organist of the Elisabethkirche in Breslau, where he founded the Silesian Cons. in 1880, and became its Director.—Works: Symphonies, organ-music, motets, songs, etc.

Fisch'er, Adolf, fine 'cellist; b. Brussels, Nov. 22, 1847; d. in an insane asylum near Brussels, March 18, 1891. A pupil of Servais in Brussels Cons. In 1868 he made Paris his home, and undertook many artistic tours.

Fisch'er, Anton, b. Ried, Swabia, in 1777; d. Vienna, Dec. 1, 1808, where he had been Kapellm. at the Josefstädter Th. and (1800) at the Th. an der Wien.—Works: A number of light operas and operettas of slight originality. He also revised Grétry's Raoul, Barbe-Bleue, and Les deux avares, for production in Vienna.

Fisch'er, Christian Wilhelm, basso buffo; b. Konradsdorf, near Freiberg, Sept. 17, 1789; d. Dresden, Nov. 4, 1859. Début in Dresden, 1810; from 1817–28, basso buffo and chorus-master at Leipzig; 1828–9, at Magdeburg; 1829–31, stage-manager and chorusmaster at Leipzig, later in Dresden. For him Marschner wrote the rôles of Blunt (Vampyr) and Friar Tuck (Templer und Jüdin).

Fisch'er, Emil, famous dramatic bass; b. Brunswick, June 13, 1838; d. Hamburg, Aug. 11, 1914. He received his entire training from his parents, who were operatic singers, and made his début in Graz, in 1857, as Jean de Paris in Boieldieu's opera. After having sung in Presburg, Stettin and Brunswick, he accepted the directorship of the opera at Danzig in 1863, where he remained 7 years; from 1875–80 he was a member of the R. Opera at Rotterdam, and in 1880 joined the Dresden Court Opera. The tempting offer, made by Stanton in 1885, to head the list of bass-singers at the M. O. H., led F. to break his contract in Dresden; from then until 1891, the end of Mr. Stanton's directorship, he remained at the M. O. H., creating the bass rôles in the American premières of Wagner's music-dramas under the direction of Anton Seidl. When German opera was banished (for a time) F., unable to adjust his differences with the Dresden institution, settled in New York as a singing-teacher; sang again in W. Damrosch's seasons of German opera in 1895 and 1897; in what high esteem he was held was shown in 1904, at the benefit tendered him by his numerous admirers on his last appearance on the stage (in Die Meistersinger), when a purse of $10,000 was presented him. As an interpreter of Wagner he has never been surpassed, and was equalled by very few; while a tradition has sprung up even now, that his Hans Sachs is an ideal not yet approached by any artist.

Fisch'er, Ernst Gottfried, b. Hoheneiche, near Saalfeld, July 17, 1754; d. Berlin, Jan. 21, 1831, as prof. of natural philosophy at the 'Graues Kloster.'—Published *Über die Einrichtung des vierst. Flesch, Karl, b. Moson, Hungary, Oct. 9, 1873. Violin-pupil of Grün at Vienna Cons. (1886–9), then of Souzay and Marsick at the Paris Cons. (1890–4); début in Vienna, 1895; 1897–1902, prof. at the Cons. in Bucharest, chamber-virtuoso to the Queen and leader of the Queen's string-quartet; 1903–8, prof. at the Cons. in Amsterdam. The success of a series of five historical recitals in Berlin, in 1909, induced him to settle there; as a teacher he is scarcely less successful than as a virtuoso, especially since the publication of his famous Urstudien for violin (1910); he has toured all European countries, and the U. S. in 1913–14, meeting everywhere with enthusiastic receptions. Has published new editions of Kreutzer's Études, the vln.-works of Beethoven and Mendelssohn; 20 Études of Paganini; Mozart's vln.-sonatas (w. Schnabel).

Fletcher, Alice C., ethnologist; b. Boston, 1845; since 1882 asst. in ethnology at the Peabody Museum of Amer. Archæology and Ethnology; has devoted her life to the study of North American Indians; author of A Study of Omaha Indian Music (1893), Indian Story and Song from North America (1900).

Flodin, Karl, born (of German parents) Wasa, Finland, July 10, 1858. Pupil of R. Faltin in Helsingfors; then of the Leipzig Cons.; lived several years as mus. critic in Helsingfors; 1902–5 ed. of 'Helsingfors Post'; since 1907 living in Buenos Aires. His compositions have exerted considerable influence on the development of the modern Finnish school, culminating in Sibelius.—Works: Cortège for wind-instrs.; incid. music to Hauptmann's Hannele; Helena, scene from Goethe's 'Faust' for sop. and orch.; many excellent male and fem. choruses; author of Finnish Music (1900, in Swedish), J. Sibelius (in 'Finnische Rundschau,' 1901), Die Entwicklung der Musik in Finnland (in 'Die Musik,' 1903), 'Die Erweckung des nationalen Tones in der finnischen Musik' (ib., 1904). A biogr. of Wegelius is about to be publ. (1916).

Flem'ming, Friedrich Ferdinand, b. Neuhausen, Saxony, Feb. 28, 1778; d. Berlin, May 27, 1813, as a medical practitioner. Member of Zelter's Liedertafel, for which he comp. many fine male choruses, among which Integer vitae is a popular favorite.

Floersheim [flörs'hīm], Otto, b. Aix-la-Chapelle, March 2, 1853; pupil of Ferd. Hiller at Cologne; went to New York in 1875, became editor of 'The Musical Courier' in 1880, and from 1894–1904 was manager of its Berlin branch. For orch. he has written a Prelude and Fugue, Alla marcia, Consolation, Scherzo; for organ and orch., Elevation; pf.-pieces, songs, and some chamber-music.

Flonzaley Quartet. See DE COPPET, EDWARD.

Flood, (William Henry) Grattan, b. Lismore, Ireland, Nov. 1, 1859. As a musician chiefly self-taught; he intended to become a priest, but decided on a mus. career, and in 1877 was app. organist at a church in Dublin; took a few lessons from Dr. Kerbusch and Sir R. Stewart, and became org. at the pro-Cath. at Belfast (1878); 1882, org. at Thurles Cath. and prof. of music at the Jesuit Coll. in Tullabeg; 1890–4, prof. of music and classical languages at St. Wilfrid's Coll., Staffordshire; since 1895, org. and chm. at the Cath. of Enniscorthy, Ireland; Music Doc., Dublin Univ., 1907 (hon. c.). F. is a thorough mus. archæologist and historian; he is also a diligent collector of Irish folk-melodies.—Works: History of Irish Music (1895; 3d ed. 1913); Story of the Harp (1905); Story of the Bagpipe (1911); Memoir of W. V. Wallace (1912); contrib. to 'Grove's Dictionary,' 'The Catholic Encyclopædia,' 'Dict. of Nat. Biography,' 'Sbd. Int. M.-G.'; editor of 'Songs and Airs of O'Carolan,' 'Moore's Irish Melodies,' 'Armagh Hymnal' and 'The Spirit of the Nation.'

Flori'dia, Pietro, barone Napolino, b. Modica, Sicily, May 5, 1860. St. at R. Cons. of S. Pietro a Majella, Naples, 1873–9, under B. Cesi (pf.), P. Serrao and Lauro Rossi (cpt. and comp.). While in the Cons., F. publ. several pf.-pieces, which were very successful. In 1882 he brought out at Naples a 3-act 'opera comica' Carlotta Clepier, the success of which encouraged serious and assiduous study in retirement for 3 years, when, instead of improving this dramatic firstling, he burned it! Made pianistic tours in 1885–6; settled in Palermo, 1888, where he was prof. in the Cons. until 1892, when he resigned. In 1889, won 1st prize of the Soc. del Quartetto, Milan, for a grand symphony in 4 movements. Travelled in Germany in 1892, visiting Bayreuth; then settled in Milan, giving his entire time to comp.; came to the U. S. in 1904, was a mem. of the faculty of the Cincinnati Coll. of Mus. (1906–8), and settled in New York in 1908; since 1913 cond. of the Ital. Symph. Orch. in N. Y.—Works: The operas Maruzza (Venice, 1894); La Colonia libera (Rome, 1899); Paoletta (Cincinnati, 1910); The Scarlet Letter (not prod.); Fest-Ouvertüre for orch.; pf.-pieces; songs. At present (1916) writing a grand opera in English on an original American subject.

Flo'rimo, Francesco, highly distinguished musician and music-historian; b. S. Giorgio Morgeto, Calabria, Oct. 12, 1800; d. Naples, Dec. 18, 1888. In 1817 he entered the Collegio di Musica at Naples; Furno, Elia, Zingarelli and Tritto were his teachers; and from 1826–51 he was librarian there. He was Bellini's dearest friend; in 1876 he escorted the latter's remains from Père-la-Chaise, Paris, to Catania, and publ. the pamphlet Trasporto delle ceneri di Bellini a Catania; he also founded the 'Bellini Prize,' a competition open only to Ital. composers not over 30.—Writings: Cenno storico sulla scuola musicale di Napoli (Naples, 1869–71, 2 vols.; republ. 1880–84, in 4 vols. as La scuola musicale di Napoli e i suoi Conservatori), a complete mus. hist. of Naples, and of its conservatories, their teachers and pupils, etc.; also Bellini, memorie e lettere (Florence, 1882); Riccardo Wagner ed i Wagneristi (Naples, 1876); an Album Bellini (Naples, 1886), containing opinions by many eminent musicians on Bellini's works; and a Metodo di canto, adopted by the Cons. (F. was also an excellent singing-teacher).—Comps.: Cantatas, church-music, orchestral works; several books of songs in Neapolitan dialect, with Italian text added; etc.

Flo'rio, Caryl (pen-name of William James Robjohn), b. Tavistock, Devon, Nov. 3, 1843. A self-taught musician. Went to New York, 1857, and 1858–60 was the first solo boy-soprano to sing at Trinity Church. Since then he has sung on the stage, and been org. and choirmaster in various churches (Trinity, Newport; Zion, N. Y.; Mount Calvary, Baltimore, etc.; now [1916] at All Souls', Biltmore, N. C.); has been opera-cond. in Havana and New York (Acad. of Mus.); Mus. Dir. Baptist Female Inst., Indianapolis, and Wells Coll., Aurora, N. Y.; cond. of the old Vocal Soc., the Amicitia Orch., and the Palestrina Choir, of N. Y.; at present of the Choral Society, Asheville, N. C. Has also been successful as an actor, critic, player and accompanist.—Works: 3 operettas, Inferno (1871), Les Tours de Mercure (1872), and Suzanne (1876); 2 operas, Gulda (1879), and Uncle Tom (Phila., 1882); (he also wrote the libretti of the operettas, and of Gulda); 3 cantatas, Songs of the Elements (1872), Bridal of Triermain (1886), The Night at Bethlehem; 2 symphonies (G, and C m.), 2 overtures, 1 quintet for pf. and saxophones (a combination original with F.), 2 string-quartets, 2 quartets for saxophones; a pf.-concerto in F m.; 4 sonatas for vln. and pf.; 2 pf.-sonatas; Fairy Pictures (4 pf.-duets); madrigals, part-songs, and songs; church-services, anthems, etc.

Flotow [floh'toh], Friedrich, Freiherr von, opera-composer; b. Teutendorf, Mecklenburg, April 27, 1812; d. Darmstadt, January 24, 1883. After studying composition at Paris, from 1827, under Reicha, the July Revolution (1830) caused him to retreat to Mecklenburg, where he wrote two small works, Pierre et Catherine (privately perf., 1831) and Die Bergknappen (1835). Returning to Paris, he brought out Séraphine (Château Royaumont, 1836), Rob Roy, and Le Naufrage de la Méduse (Paris, Renaissance Th., 1839, his first incontestable success; also given Homburg, 1845, as Die Matrosen). A series of less fortunate ventures followed: La Duchesse de Guise (Paris, 1840); Le Forestier (1840; at Vienna, 1847, as Der Förster; at London, 1848, as Leoline); l'Esclave de Camoëns (1843, at the Opéra-Comique); and the ballet Lady Harriet (Opéra, 1843; afterwards rewritten as Martha). With Alessandro Stradella (Hamburg, 1844; rewritten from a 1-act 'pièce lyrique', Stradella, given in Paris, 1837), his name became familiar in Germany; after l'Âme en peine (Paris, Opéra, 1846; in Ital. as Il Boscajuolo, ossia L'Anima della Tradita) came his most genuinely and widely popular work, Martha (Vienna, 1847). The March Revolution (1848) drove him from Paris; Die Grossfürstin (Berlin Opera, 1850) was fairly succ., and Indra (Berlin, 1853) decidedly so; but Rübezahl (Frankfort, 1854), Hilda (1855), and Albin [Der Müller von Meran] (1856) failed.

From 1856–63, F. acted as intendant of court music at Schwerin; from 1863–8, he was again in Paris. The operettas La Veuve Grapin (Paris, 1859) and Pianella (Paris, 1860), the operas Wintermärchen (Vienna, 1862), Zilda (Paris, 1866), and Am Runenstein (Prague, 1868), and the ballets Die Libelle (Vienna, 1866), and Tannkönig (Darmstadt, 1867), belong to this period; for Schwerin he wrote music to a 'Fackeltanz,' but no operas. He settled on one of his estates near Vienna in 1868, but made frequent visits to Vienna, Paris, and Italy; his last years were spent in Darmstadt. In 1870 his earlier triumphs were renewed with l'Ombre (Paris, Op.-Com., 1870; in London, 1878, as The Phantom). Naïda (Milan, 1873) and Il fior d'Harlem (Turin, 1876) were revised from early works never produced; he rewrote Indra as l'Enchanteresse (Paris and London, 1878; in Ital. as Alma l'incancatrice; in Ger. as Die Hexe); after his death, 3 more operas were performed: Rosellana; Der Graf Saint-Mégrin (Cologne, 1884); and Die Musikanten (Mannheim, 1887). Besides his operas he wrote some chamber-music and songs, which have added nothing to his reputation.—Flotow had a fund of fresh and pleasing melody and rhythmic variety, and a good knowledge of stage-effect; the failure of many of his operas is due to amateurish scoring and shallowness of sentiment. Yet Stradella and Martha still hold the boards, despite Fétis' dismal prophecy: "Mais tout cela sera bientôt oublié."

Flü'gel, Ernst Paul, son of Gustav, born Stettin, Aug. 31, 1844; d. Breslau, Oct. 20, 1912. Taught by his father, and (1862–3) at the R. Inst. for Church-music, Berlin; also at the Akademie. Bülow, Löschhorn, Kiel and Geyer gave him private lessons. He taught in Treptow and Greifswald; in 1867 became organist and teacher at the Gymnasium in Prenzlau; in 1879, cantor at the Bernhardinkirche, Breslau. Here he founded the 'Flügel-Verein,' a singing-society, and wrote for the 'Schlesische Zeitung.' Made Prof. in 1901.—Publ. the 121st Psalm (op. 22); Mahomets Gesang (op. 24); a pf.-trio (op. 25); pf.-pieces (e.g., op. 16, 31, 32); organ-music; songs, and many excellent a capp. choruses.

Flü'gel, Gustav, b. Nienburg-on-Saale, July 2, 1812; d. Stettin, Aug. 15, 1900. From 1827–29 he took private lessons of Fr. Schneider in Dessau, and attended his music-school till 1830. After teaching at Köthen, Magdeburg, Stettin (1840–50), etc., he became teacher of music at Neuwied Seminary, with (1856) the title of Royal Mus. Dir. From 1859 he was cantor and org. of the Schlosskirche, Stettin.—Works: 112 Choralvorspiele f. org.; many other organ-pieces; a concert-overture for orch.; a string-quartet; much pf.-music; sacred and secular part-songs for mixed and male chorus; songs, etc. Was also a contributor to several mus. papers.

Fodor, Joseph, b. 1752 at Venloo; d. Petrograd, Oct. 3, 1828; vln.-pupil of Franz Benda in Berlin; made many successful tours, settled 1787 in Paris; after 1794 he lived in Petrograd; wrote 9 concertos for vln., many duets, quartets and solos.—See Q.-Lex.

Fourdrain [foor-drăn'], Félix, b. 1880; wrote the operas Écho (Paris, 1906), La Légende du point d'Argentan (ib., 1907), La Glaneuse (Lyons, 1909), Vercingétorix (Nice, 1912), Madame Roland (Rouen, 1913), Les contes de Perrault (Paris, 1913).

Fournier [foor-n'yā'], Émile - Eugène - Alix, b. Paris, Oct. 11, 1864; d. Joinville-le-Pont, Sept. 12, 1897. Pupil of Delibes and Dubois at P. Cons.; took 2d Gr. prix de Rome in 1891, and the Prix Cressent in 1892 for the 1-act opera Stratonice (Gr. Opéra, Paris, 1892). Later publ. a number of songs, and finished a 3-act opera Carloman (not prod.).

Fournier, Pierre-Simon, cutter and founder of music-type; b. Paris, Sept. 15, 1712; d. there Oct. 8, 1768. Instead of the lozenge-shaped types in the style of Hautin's (1525), F. introduced round-headed notes, described in his Essai d'un nouveau caractère de fonte . . . (1756); he also publ. a Traité historique sur l'origine et les progrès des caractères de fonte pour l'impression de la musique . . . (Paris, 1765).

Fox, Charlotte (née Milligan), b. Omagh, Ireland, 1860; d. London, Mar. 26, 1916. She was an enthusiastic musical amateur, specially interested in Irish music; in 1904 she founded the 'Irish Folk-Song Soc.'; in her will she left the Bunting MSS. to Belfast Univ.—Publ. Annals of the Irish Harpers (London, 1911).

Fox, Felix, b. Breslau, May 25, 1876. His family moved to Boston in 1881; he entered Leipzig Cons. in 1892 and studied piano with Reinecke and comp. with Jadassohn; won the Helbig Prize with his performance of the Widor concerto in F m.; then studied 2 years with I. Philipp in Paris, where he gave several recitals introducing works by MacDowell; returned to the U.S. in 1897, and after a successful concert-tour settled in Boston as teacher and pianist; in 1898 he established with C. Buonamici a piano-school which enjoys an enviable reputation.

Fox, George, English composer and dram. baritone; b. 1854 (?); has sung with various opera-troupes in London and the provinces, and composed several popular operettas (Robert Macaire, 1887; The Corsican Brothers, 1888; and Nydia, 1892—all at the Crystal Palace), and cantatas (The Jackdaw of Rheims, The Babes in the Wood, The Fair Imogene, Lord Lovel, Winifred Price, Gabriel Grub, John Gilpin, Hamilton Tighe, The Messenger-dove), and songs.

Fraem'cke, August, b. Hamburg, March 23, 1870. Pupil at the Hamburg Cons. of A. Krug, J. von Bernuth (pf.) and H. Riemann (comp.); then at Vienna Cons. of A. Door (pf.), R. and N. Fuchs (comp.); won Beethoven Prize, and, at graduation, the medal of the Ges. der Musikfreunde; début at Hamburg, Nov., 1886; after extended tours through Europe he came to the U. S., where, since 1906, he is joint director with C. Hein of the New York College of Music.

Francesco Cieco [chā'kŏh], or degli Organi. See LANDINO, FRANCESCO.

Franchetti [-ket'tē], Alberto (Baron), b. Turin, Sept. 18, 1860; studied w. Nicolò Coccon and Fortunato Magi; then in Dresden under F. Draeseke, and at the Munich Cons. —Works: 4-act opera ('dram. legend') Asrael (Reggio d'Emilia, 1888; also in La Scala, Milan; New York, 1890); opera Cristoforo Colombo (Genoa, Oct., 1892; Phila., 1913); 3-act opera seria Fior d'Alpe (Milan, La Scala, 1894; mod. succ.); 3-act opera Il Signor di Pourceaugnac (ib., 1897; mod. succ.); Germania (ib., 1902; New York, 1910); La Figlia di Jorio (ib., 1906); Notte di Leggenda (Florence, 1914); also a symphony in E minor.

Franchi-Verney [frăhn'kē-vär-nā'], Giuseppe Ippolito, Conte della Valetta; b. Turin, Feb. 17, 1848; d. Rome, May 15, 1911. In 1874 he gave up his career as a lawyer for music. In 1875 he founded, with others, a Quartet Society (Società della Quartetta); in 1876 he estab. the 'Accademia di Canto corale.' From 1875–7, under the pen-name of Ippolito Valetta, he wrote for the 'Gazzetta del Popolo'; later for 'Il Risorgimento' and other papers. Among his comps. are a 'lyric sketch,' Il Valdese (Turin, 1885), which was well received, and a ballet, Il Mulatto (Naples, 1896; furore). Wrote a sympathetic sketch on Donizetti (Rome, 1897, pp. 15). He was a disciple of Wagner. In 1889 he married Teresina Tua (q.v.).

Franchomme [frăhn-kŏhm'], Auguste, eminent 'cellist; b. Lille, April 10, 1808; d. Paris, Jan. 21, 1884. A pupil of Levasseur and Norblin in Paris Cons. from 1825, taking first prize for 'cello-playing in 1826. Played in the Opéra orch. (1827), and in the Théâtre Italien from 1828. He was intimate with Chopin; established soirées for chamber-music with Hallé and D. Alard; and in 1846 became 'cello-teacher in the Cons.—Works: A concerto, variations, caprices, fantasias, nocturnes, romances, adagios, studies, etc., for 'cello.

Franck [frăhnk], César (-Auguste), b. Liège, Dec. 10, 1822; d. Paris, Nov. 8, 1890. Pupil of Liège Cons. till 1837; then (to 1842) at the Paris Conserv. of Zimmerman (pf.), Leborne (cpt.), and Benoist (org.). In the Cons. he took 1st prize for pf. (1838), 2d prize for comp. (1839), 1st prize for cpt. and fugue (1840) and 2d prize for organ (1841). For some reason not known F.'s father forbade the young man to compete for the Grand prix de Rome, and F. left the Cons. in the spring of 1842, returning to Liège. In 1844 he settled definitely in Paris as a teacher; in 1853 he was app. m. de chap. and in 1858 org. at Ste.-Clotilde, which position he held till his death. In 1872 he succeeded his former teacher Benoist as prof. of org. at the Cons. The influence he exerted here was enormous; in fact, F.'s organ-classes, rather then the regular composition-classes, became the training school of composers, whom the master grounded upon the solid foundations of Bach and Beethoven. Among his pupils were d'Indy, Chausson, de Castillon, Bréville, Bordes, Lekeu, Ropartz, Pierné, Vidal, Chapuis, Marty, and a host of others, who have contributed toward the establishment of a school of modern French instrumental music worthy of consideration. Until the appearance of Franck, the opera dominated, not only the entire musical life of the nation, but even the course of instruction at the Cons. Dissatisfaction with this state of affairs led to revolt on the part of the more serious musicians, who followed the path pointed out by F. In 1894 Guilmant, d'Indy and Bordes founded the now famous 'Schola Cantorum' for the express purpose of perpetuating the master's influence and methods. If the history of French music of the last century is practically the history of French opera, the tables have now been turned, so that for the last quarter of a century the history of modern French instrumental music has been the history of musical progress in France; and it is no exaggeration to say with d'Indy: "In France symphonic music originated with the school of César Franck."—Works: (1) Oratorios: Ruth (1843); La Tour de Babel (1865, not publ.); Rédemption (1871; 2d version 1874); Les Béatitudes (1879); Rebecca (1881).—(2) Operas: Le Valet de Ferme (1852; not publ.); Hulda (finished 1885; prod. Monte Carlo, 1894); Ghisèle (music of the entire work and orchestration of act i completed 1890; orchestration of acts ii, iii, iv by d'Indy, Chausson, Bréville, Rousseau and Coquard: prod. Monte Carlo, 1896).—(3) For orch.: Les Éolides, symph. poem (1876); Le Chasseur maudit, do. (1882); Les Djinns, do. for pf. and orch. (1884); Variations symphoniques for pf. and orch. (1885); Psyché, symph. poem for ch. and orch. (1888); Symphonie in D (1889).—(4) Chamber-music: 4 pf.-trios (F♯m., B♭, B, B m.); Andante quietoso for pf. and vln.; Solo de Piano w. string-quartet (not publ.); Duo pour pf. and vln. concertants (on themes from Dalayrac's Gulistan); Quintet in A m. for pf. and strings (1879); Sonata for piano and vln. (1886); String-quartet in D (1889).—(5) Organ-works: 6 pieces (Fantaisie in C; Grande pièce symphonique; Prélude, Fugue et Variation; Pastorale; Prière; Finale); 3 pieces (Fantaisie in A; Cantabile; Pièce héroïque); Andantino; Trois Chorals (E, B m., A m.); a vol. of 44 Petites Pièces; and 3 vols. of Préludes et Prières by Ch. Alkan.—(6) Sacred music: A Messe solennelle (1858); Messe à trois voix w. organ, harp, vcl. and contrab. (1872); Psaume CL, for chorus, organ and orch. (1888); 4 offertories; 3 motets; several solos and duets.—14 songs (La Procession arr. for orch.); pf.-pieces (4 fantaisies, Prelude, Choral and Fugue, Ballade, etc.); 4 choruses. F. also revised and edited Philidor's Ernelinde, Tom Jones and Le Bûcheron.

Franck, Eduard, b. Breslau, Dec. 5, 1817; d. Berlin, Dec. 1, 1893. Was taught at Breslau; became teacher of pf. at the Cologne Cons.; 1859, at the Bern School of Music, where he was also Musical Director (the degree of Dr. phil. was conferred on him by the Bern Univ.); 1867–78, at the Stern Cons., Berlin; from 1886 at Breslauer's Seminary for Piano-teachers, Berlin.—Works: A symphony (op. 47); pf.-quintet (op. 45); 2 sextets (op. 41, 50); a pf.-concerto (op. 13); 2 pf.-trios; a 'cello-sonata w. pf. (op. 42); 2 vln.-sonatas (op. 19, 23); Duo for 2 pfs. (op. 46); nine pf.-sonatas; etc.

Franck, Johann Wolfgang, b. Hamburg, c. 1641; d. London (?) after 1695. He was a physican and opera-conductor at Hamburg, and produced 14 operas there (1679–86). He publ. sonatas for 2 vlns. and bass; also Geistliche Melodien (1681, 1685, 1700; republ.

1857 by D. H. Engel, with new words by Osterwald).—Cf. F. Zelle, J. W. F., in Prog. of Humboldt-Gym. (Berlin, 1889); 'Music Art,' July, 1912.—See Q.-Lex.

Franck, Joseph, brother of César-Auguste; b. Liège, 1820; d. Paris, 1891. Organist and teacher in Paris; publ. cantatas, masses, motets, an Ode to St. Cecilia (w. orch.), piano-concertos, studies for piano, songs, etc.; also a Manuel de la transposition et de l'accompagnement du plain-chant; Traité d'harmonie; L'art d'accompagner le plain-chant; and a Nouvelle méthode de piano facile.

Franck, Melchior, b. Zittau, c. 1573; d. Koburg, June 1, 1639, as court Kapellm. (since 1603). Prolific composer of sacred and secular vocal music, who exerted considerable influence on his contemporaries. Although an excellent contrapuntist, he seems to favor the soprano unduly as compared with the other voices, and thus, indirectly, helped toward the supremacy of the solo melody as cultivated by the Italian composers. A selection from his instrl. works was publ. by F. Bölsche in vol. xvi of 'Dkm. deutscher Tonkunst.' Vol. xvii of the 'Monatshefte für Musikgeschichte' contains a careful description of his printed works, also of MSS. preserved in public libraries. Aloys Obrist publ. Melchior Franck (Berlin, 1892).—See Q.-Lex.

Franck'enstein, Clemens, Freiherr von, b. Wiesentheid, Lower Franconia, July 14, 1875. While pursuing his academic course he studied music with L. Thuille in Munich, and later with J. Knorr at the Frankfort Cons.; 1902–7, as cond. in London; then cond. of the court opera at Wiesbaden and the Royal Opera at Berlin; 1912, mus. intendant at court opera in Munich; since 1914, 'General-intendant'; composer of the operas Griseldis (Troppau, 1898), Fortunatus (Pest, 1909), Rahab (Hamburg, 1911); has also written orchestral works and songs.

Franco of Cologne, b. Dortmund, prior of the Benedictine Abbey at Cologne in 1190, author of a treatise on music, Compendium de discantu, printed in Gerbert, 'Scriptores,' (iii) and Coussemaker, 'Scriptores' (i). His theory of intervals marks considerable progress as compared with the theories of his namesake, Franco of Paris.—Cf. H. Riemann, Geschichte der Musiktheorie, p. 114 et seq. (Leipzig, 1898).

Franco of Paris. According to the testimony of an anonymous writer quoted by Coussemaker in 'Scriptores' (i) there must have been two musicians of that name in Paris during the 13th century, both m. de chap. at Notre-Dame (one succeeding the other). The elder of the two is the author of Ars cantus mensurabilis, reprinted by Gerbert in 'Scriptores' (iii) and Coussemaker.—Cf. O. v. Koller, Versuch einer Rekonstruktion der Notenbeispiele zum 11. Kapitel von Francos 'Ars cantus mensurabilis' in 'Vschr. f. M.-W.' (vol. i, p. 242 et seq.).

Francœur [frähn-kör'], François, violinist; b. Paris, Sept. 28, 1698; d. there Aug. 6, 1787. Entered the Opéra orch. in 1710; he became, successively, chamber-musician to the King, one of the '24 violons du roi' (1730), chamber-composer (1732), opera-inspector (conjointly with François Rebel, his inseparable friend), director of the Opéra (1751), and superintendent of the King's music (1760).—Works: 2 books of violin-sonatas; with Rebel, he prod. 10 operas.—See Q.-Lex.

Francœur, Louis-Joseph, violinist, nephew of François; b. Paris, Oct. 8, 1738; d. there March 10, 1804. Member of the Opéra orch.; 1764 assistant, 1767 first cond.; later dir. of the Opéra for a short time.—Works: Ismène et Lindor, 1-act opera (Opéra, 1766); other operas in MS. Also publ. Diapason général de tous les instrs. à vent . . . (1772); the MS. of an Essai historique sur l'établissement de l'opéra en France is preserved in the library of the Paris Opéra.—See Q.-Lex.

Frank, Ernst, b. Munich, Feb. 7, 1847; d. insane at Oberdöbling, n. Vienna, Aug. 17, 1889. Pupil of Mortier de Fontaine (pf.) and Fr. Lachner (comp.); he became court organist in Munich, and cond. of rehearsals at the opera; in 1868, Kapellm. at Würzburg; 1869, chorus-master at the court opera, Vienna, where he also cond. the Singakademie and the Akademischer Gesangverein. From 1872–7 he was court Kapellm. at Mannheim; here he brought out (for the first time) Götz's Der Widerspenstigen Zähmung (1874) and Francesca da Rimini (1877; completed by Frank himself). In 1877, Otto Devrient, the new intendant of the Frankfort Th., had F. app. Kapellm. there; on D.'s dismissal in 1879 he resigned, but that same year was called to Hanover to succeed v. Bülow as opera-Kapellm., as which he acted till 1887.—Works: 3 operas, Adam de la Halle (Karlsruhe, 1880), Hero (Berlin, 1884), and Der Sturm (Hanover, 1887; in 3 acts, after Shakespeare's Tempest); also publ. many delightful songs.

Fran'kenberger, Heinrich, b. Wümbach, Schwarzburg-Sondershausen, Aug. 20, 1824; d. Sondershausen, Nov. 22, 1885. Dramatic comp., pupil of Plaidy, Becker, and Hauptmann in Leipzig Cons. In 1847, violinist in the court orch., Sondershausen; later asst.-Kapellm.—3 operas, Die Hochzeit zu Venedig (1847), Vineta (1851), and Der Günstling (1863), all at Sondershausen; also piano-pieces, songs, etc.—Wrote Anleitung zur Instrumentirung, a Harmonielehre, an Orgelschule, and a Choralbuch.

Franklin, Benjamin, b. Boston, Mass., Jan. 17, 1706; d. Philadelphia, April 17, 1790. He invented the Harmonica ('musical glasses') and wrote entertainingly on Scotch music, on the defects of [then] modern music, and other topics.—Cf. O. G. Sonneck, 'Suum cuique: Essays in Music' (1916).

Franko, Sam, b. New Orleans, Jan. 20, 1857. He began to study the violin with Blecha at Breslau; pupil of de Ahna in Berlin in 1867 and again in 1870; of Joachim at the Kgl. Hochschule, 1876–8; at the same time he studied comp. with Prof. A. Holländer; from 1878–80 he studied in Paris with Vieuxtemps. Even while studying he appeared frequently in concerts; at the age of 10 he played the Mendelssohn concerto with orch. in Berlin, and two years later at Steinway Hall in New York (1869); returned to the U. S. in 1880, became a member of the Theo. Thomas Orchestra, and was concert-master from 1884–91; in 1883 he made a concert-tour of the U. S. and Canada as soloist with the Mendelssohn Quintette Club of Boston. In order to prove that the then existing prejudice against native orchestral players was unfounded, he organized in 1894 the Amer. Symphony Orchestra of 65 performers; this orchestra he later used for his 'Concerts of Old Music' (1900–9), at which works of the 17th and 18th centuries were produced, many for the first time in America; from 1893–1901 he gave chamber-music concerts at the Aschenbrödel Club in New York, which ranked among the important events of the season. In 1910 he went to Berlin as teacher of the advanced vln.-class and orchl. class at Stern's Cons.; there he continued, with marked success, his Concerts of Old Music; in 1915 he returned to New York, where he in now (1916) living as teacher. The Duke of Schwarzburg-Sondershausen conferred upon him the Gold Medal for Arts and Sciences. He has publ. many arrangements and transcriptions for vln. (including a considerable number of old works).

Franz, Robert, song-composer; b. Halle, June 28, 1815; d. there Oct. 24, 1892. (His family-name, Knauth, was changed by royal permission in 1847.) His parents, after fruitless endeavors to make him abandon the study of music, permitted him to finish his musical education at Dessau, 1835–7, under Fr. Schneider. Returning to Halle, and unable to find a suitable position, or even a publisher for his compositions, he devoted six years to diligent study of Bach, Handel, Beethoven, Schubert, etc. At length, in 1843, his first set of 12 songs appeared, warmly praised by Schumann, Liszt, Mendelssohn, and others; he soon received the appointment of organist at the Ulrichskirche, and later became cond. of the Singakademie, and musical director at Halle Univ., which conferred on him the title of Mus. Doc. in 1861. In 1868, deafness, and a complication of nervous disorders, forced him to give up all his positions; the meagre income from his compositions was supplemented by the generosity of his fellow-artists in Germany (Frau Helene Magnus, Joachim, Liszt, et al.) and America (Otto Dresel, S. B. Schlesinger, B. J. Lang), who gave a series of concerts for his benefit, in 1872, realizing some $25,000.—Franz is known as a song-composer par excellence, and published 350 songs remarkable for the perfect fitness and exquisite finish of the musical setting, and rivalling Schubert's in beauty of melody, and Schumann's in romantic expression. (His wife Marie, née Hinrichs [1828–91], also published several attractive songs.) Other works: The 117th Psalm for 8-part (double) ch. a cappella; a Kyrie for 4-part chorus a capp. and soli; a Liturgy for Evang. service; 6 chorals, 6 part-songs for mixed ch., and 6 do. for male ch.—His revised arrangements of many works by Bach and Handel (by BACH: St. Matthew Passion, Funeral Ode, Magnificat, 10 cantatas, Christmas Oratorio, arias, duets, etc.; by HANDEL: The Messiah, Jubilate in D, L'Allegro, il Penseroso, ed il Moderato, and many arias, etc.) are classical. He wrote Mitteilungen über J. S. Bachs Magnificat (1863) and Über Bearbeitungen älterer Tonwerke, namentlich Bachscher und Händelscher Vokalwerke (1871). Both were republ. by R. Bethge as Ges. Schriften über die Wiederbelebung Bachscher und Händelscher Werke (Leipzig, 1910).

Fränzl, Ferdinand, violinist, son and pupil of Ignaz; b. Schwetzingen, Palatinate, May 24, 1770; d. Mannheim, Nov. 19, 1833. Entered the Mannheim court orch. in 1782; from 1784 made long tours with his father, and took further lessons of Pleyel and Richter (Strassburg), and Padre Mattei (Bologna); in 1806 he succeeded Cannabich as court Kapellm. at Munich, retiring on a pension in 1827.—Works: 6 operas, none of which is specially noteworthy; much excellent violin-music (8 concertos, a double-concerto for 2 vlns., 4 concertinos); symphonies, overtures, 9 string-quartets, 6 string-trios; songs, etc.—See Q.-Lex.

Fränzl, Ignaz, violinist; b. Mannheim, June 3, 1736; d. there 1811. In 1750 he joined the Mannheim court orch., of which he became leader and, in due course, Kapellmeister (1790–1803). From 1784 he made several artistic tours with his son.—Publ. symphonies, violin-concertos, quartets, trios, etc.—See Q.-Lex.

Frederick II (the Great), of Prussia; b. Berlin, Jan. 24, 1712; d. Potsdam (Sans Souci), Aug. 17, 1786. He was a flute-player of considerable skill, and an amateur composer [an opera, Il re pastore (Berlin, 1747); overture to Acis and Galathea; soli for flute; arias, and marches]. Selected comps. are publ. by Br. & H., and in vol. xx of 'Musik am preussischen Hofe.'—Cf. K. F. Müller, Friedrich der Grosse als Kenner und Dilettant auf dem Gebiete der Tonkunst (Potsdam, 1847); W. Kothe, Friedrich der Grosse als Musiker (Leipzig, 1869); G. Förster (1847).—See Q.-Lex. (Also see C. Ph. E. Bach, Quantz, and Graun.)

Frédérix, Gustave, b. Liège, 1834; died Brussels, Aug. (?), 1894. Celebrated critical writer, dramatic, musical, literary. Wrote for the 'Indépendance belge' from 1859; elected corr. member of R. Belg. Acad. in 1885; full member, 1889. A selection from his writings was publ. after his death by E. Deschanels under the title: Trente ans de critique. I. Études littéraires. II. Études dramatiques (1900).

Frei'berg, Otto, b. Naumburg, April 26, 1846; studied 1860–3 at Leipzig Cons.; from 1865, violinist in the court orch. at Karlsruhe. After further study with Vincenz Lachner, he was app. musical director at Marburg Univ. in 1880; in 1887, mus. director and asst.-professor of music at Göttingen.

Fremstad, Olive, famous dram. soprano; b. Stockholm, c. 1870. She received her first instruction in Christiania, and her progress on the piano was such that at the age of 10 she appeared in public; when she was 12 her parents settled in Minneapolis; she continued her studies, and at the age of 16 began to give piano-lessons and sing in church-choirs; in 1890 she came to New York as a piano-teacher; in exchange for playing accompaniments for his vocal pupils E. F. Bristol cultivated her voice, and she held several church positions; in 1892 she sang for the first time with orch. under C. Zerrahn in Boston. In 1893 she went to Berlin, and after two years of study with Lilli Lehmann made her operatic début in Cologne as Azucena in Il Trovatore (1895); in the Ring performances at Bayreuth during the summer of 1896 she sang Flosshilde; 1897–1900 she was a regular member of the Cologne opera, but appeared as star in Vienna, Amsterdam, Antwerp and London (Cov. G.); 1900–3 at the court opera in Munich, where she scored extraordinary success as Carmen. Her Amer. début occurred at the M. O. H., Nov. 25, 1903, as Sieglinde. The tumultuous demonstration with which she was greeted then was but the beginning of her uninterrupted triumphs through 11 consecutive seasons (till 1914) as one of the brightest stars of the famous institution; her interpretations of all the great Wagner rôles (including Kundry) have never been surpassed. She also sang at the Wagner Festivals at the Prinz-Regenten-Theater, Munich. After 1914 she made extended concert-tours, securely establishing her reputation as one of the world's great lieder-singers. At the New York and Paris premières of Salome she created the title-rôle, and for the latter achievement was decorated by the French Government. The unusual compass of her voice (f-c^3) enables her to sing both soprano and alto rôles; in fact, she began her career as contralto. Her favorite rôles are Isolde and Brünnhilde. In 1906 she married Mr. Edson Sutphen of New York; divorced 1911. A Freschi [fres'kē], Giovanni Domenico, b. Vicenza, 1640; d. there 1690, as m. di capp. at the cathedral. He produced 13 operas during a long sojourn in Venice (1677–85); 2 oratorios, Giuditta and Miracolo del mago (1680); masses a 5–6, and psalms a 2–6.—See Q.-Lex.

Frescobal'di, Girolamo, famous organist and comp.; b. Ferrara, 1583 (baptized Sept. 9); buried at Rome, March 2, 1644. After studying under Luzzasco Luzzaschi at Ferrara, he travelled to Flanders; was probably organist at Mechlin in 1607, and publ. his first work, a collection of 5-part madrigals, at Antwerp, 1608 (printed by Phalèse). In 1608, he was app. organist of St. Peter's, at Rome, succeeding Ercole Pasquini; his fame was already such that 30,000 people are said to have attended his first performance. He held this post until death, leaving Rome only once, from 1628–33, during which period he was court org. at Florence, and was represented in Rome by a deputy. From 1637–41, Froberger, the Viennese court-org., sojourned in Rome as a pupil of Frescobaldi, the greatest organist of the first half of the 17th century. As a composer, too, F. occupies a very prominent place; unrivalled as a player, he introduced daring innovations in harmony (foreshadowing our modern key-system), new developments in fugal form, and improvements in notation.—Publ. works: Fantasie a 2, 3, e 4 (Milan, 1608, Book I); Ricercari e canzoni francesi (Rome, 1615); Toccate e partite d'intavolatura di cembalo (Rome, 1615); Il 2° libro di toccate, canzoni, versi d'inni, magnificat, gagliarde, correnti ed altre partite d'intav. di cembalo ed organo (Rome, 1616); Capricci sopra diversi soggetti (Rome, 1624); Arie musicali a più voci (Florence, 1630); etc., etc.—Haberl publ. a selection of F.'s organ-pieces, prefaced by a biogr. sketch; smaller colls. were publ. by B. Litzau, E. Pauer (12 toccatas) and L. Torchi in vol. iii of 'L'arte musicale' (20 pieces).—Cf. H. A. Cametti, F. in Roma ('Riv. M. I.,' 1908, p. 701); A. Berenzi, Per G. F. nel terzo centenario (Cremona, 1908); M. Bennati, Ferrara a G. F. (Ferrara, 1908).—See Q.-Lex.

Freudenberg [froi'-], Wilhelm, opera-composer; b. Raubacher Hütte, n. Neuwied, Prussia, March 11, 1838. He st. in Leipzig 1858–61; held various positions as theatre Kapellm., and went to Wiesbaden, 1865, as cond. of the Cecilia Singing-Society and the 'Synagogenverein.' Here, in 1870, he founded a Cons., and cond. the Singakademie till 1886, when he established, with Karl Mengewein, a school for music at Berlin; but soon after went as opera-conductor to Augsburg and (1889) Ratisbon; since 1905 choir-director at Kaiser Wilh.-Gedächtniskirche, Berlin.—Operas: Die Pfahlbauer (Mayence, 1877; burlesque); Die Nebenbuhler (Wiesbaden, 1879; romantic); Kleopatra (Magdeburg, 1882); Die Mühle im Wisperthale (Magdeburg, 1883; comic); Der St. Katharinentag (Augsburg, 1889; rom.-comic, 3 acts); Marino Faliero (Ratisbon, 1889); Die Johannisnacht (Vienna, 1896); Das Jahrmarktsfest zu Plundersweilern (Bremen, 1908); in MS. are Die Klause von Sulmenbach and Das Mädchen von Treppi.—Also a symph. poem, Ein Tag in Sorrento; incid. music to Romeo and Juliet; overture Durch Dunkel zum Licht; Motetten des K. Wilh.-Gedächtniskirchenchors (his own compositions); pf.-pieces; songs; also wrote Lehre von den Intervallen.

Frey, Adolf, b. Landau, Palatinate, April 4, 1865. Pupil of Mme. Schumann, Dr. Faiszt and Brahms; 1887–93, musician to Prince Alexander Friedrich of Hesse; since 1893 prof. of music at Syracuse University.

Frezzoli'ni, Erminia, dramatic soprano; b. Orvieto, 1818; d. Paris, Nov. 5, 1884. Pupil of Ronconi (father) and Garcia; then of N. Tacchinardi at Florence, where she made her début (1838) in Bellini's Beatrice di Tenda. In that year she sang at Siena and Ferrara; in 1839 at Pisa, Reggio, Perugia and Bologna; in 1840 at La Scala, Milan, she had brilliant success in Lucrezia Borgia; thence to Vienna, and back to Turin, where she married Poggi, a tenor. At Milan, in 1843, she created the principal rôle in I Lombardi, written for her by Verdi; 1848–50, she was eng. at Petrograd; her visits to London (1842, '50) and Paris (1853) were not particularly successful; but on her Amer. tour (1857–8) she was liberally applauded; her voice, however, was wrecked by striving after 'realistic' effects. That practically closed her stage-career.

Friberth [frē'bĕrt], Karl, b. Wullersdorf, Lower Austria, June 7, 1736; d. Vienna, Aug. 6, 1816. Pupil of Bono and Gassmann, Vienna. Tenor singer 1759–76 in the choir of Prince Esterházy at Eisenstadt; then Kapellm. of the Jesuits' and Minorites' churches at Vienna; in 1796 received Order of the Golden Spur from the Pope.—Works: 9 masses, a Requiem, a Stabat Mater, graduals, offertories, and 5 motets.

Frick (or Frike), Philipp Joseph, born n. Würzburg, May 27, 1740; d. London, June 15, 1798. Organist to the Margrave of Baden; a remarkable pianist and travelling performer on Franklin's harmonica, he settled 1780 in London, where his concerts were very successful.—Published several mediocre theoretical works; also piano-pieces.

Fricke, August Gottfried Ludwig, bass opera-singer; b. Brunswick, March 24, 1829; d. Berlin, June 27, 1894. Pupil of Meinhardt, Brunswick, where his début as Sarastro (Magic Flute) took place in 1851; sang at Bremen, Königsberg, Stettin, and (1856–86) first bass rôles at the Berlin court opera, succeeding Zschiesche.

Frick'enhaus, Fanny (née Evans), pianist; b. Cheltenham, Engl., June 7, 1849. Pupil of G. Mount; later of Aug. Dupont (Brussels Cons.) and Wm. Bohrer. Since 1879, succ. concert-player in London, etc.; in 1880 she played Götz's pf.-concerto for the first time in London. From 1884 she gave chamber-concerts at Prince's Hall, with Jos. Ludwig.

Fried'berg, Karl, excellent pianist; b. Bingen, Sept. 18, 1872. Pupil of the Frankfort Cons., where his teachers were J. Kwast, J. Knorr and Clara Schumann (pf.) and B. Scholz and E. Humperdinck (comp.); début at Vienna, 1892; taught piano at the Frankfort Cons., 1893–1904; then prof. at the Cologne Cons., 1904–14; liberal leave of absence enabled him to undertake concert-tours throughout Europe, which established his reputation as an artist of sterling merit; met with great success on his first tour of the U. S. in 1914; since 1916 prof. of pf. at the Inst. of Mus. Art, New York; Chev. Legion of Honor (Spain) and 'Kgl. Prof.'

Fried [frēd], Oskar, b. Berlin, Aug. 10, 1871. Pupil of Humperdinck in Frankfort and Ph. Scharwenka in Berlin; was for many years a horn-player in various orchs. until the performance of his choral work w. orch., Das trunkene Lied, at Berlin in 1904 attracted much attention; 1904–10 cond. of the 'Sternscher Gesangverein'; since 1907 cond. of the 'Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde' in Berlin; in 1910 began a series of orchl. concerts, offering nothing but novelties. In Germany he is regarded as one of the foremost conductors; his compositions, exhibiting decidedly modern tendencies, have found strong supporters and equally strong opponents.—Works: Choral w. orch., Das trunkene Lied, op. 11; Erntelied, op. 15; Verklärte Nacht, op. 9, for solo voices and orch.; Andante u. Scherzo, op. 2, for wind-instrs., 2 harps and kettledrums; Präludium u. Doppelfuge, op. 10, for string-orch.; choruses for fem. voices, op. 12, 14; songs, op. 1, 3, 4, 5, 7, 8, 13.—Cf. P. Bekker, O. F. (Berlin, 1907); P. Stefan, O. F. (ib., 1911).

Friedenthal [frē'den-tahl], Albert, b. Bromberg, Sept. 25, 1862. Pupil there of F. Agath and W. Steinbrunn, and of Th. Kullak in Berlin; has successfully toured all civilized countries as a pianist; has publ. a valuable book: Musik, Tanz und Dichtung bei den Kreolen Amerikas (Berlin, 1911).

Fried'heim, Arthur, b. (of German parents) Petrograd, Oct. 26, 1859. Pupil of Rubinstein for one year, and of Liszt for 8 years. A virtuoso of the first rank, especially as an interpreter of Liszt; and a gifted conductor. He made his first American tour in 1891, meeting with pronounced success; equally successful on several subsequent tours; taught in Chicago Coll. of Music, 1897; lived some years in N. Y.; then in London; 1908 in Munich; since 1915 again in N. Y. Comp. concerto for piano and orch. (op. 1, B♭ maj.), several pieces for pf., and songs. An opera, Die Tänzerin, was produced at Karlsruhe in 1897.

Fried'länder, Max, eminent musicologist; b. Brieg, Silesia, Oct. 12, 1852. Pupil of Manuel Garcia (London) and Stockhausen (Frankfort). Début as concert-singer (bass) 1880, at the London Monday Pop. Concerts; lived in Frankfort 1881–3, since then in Berlin. There he became interested in historical studies and research; took a course at the Univ. under Spitta, and obtained the degree of Ph.D. at Rostock with the thesis Beiträge zur Biographie Franz Schuberts (1887); he abandoned the concert-stage, established himself as 'Privatdozent' at Berlin Univ. in 1894, became full professor and academic mus.-director in 1903, 'Geheimer Regierungsrat' in 1908; in 1911 he was Exchange-Prof. at Harvard Univ., lectured at many Amer. universities, and received the degree of LL.D. from the Univ. of Wisconsin. While collecting materials for an exhaustive Schubert biogr. he discovered the MSS. of more than 100 lost songs of that master, which were publ. for the first time in F.'s complete edition of Schubert's songs (Ed. Peters, 7 vols.). Together with Joh. Bolte and Joh. Meier he has for years been searching every corner of the German Empire in quest of folk-songs still to be found among the people; some of these he publ. in a volume under the title 100 Deutsche Volkslieder (1885). F. was a member of the commission that publ. the monumental Volksliederbuch für Männerchor (1906), and in 1912 succeeded von Liliencron as chairman of the same commission preparing a Volksliederbuch für gemischten Chor; has also edited new editions of the songs of Schumann and Mendelssohn, of Beethoven's Scotch Songs, and a critically revised Kommersbuch; besides numerous valuable essays (in 'Goethe-Jahrbuch,' 'Vschr. für M.-W.,' etc.), he has published the books Goethes Gedichte in der Musik (1896), Gedichte von Goethe in Kompositionen seiner Zeitgenossen (1896), Das Deutsche Lied im 18. Jahrhundert (2 vols., 1902).

Fried'mann, Ignaz, b. Podgorze, near Cracow, Feb. 14, 1882. Pupil of his father (pf.), Riemann (comp.) in Leipzig, Adler (hist.) and Leschetizky (pf.) in Vienna; very succ. pianistic tours of Europe since 1905; especially fine as an interpreter of Chopin, of whose works he prepared a new ed. in 12 vols. (Breitkopf & Härtel); has written pf.-pieces of merit (Passacaglia, op. 44; Thème varié, op. 30; Präludien, op. 48, etc.); also pieces for vcl. and piano.

Fried'rich II (der Grosse). See FREDERICK.

Fries [frēs], Wulf (Christian Julius), b. Garbeck, Holstein, Ger., Jan. 10, 1825; d. Roxbury, Mass., April 29, 1902. Self-taught violoncellist; played in the Bergen th.-orch. from 1842, and at Ole Bull's concerts. Went to Boston, Mass., in 1847; in 1849 was founded [A. Fries (1st vln.), Gerloff (2d vln.), Ed. Lehmann (1st viola), Oscar Greiner (2d viola), and W. Fries ('cello)] the Mendelssohn Quintette Club, to which he belonged for 23 years; later a member of the Beethoven Q. Club. F. also figured in the Mus. Fund Society, and the Harvard Musical; played in trios with Rubinstein, and until 1901 took part in frequent concerts all over the New England States, and gave many lessons. As a thorough musician and fine concert-'cellist, he exercised a highly beneficial influence.

Frike. See FRICK, P. J.

Friml, Rudolf, b. Prague, Dec. 7, 1881. Pupil of Prague Cons.; came to the U. S. in 1901 as accompanist to Kubelik, and again in 1906; at the conclusion of that tour he appeared with success as a concert-pianist in recitals and w. orch.; played his pf.-concerto with the N. Y. Symph. Orch.; now (1916) living in New York as composer. His works show a fertile, spontaneous invention, excellent workmanship and careful avoidance of any modern extravagances; the themes, while frankly melodious and appealing to the refined popular taste, possess a distinction that raises them far above the level of the ordinary; another quality largely contributing to the unusual success of F.'s works is a fluent, unaffected style.—Works: The comic operas The Firefly (Syracuse, Oct. 14, 1912; very succ.), High Jinks (ib., Nov. 3, 1913; very succ.), Katinka (Morristown, N. J., Dec. 2, 1915; succ.); mus. comedy You're in Love (New Haven, 1916); his numerous pf.-comps. include op. 12, Concert-waltz; op. 29, Bohemian Dance; op. 37, Staccato Étude; op. 44, Étude in F; op. 57, California Suite; op. 60, Bohemian Suite; op. 66, Legende; op. 67, Drifting; op. 74, Aquarellen; op. 79, 5 Mood-Pictures; op. 80, Pastoral Scenes. For pf. and vln.: Op. 35, Suite mignonne; op. 50, Berceuse; op. 63, Dumka; op. 64, O Vermeland, paraphrase on Swedish folk-songs; op. 65, Bygone Days, (paraphrase on Bohemian folk-songs); etc.; also pieces for vcl. and piano, and songs.

Frim'mel, Theodor von, b. Amstetten, Lower Austria, Dec. 15, 1853. Student of medicine and M.D. (Vienna). 'Kustos-Adjunct' (asst.-custodian) of the Imperial Museum, Vienna, from 1884–93; now (1916) dir. of the art-gallery of Count Schönborn-Wiesentheid and Dozent of hist. of art at the Athenäum in Vienna; since 1908 editor of the 'Beethoven-Jahrbuch,' which since 1911 appears as 'Beethoven-Forschung.' He has written several important books on the plastic arts. His writings about music are Beethoven und Goethe (1883); Neue Beethoveniana (1887, with 9 authentic likenesses of B.; 2d enlarged ed., 1889); Danhauser u. Beethoven (1892); Beethovens Wohnungen in Wien (1894); Ritratti e caricature di B. ('Riv. M. I.', 1897); Beethoven, in 'Berühmte Musiker' (1901; 4th ed. 1912); Beethoven-Studien: I. B.'s äussere Erscheinung (1905), II. Bausteine zu einer Lebensgeschichte des Meisters (1906).

Frischen, Josef, b. Garzweiler, Palatinate, July 6, 1863. Pupil at the Cologne Cons. (1884–8) of F. Wüllner and G. Jensen; munic. music-director in Lucerne, 1888–92; since 1892 cond. of the Musikakademie and Philh. Concerts in Hanover; also cond. of the Lehrer-Gesangverein in Brunswick; R. Musikdir.—Choral works w. orch.: Athenischer Frühlingsreigen, Vineta, Grenzen der Menschheit; for orch. Rheinisches Scherzo (op. 14), Herbstnacht (op. 12); a string-quartet; male choruses.

Friskin, James, b. Glasgow, March 3, 1886. Entered R. C. M. in 1900 and st. with E. Dannreuther and F. Hartvigson (pf.) and Sir C. V. Stanford (comp.); has become favorably known through a Phantasy-Trio; a string-quartet; a string-quintet; a vcl.-sonata; an orchl. suite; and motets.

Frit'ze, Wilhelm, pianist; b. Bremen, Feb. 17, 1842; d. Stuttgart, Oct. 7, 1881. Pupil of Sobolewski, in Bremen; of Leipzig Cons.; and of Bülow and Weitzmann, Berlin. After pianistic tours in France and Italy, he lived in Glogau a year (1866), then in Liegnitz (1867–77) as cond. of the Singakademie; then studied in Berlin under Kiel, and went to Stuttgart in 1879.—Works: 2 oratorios, Fingal and David; a symphony, Die Jahreszeiten; music to Faust; a vln.-concerto; a pf.-concerto; a Sanctus, Benedictus, and Agnus Dei, for soli, mixed ch., and orch.; pf.-sonatas and other pieces; songs, part-songs, etc.

Fritzsch, Ernst Wilhelm, b. Lützen, Aug. 24, 1840; d. Leipzig, Aug. 14, 1902. Pupil (1857–62) of Leipzig Cons.; lived several years in Bern, and in 1866 took over the music-publg. firm of Bromnitz in Leipzig, carried on under his own name until 1903, then acquired by C. F. W. Siegel. A warm advocate of progress in music, and of Wagner's tendencies in particular, he publ. the latter's Gesammelte Schriften, edited the radical 'Musikalisches Wochenblatt' from 1870, and in 1875 started the 'Musikalische Hausblätter.' By publishing the works of rising composers (Rheinberger, Thieriot, Svendsen, Grieg, Cornelius, v. Herzogenberg, Riemenschneider, etc.), he very practically promoted modern musical development. He was an excellent musician, and for many years a member of the Gewandhaus Orch.

Fro'berger, Johann Jakob, the most famous German organist of the 17th cent.; b. Halle (?), 1605 (?); d. Héricourt, Haute-Saône, France, May 7, 1667. It seems probable that the Swedish ambassador, passing through Halle (1620 ?), was struck by the beauty of F.'s voice, and induced the latter to go with him to Vienna, where he entered the Imperial choir. It is uncertain who his teacher was; but from Jan. 1 to Sept. 30, 1637, he was court organist at Vienna, then receiving the sum of 200 florins to enable him to study in Rome (1637–41) under Frescobaldi. He again held the same post at Vienna from 1641–45, and from 1653–7; after this he made long concert-tours (to Paris and London), and spent his last years in the service of the Duchesse Sybille of Württemberg at her château near Héricourt. Although two collections of toccate, canzoni and partite were publ. long after his death (1693 and '96, resp.), there is internal evidence that the majority of these works were written before 1650. Thus F. must be regarded as the real creator of the pf.-suite, as well as the master who definitely fixed the order of movements in the suite (Allemande, Courante, Sarabande, Gigue).—Organ-works: Toccatas, fantasias, canzoni, fugues, etc., of which 3 MS. vols. are in the Vienna Library; in Berlin are 2 printed vols., Diverse ingegnosissime, rarissime, et non maj più viste curiose partite di toccate, canzoni, ricercari, capricci, etc. (1693; reprinted at Mayence in 1695), and Diverse curiose e rare partite musicali, etc. (1696); also a vol. of Suites de clavecin (n. d.).—A complete ed. of F.'s works was publ. by G. Adler in 'Dkm. d. Tonk. in Österreich' (vols. iv, 1; vi, 2; x, 2). A monograph on F. was publ. by Fr. Beier in Waldersee's 'Sammlung musikalischer Vorträge' (Nos. 59 and 60); and 2 letters from Duchesse Sybille to Chr. Huygens concerning him were publ. by E. Schebek (Prague, 1874). A MS. preface to Fuchs' thematic catalogue of Froberger's works (Berlin Library) also throws some light on his career.

Frö'(h)lich, Joseph, b. Würzburg, May 28, 1780; d. there Jan. 5, 1862. He founded the students' 'Akademische Bande' for vocal and instrl. music, which became the 'Akademisches Musikinstitut' in 1804, out of which grew, later, the present Royal School of Music. He was director of the Institute till 1858; and also Mus. Dir. of the University.—Publ. a biography of Abbé Vogler; a Musiklehre mit Anweisungen fürs Spiel aller gebräuchlichen Instrumente (in 4 parts); separate Methods for all instruments; a Vocal Method; and numerous essays in various papers.—Comp. an opera, Scipio; masses, a Requiem, symphonies, part-songs, songs.

Fromm, Andreas, 1649-51 cantor and prof. at the Pädagogium in Stettin; wrote the first German oratorio, Die Parabel von dem reichen Mann und dem armen Lazarus (1649); a Dialogus Pentecostalis is also preserved.—Cf. R. Schwartz, Das erste deutsche Oratorium, in 'Jahrb. der Musikbibl. Peters' (1899).

Fromm, Emil, b. Spremberg, Niederlausitz, Jan. 29, 1835; pupil of Aug. Wilh. Bach, Grell, and Schneider at the R. Inst. for Church-music in Berlin. Cantor in Kottbus, 1859; Royal Mus. Dir. in 1866; organist at Flensburg, 1869. Founder and cond. of the Flensburg Singverein.—Works: 2 Passion Cantatas; an oratorio, Die Kreuzigung des Herrn; male choruses, organ-music, etc.

Fronti'ni, F. Paolo, b. Catania, Aug. 6, 1860; pupil of P. Platania at Palermo, and Lauro Rossi at Naples. Dramatic comp.; at present Dir. of the Catania Music Inst.—Operas: Nella (Catania, 1881); 3-act opera-seria Malìa (Bologna, 1893; succ.); Il Falconiere (Catania, 1899); Aleramo (not perf.). Also the oratorio Sansone (1882), and numerous songs and pf.-pieces. Ricordi publ. his collection of Canti popolari siciliani.

Frosch'auer, Johann, an Augsburg printer (end of 15th century), is believed to have been the first to print music with movable types in Michael Keinspeck's 'Lilium musicae planae,' 1498.

Frost, Charles Joseph, b. Westbury-on-Trym, Engl., June 20, 1848; pupil of his father (org. at Tewkesbury), and of Geo. Cooper, Sir John Goss, and Steggall. From 1865 he held various appointments as org., the last being at St. Peter's, Brockley (1884); here he founded a choral society in 1885. In 1877, Mus. Bac.; in 1882, Mus. Doc., Cantab.; since 1880, also prof. of organ at the Guildhall S. of Mus. Has given many concerts, recitals and lectures.—Works: By the Waters of Babylon, cantata (1876); Nathan's Parable, oratorio (1878); Harvest Cantata (1880); Psalms 92 and 137, for soli, ch. and organ; Festival Te Deum; church-music; a symphony; organ-music (55 hymn-tune voluntaries, 40 preludes, 27 original pieces, a sonata in A); harmonium-music; songs, part-songs.

Frost, Henry Frederick, b. London, Mar. 15, 1848; d. there May 3, 1901. In 1856 chorister at St. George's chapel, Windsor, assisting at all the royal functions up to 1863. In 1865, organ-pupil of Seb. Hart, London; in the same year he became org. of the Chapel Royal, Savoy (resigned 1891); was prof. of piano at the Guildhall S. of Music 1880–8. From 1874, he was critic for 'The Weekly Despatch'; from 1877 (with Prout) of 'The Academy', later of 'The Athenæum,' and 'The Standard.' Wrote a biography of Schubert for the 'Great Musicians' series; publ. the Savoy Hymn-tunes and Chants.

Frotz'ler, Carl ['Auer'], b. Stockerau, Lower Austria, April 10, 1873. Of very precocious development, he was taught by his father till 1888, when he ent. the Vienna Cons. (having already comp. a grand mass in B♭, an offertory, and miscellaneous pieces up to op. 21), studying until 1891 under Franz Krenn. From 1887–93, F. was also org. at the Pfarrkirche, Stockerau, and chamber-virtuoso (pf.) to Prince Heinrich Reuss IV. From 1893–7, Kapellm. to Count Nicolaus Esterházy at Totis, Hungary; since then, Kapellm. at the City Th., Linz-on-Danube.—Works: 3 operas, Arnelda (Totis, 1894; won prize of the Ger.-Amer. Opera Society in Phila.), Der Liebesring (Totis, [?]), Mathias Corvinus (Pest, Royal Opera, 1896; publ. 1897); 3 masses, several offertories, 1 symphony, a Scherzo f. orch., Suite f. orch. (all MS.); minor pcs. (Tanzweisen, Valse de concert, f. pf.); a Festmarsch, etc.

Frugat'ta, Giuseppe, pianist; b. Bergamo, May 26, 1860. Pupil of Ant. Bazzini (comp.) and C. Andreoli (pf.) at Milan Cons., where he is now prof.; since 1892 also prof. at the 'Collegio reale delle Fanciulle.'—Pf.-works (a trio, sonata, fantasia, Schizzi di Valzer, Polonaise de concert, 3 morceaux de conc., Moments poétiques, etc.); a pf.-trio (prize of the Acad. at Florence, 1893); a str.-quartet (prize of St. Cecilia Acad. at Rome, 1898); a pf.-quintet w. clarinet (prize, London, 1899); also publ. Preparazione al 'Gradus ad Parnassum' di Clementi (1913).

Früh, Armin Leberecht, b. Mühlhausen, Thuringia, Sept. 15, 1820; d. Nordhausen, Jan. 8, 1894. He invented, in 1857, the 'Semeiomelodicon' (an apparatus for facilitating elem. mus. instruction, consisting of a series of note-heads, which, when pressed by the finger, produce tones of corresponding pitch); he travelled to introduce his invention to prominent musicians, and established a factory in 1858, at Dresden, but soon failed. —Opera, Die Bergknappen (Berlin, 1848).

Rubinstein and comp. with Navrátil, Liadov and Głazunov; graduated as winner of the Rubinstein Prize, and then spent the following two years (1894–6) in Vienna under Leschetizky; début at Berlin, Oct., 1896; then followed successful tours of Germany, Austria, Russia, France and England; on his first Amer. tour (1900) he won golden opinions, and deepened the favorable impression on subsequent visits (1901, '06, '09, '14, '15, '16). During the season of 1912–13 he won veritable triumphs in several European capitals with his series of six historical concerts illustrating the development of the piano-concerto from Bach to the present day (18 concertos by Bach, Mozart, Beethoven, Weber, Mendelssohn, Schumann, Chopin, Liszt, Rubinstein, Tchaikovsky, Brahms, Franck, Saint-Saëns, Grieg, Rachmaninov); on his Amer. tour 1914–15 he repeated the entire series in several of the larger cities, meeting with the same enthusiastic reception. From 1910–14 he lived in Munich as cond. of the 'Konzertverein.' On Oct. 6, 1909, he married the contralto Clara Clemens (daughter of Mark Twain); since then he has frequently appeared with her in joint recitals.

Gabus'si, Vincenzo, b. Bologna, 1800; d. London, Sept. 12, 1846. Pupil of Padre Mattei; he taught singing and pf.-playing, and went to London in 1825. He publ. a series of songs, which won him the sobriquet, in Italy, of the 'nuovo Schubert.' He also prod. several operas.

Ga'de [gah'dĕ], Niels Wilhelm, b. Copenhagen, Feb. 22, 1817; d. there Dec. 21, 1890. The founder of the Scandinavian school of music was the only child of a joiner and instrument-maker. His natural bent for music was strengthened by early instruction on the violin, and frequent attendance at the theatre; so that when, in his fifteenth year, he was set to learn his father's trade, he bore it only half a year, then declaring that he would be nothing but a musician. He was now taught by Wexschall, then leader of the court orch., of which G. became a member, and at the age of 16 was able to appear as a concert-violinist; he also received instruction in theory from the organist Berggreen, and eagerly studied the works of the classics and of the new romantic school. From 1834–39, he felt himself drawn more and more to composition; most products of this period, however, were left in MS. In 1840 his overture Nachklänge von Ossian attracted general attention; it took the 1st prize at the competition instituted by the Copenhagen Music Soc. in 1841, and won for the young composer a royal stipend for the further prosecution of his studies. In 1842

the C m. symphony appeared; its performance by Mendelssohn (together with the Nachklänge) at a Gewandhaus concert insured Gade a favorable reception in Leipzig, whither he went in 1843, and where he remained, after a brief sojourn in Italy, from 1844–8. An intimate of Schumann and Mendelssohn, his genius rapidly expanded in a congenial atmosphere; he repeatedly conducted the Gewandhaus concerts in Mendelssohn's absence, and succeeded him as regular cond. at his death (Nov. 4, 1847); but on the outbreak of the Schleswig-Holstein war, in the spring of 1848, he returned to Copenhagen, where he thenceforward remained, saving a short visit to Birmingham, in 1876, to conduct his cantatas Zion and The Crusaders. At Copenhagen he assumed the conductorship of the Mus. Soc., and also a post as org.; in 1861 he succeeded Gläser as court conductor. An industrious composer, the foremost among the northern romanticists, and unsurpassed as a conductor, he wielded a commanding and highly beneficial influence over musical affairs in and far beyond the Danish capital. The title of Prof. was conferred on him by the King, and that of Dr. phil. (hon. c.) by the Univ. of C.; in 1886 he was made a Commander in the Order of Danebrog. In 1876 the Danish government voted him a life-pension. Despite more or less invidious comparisons with Mendelssohn and Schumann, Gade's style has originality of poetic conception, though it has been left to later composers to bring out in stronger relief the specific traits of Scandinavian folk-music; and he was a master of the art of instrumentation. Autobiographic Aufzeichnungen und Briefe, edited by Dagmar Gade (German transl. Basel, 1893); W. Behrend is preparing (1916) the first adequate biography of G.—Works:

Gadsby, Henry Robert, b. Hackney, London, Dec. 15, 1842; d. Putney, Nov. 11, 1907. Chorister at St. Paul's 1849–58; pupil of Wm. Bayley, but chiefly self-taught. Org. at St. Peter's, Brockley; in 1884 he succeeded Hullah as prof. of harm. at Queen's College, London; was prof. at the Guildhall S. of M. from its foundation (1880) till his death. A leading English comp.—Works: Psalm cxxx; several cantatas (Alice Brand; The Lord of the Isle; Columbus; The Golden Legend; The Cyclops); music to Alcestis and Andromache, and Aminta; Festival Service in D, a 8; 3 symphonies (in A, C, and D); overtures (Andromeda, The Witches' Frolic); orchestral scene The Forest of Arden; a string-quartet; Andante and Rondo for flute and piano; services, anthems, part-songs, etc.—Publ. a Supplemental Book of Exercises for sight-singers; and Harmony (1884).

Gad'ski, Johanna (Emilia Agnes), dramatic soprano; b. Anclam, Pomerania, June 15, 1872; trained from her eighth year by Frau Schroeder-Chaloupka at Stettin. Début at Kroll's Th., Berlin, in May, 1889, as Undine in Lortzing's opera; sang during the summers of 1889–93 at Kroll's, winter of 1890 in Mayence, of '91 in Stettin, of '92 in Bremen, and of '93–'94 in Berlin; concert-tours in Holland, 1894. On March 1, 1895, she made her Amer. début as Elsa with the Damrosch Opera Co., winning instant favor; during the next three seasons she continued there, singing Senta, Elisabeth, Eva, Sieglinde, and creating the rôle of Hester Prynne in Damrosch's The Scarlet Letter (1896); from 1898–1904 she was a member of the M. O. H., and became one of the prime favorites through her superb interpretation of Brünnhilde and Isolde; from 1904–6 she made two transcontinental tours of the U. S., singing with orch. and establishing her reputation as a great lieder-singer; in 1907 she returned to the M. O. H., where she has sung every season since then. While America has been the principal field of her activity, she has also been heard in Cov. G. (1899–1901); in 1899

she sang Eva at Bayreuth, and after the Mozart and Wagner festivals in Munich (1905, '06) the Prince-Regent Luitpold decorated her with the Order of King Ludwig for Art and Science. On Nov. 11, 1892, she was married to Lieutenant Hans Tauscher. With a voice of great volume and purity she combines a stately presence and histrionic ability of a high order. Although famous chiefly as a Wagner singer, she has actually sung about 40 rôles; her favorites are Isolde, Brünnhilde, Elisabeth, Aida and Santuzza.

Gafo'rio (or Gafori, Gafuri, Gaffurio), Franchino (Latinized 'Franchinus Gafurius'; often simply 'Franchinus'), celebrated theorist; b. Lodi, Jan. 14, 1451; d. Milan, June 24, 1522. Intended for the church, he studied theology and music together; lived in Mantua, Verona, and (1477) Genoa; he formed an intimacy with the fugitive Doge Prospero Adorno, and fled with him to Naples. Here he met various distinguished musicians, and held public disputations with Filippo da Caserta and G. Spataro. The plague and the Turkish invasion drove him to Lodi; he was choirmaster at Monticello for 3 years, made a short visit to Bergamo, and in 1484 became singer and master of the boys in Milan cath., and first singer in the choir of Duke Lodovico Sforza. In 1485 he also founded a music-school at Milan, which prospered. His writings, valuable at the period, and still important to musical history, were as follows: Theoricum opus harmonicae disciplinae (Naples, 1480; 2d ed. Milan, 1492, as Theoria musicae); Practica musicae sive musicae actiones in IV libris (Milan, 1496; his magnum opus, with examples of mensural notation in block-print; other eds. 1497, 1502, 1512); Angelicum ac divinum opus musicae . . . materna lingua scriptum (Milan, 1508); De harmonia musicorum instrumentorum opus (1518, Milan, with biography of G. by P. Meleguli); Apologia Franchini Gafurii adversus Joannem Spatarium et complices musicos Bononienses (Turin, 1520; a satirico-polemical effusion dictated by the old musician's overweening vanity; it added fuel to the heated controversy between the Milanese and Bolognese schools).—Cf. E. Prätorius, Die Mensuraltheorie des G. F. u. der folgenden Zeit bis zur Mitte d. 16. Jahrh. (Leipzig, 1905).—See Q.-Lex.

Gaglia'no, the name of a family of famous violin-makers at Naples. Alessandro, who worked from 1695–1725, was a pupil of Stradivari, and he, as well as his sons Nicolò (1700–40) and Gennaro (1710–50), followed largely the Stradivari model. The instruments of Ferdinando (1736–81), a son of Nicolò, exhibit less skilful workmanship than those of the older members of the family.

Gaglia'no [găhl-yah'-], Marco di Zano'bi da, early opera-composer; b. Gagliano, circa 1575; d. Florence, Feb. 24, 1642. He was a pupil of L. Bati; in 1608 he became maestro at S. Lorenzo in Florence; 1609 canon, and 1614 Apostolic Prothonotary. In 1607 he founded the 'Accademia degl' Elevati.'—Publ. works: Dafne, 'opera in musica' (his most important work; first played at Mantua, 1607; publ. Florence, 1608, and reprinted, with the continuo written out, by R. Eitner in vol. x of the 'Publikation älterer . . . Musikwerke'); Masses a 5 (Venice, 1579); Responsorî della settimana santa a 4 voci (Venice, 1580; considered his finest work); 6 vols. of Madrigals a 5 (1602–17); Musiche a 1, 2, e 3 voci (Venice, 1615, with continuo).—Cf. E. Vogel, M. da G. Zur Geschichte des florentiner Musiklebens 1570–1650, in 'Vschr. f. M.-W.' (1899).—See Q.-Lex.

Gäh'rich, Wenzel, b. Zerchowitz, Bohemia, Sept. 16, 1794; d. Berlin, Sept. 15, 1864. A law-student in Leipzig, he turned musician, joining the Leipzig theatre-orch. as a violinist, and (1825) the royal orch. at Berlin. His ballets Don Quichotte, Die Insel der Liebe, Die Seeräuber, Aladdin, etc., were very successful, and he was app. ballet-master at the court opera (1845–60).—Other works: 2 operas (not perf.); 2 symphonies; a pf.-quartet; a concertino for vla. and orch.; 5 colls. of dances; songs, etc.

Gaïl, Edmée-Sophie (née Garre), talented comp.; b. Paris, Aug. 28, 1775; d. there July 24, 1819. Singing-pupil of Mengozzi; made a concert-tour through southern France and Spain; studied theory under Fétis, Perne, and Neukomm. Sang in London, 1816; in Germany and Vienna, 1818. Married the Greek prof. Jean-Baptiste Gaïl.—Operas: Les deux jaloux (1813); Madem. de Launay à la Bastille (1813); Angéla (1814, with Boieldieu); La Méprise (1814); La Sérénade (1818); vocal romances and nocturnes.

Gailhard [găh-yahr'], Pierre, b. Toulouse, Aug. 1, 1848. He began his vocal studies in his native city, and entered the Paris Cons. in 1866; after one year of study under Révial he graduated in 1867, carrying off three first prizes; début at Op.-Comique, Dec. 4, 1867, as Falstaff in Thomas' Songe d'une nuit d'été; he immediately became a favorite, and in the four years of his engagement created the chief bass rôles in Offenbach's Vert-Vert, Semet's Petite Fadette and Auber's Rêve d'Amour. On Nov. 3, 1871, he made his début at the Opéra as Mephistopheles (Faust); here his success was no less pronounced than at the Op.-Com., so that he was compared with the idolized Faure. At the height of his powers and success he gave up the stage when, in 1884, he accepted, jointly with M. Ritt, the management of the famous institution; on the appointment of M. Bertrand as successor to Ritt, in 1892, he retired, but joined Bertrand the following year as co-director; after the latter's death, in 1899, he remained sole director till 1907. His administration was remarkably successful, considering both the novelties produced and the engagement of new singers (Melba, Eames, Bréval, Caron, Ackté, Alvarez, Saléza, Renaud, the two de Reszkés, etc.). Against violent opposition he introduced, and maintained in the repertory, Wagner's works: Lohengrin (1895), Walküre (1893), Tannhäuser (1895; the first perf. after the notorious fiacso of 1861), Meistersinger (1897), Siegfried (1902). Together with Baron de Reinach he wrote the scenario for P. Vidal's ballet La Maladetta (1893), and with Gheusi the text for the same composer's opera Guernica (1895).

Gál, Hans, b. Brünn, Austria, Aug. 5, 1890. Pupil of E. Mandyczewski; living as teacher of theory and comp. in Vienna; awarded the Austrian Staatspreis for comp. in 1915; has in MS. a comedy-opera, Der Fächer; a symphony; a symph. fantasy; an overture, Weh dem, der lügt!; a serenade for orch.; Von ewiger Freude, for fem. voices; Abendgesang for mixed ch. and orch.; some chamber-music; has publ. choruses, pf.-pieces and songs.

Galandia. See GARLANDIA.

Galeazzi [-lā-ăh'tsē], Francesco, b. Turin, 1758; d. Rome in Jan., 1819. A skilful violinist, for 15 years leader of the concerts in the Teatro Valle, Rome; then violin-teacher at Aseoli. Publ. one of the earliest known Methods for violin: Elementi teorico-pratici di musica, con un saggio sopra l'arte di suonare il violino . . . (Rome, 1791–1796, in 2 parts; Part I reprinted 1817).

Gales, Weston, b. Elizabeth, N. J., Nov. 5, 1877. Studied at Yale Univ. (1896–8) pf. with S. S. Sanford and comp. with H. W. Parker; organ with G. M. Déthier in N. Y. (1900–3), and later in Paris with Widor (1908) and L. Vierne (1912); org. and chm. of Christ Ch., New York, 1902–8; then of Emanuel Ch., Boston, 1908–13; has had charge of the training of boys' choirs for special perfs. of the Oratorio Soc. (N. Y.) and Cecilia Soc. (Boston); founder and cond. (since 1914) of the Detroit Symphony Orch.

Galile'i, Vincenzo, celebrated musicograph, father of Galileo Galilei, the astronomer; b. Florence, c. 1533; d. there June (buried July 2), 1591. A skilful lutenist and violinist, and well-versed in ancient Greek theory, he was a prominent member of the artistic circle meeting at Count Bardi's house; his compositions for solo voice with lute-accomp. may be regarded as the starting-point of the monody successfully cultivated by Peri, Caccini, etc., the founders of the 'opera in musica.' A zealous advocate of (soi-disant) Grecian simplicity in contrast with contrapuntal complexity, he publ. a Discorso della musica antica e della moderna (Florence, 1581; to the 2d ed. [1602] is appended a polemical Discorso intorno alle opere di messer Gioseffo Zarlino di Chioggia, which had appeared separately in 1589); and Il Fronimo, dialogo sopra l'arte del bene intavolare e rettamente suonare la musica di liuto (Venice, 1583; 2d ed. 1584); all of considerable historical interest.—See Q.-Lex.

Galin [găh-lăn'], Pierre, b. Samatan, Gers, France, 1786; d. Bordeaux, Aug. 31, 1821. He was teacher of mathematics at the Lycée in Bordeaux, and conceived the idea of simplifying musical instruction by a method which he termed the 'Méloplaste,' and explained in his work Exposition d'une nouvelle méthode pour l'enseignement de la musique (1818; 2d and 3d eds. in 1824 and 1831). The method attracted attention, found warm advocates, and attained considerable popularity. [See CHEVÉ and PARIS.]

Gali'tzin, Georg (Prince Galitzin), son of the following; b. Petrograd, 1823; d. there in Sept., 1872. He was Imperial Chamberlain. As a cultivated musician, he established in Moscow, in 1842, a choir of 70 boys; later he also maintained an orch., with which he travelled in Germany, England, France, and America, to introduce Russian music (more especially Glinka's and his own). He wrote masses, orchestral works, soli for various instrs., choruses, songs, etc.

Galitzin [gah-lē'tsēn], Nicolas Borissovitch, a Russian prince; b. 1794; d. Kursk, 1866. To him Beethoven dedicated an overture (op. 124) and 3 quartets (op. 127, 130, 132); they also corresponded until B.'s death. The prince was an amateur of fine attainments, being a skilful 'cellist; in 1820 he founded the Philh. Soc. at Petrograd.

Gall [găhl], Jan, b. Warsaw, Aug. 18, 1856; d. Lemberg, Oct. 30, 1912. Pupil of Krenn in Vienna, Rheinberger in Munich and Lamperti in Milan; 1880, cond. of the Galician Mus. Soc. in Lemberg; 1886, prof. of singing at the Cracow Cons.; after 1892 cond. of a choral society, 'Echo,' in Lemberg; wrote about 400 songs, choruses, quartets, etc.

Gallay, Jacques-François, b. Perpignan, Dec. 8, 1795; d. Paris, Oct., 1864. Brilliant horn-virtuoso. Pupil (1820–21) of Dauprat in Paris Cons., where he took 1st prize. Player in the Odéon and (1825) Th. Italien; member of the royal 'chapelle,' and in 1832 chamber-musician to Louis Philippe; in 1842 he succeeded Dauprat as horn-prof. in the Cons.—

Works: Horn-quartets, -trios, -duos; récréations, nocturnes, études and concertos for horn; and a Méthode complète de cor.

Gallay, Jules, b. Saint-Quentin, 1822; d. Paris, Nov. 2, 1897. A wealthy amateur, he became a good 'cello-player and a zealous student of lutherie in all its forms. To this study we owe the following valuable publications: Les Instrs. à archet à l'Exposition universelle de 1867 (Paris, 1867); Les Luthiers italiens aux XVII^e et XVIII^e siècles, nouvelle édition du 'Parfait Luthier' (la Chélonomie) de l'abbé Sibire, suivie de notes sur les maîtres des diverses écoles (Paris, 1869); a reprint of du Manoir's Le Mariage de la musique avec la danse, with hist. introd. and explan. notes (Paris, 1870); Les Instruments des écoles italiennes, catalogue précédé d'une introduction et suivi de notes sur les principaux maîtres (Paris, 1872). As a member of the jury at Vienna, 1873, he edited the Rapport sur les Instruments de Musique [à archet] (Paris, 1875).

Gal'lenberg, Wenzel Robert, Graf von, b. Vienna, Dec. 28, 1783; d. Rome, March 13, 1839. An amateur composer in early youth, studying under Albrechtsberger. In 1803 he married Countess Giulietta Guicciardi (of whom Beethoven was enamoured, and to whom the Sonata Op. 27, No. 2, is dedicated). In Naples, shortly after, he made the acquaintance of Barbaja, a theatre-manager; wrote for him numerous successful ballets, and from 1821–3 was his partner when B. was director of opera in Vienna. He attempted the management of the Kärntnerthor-Th. in 1829, but failed, and was obliged to return to Italy, rejoining Barbaja.—Works: About 50 ballets; a sonata, marches, fantasias, etc., for pf.—On one of his themes, Beethoven wrote a set of variations.

Gallet'ti-Giano'li, Isabella, dramatic soprano; b. Bologna, Nov. 11, 1835; d. Milan, Aug. 31, 1901. Pupil of Gamberini; début Brescia, 1860. Her voice in later years changed to contralto. She sang prima-donna rôles in Don Bucefalo, Gemma di Vergy, Anna Bolena, Norma, Lucrezia Borgia, Semiramide, Il Trovatore, l'Africaine, Un Ballo in Maschera, Don Carlos, La Favorita, Le Prophète, etc. After retirement, she established a singing-school in Milan.

Gal'li, Amintore, b. Talamello, near Rimini, Oct. 12, 1845; pupil of Mazzucato at Milan Cons., 1862–7; was music-director and school-director, then settled in Milan, where he was musical editor for Sonzogno, and critic of 'Il Secolo'; now (1916) ed. of 'Il Teatro Illustrato' and 'Musica Popolare.'—Works: The operas Il Corno d'oro (Turin, 1876), and David (Milan, 1904); oratorios Espiazione (after Moore's 'Paradise and Peri'), and Cristo al Golgata; Goethe's Totentanz for bar. solo and orch.; string-quintet in E m.; etc. Published Musica e Musicisti del secolo X sino ai nostri giorni (1871; a superficial work); Estetica della musica (1900; a riper work, on historical lines); Storia e teoria del sistema musicale (1901); Piccolo lessico di musica (1902).

Galli-Marié, Célestine (née Marié de l'Isle), b. Paris, Nov., 1840; d. Vence, near Nice, Sept. 22, 1905. Dramatic mezzo-soprano. Her father, an opera-singer, was her only teacher. She made her début at Strassburg, 1859; sang in Toulouse, 1860, and in Lisbon, 1861 (Italian opera). Sang the Bohemian Girl at Rouen, 1862, with such success that she was immediately eng. for the Paris Opéra-Comique. Début there (1862) as Serpina in La Serva padrona. She created the rôles of Mignon (1866) and Carmen (1875), as well as the principal rôles in Lara, Le Capitaine Henriot, Fior d'Aliza, Robinson Crusoé, La Petite Fadette, Fantasio, Don César de Bazan, Piccolino, La Surprise de l'Amour. She sang in upwards of 20 operas from 1862–78, and again in 1883–5. She was not a remarkable singer, but an actress of extraordinary power.

Galliard, Johann Ernst, b. Celle, Hanover, in 1687; d. London, 1749; pupil of A. Steffani at Hanover. A skilful oboist, he went to London, 1706, as chamber-mus. to Prince George of Denmark; succeeded Draghi as organist at Somerset House; and composed industriously. Besides the music to numerous plays, masques, and pantomimes, he wrote cantatas, a Te Deum, a Jubilate, anthems, soli for flute and 'cello, etc.; and set to music the Morning Hymn of Adam and Eve, from Milton's Paradise Lost, and Hughes' opera Calypso and Telemachus (1712). He also made some translations.—See Q.-Lex.

Gal'lico, Paolo, accomplished pianist; b. Trieste, May 13, 1868. When 15, he gave a recital at Trieste; then studied at Vienna Cons. under Julius Epstein, graduating at 18 with highest honors—first prize (gold medal), also the 'Gesellschafts' medal. After successful concerts in Italy, Austria, Russia, Germany, etc., he settled in New York in 1892 as concert-pianist and teacher.—Has publ. piano-pieces and songs; has also written an operetta, Johannistraum, and an opera, Harlekin.

Gallignani [gähl-lēn-yah'nē], Giuseppe, b. Faenza, Sept. 1, 1851. Pupil of the Milan Cons.; m. di capp. at Milan Cath. and ed. of 'La Musica Sacra'; comp. of the operas Il Grillo del focolare (Genoa, 1873), Atala (Milan, 1876), Nestorio (ib., 1888), Quare? (ib., 1903); also wrote some excellent church-music and organ-pieces.

Gal'lus, Jacobus, a native of Carniola, whose real name was Jacob Händl (or Handl, Hähnel); b. Reifnitz, July 31, 1550; d. Prague, July 24, 1591. Kapellm. to the Bishop of Olmütz, later imperial Kapellm. at Prague. As a comp. he was an eminent contemporary of Palestrina and Orl. Lassus. Besides detached pieces in Bodenschatz's 'Florilegium Portense,' Proske's 'Musica divina,' and colls. of Schöberlein, Zahn, Becker, Rochlitz, and others, many printed works are extant; Handel borrowed G.'s motet, Ecce quomodo moritur justus, for his Funeral Anthem.—See Q.-Lex. (HANDL).

Gal'lus, Johannes (Jean le Cocq, Maître Jean, Mestre Jhan), a Dutch contrapuntist; d. c. 1543. He was m. di capp. to Duke Ercole of Ferrara. Many pieces were publ. in colls., and in a vol. of motets printed by Scotto (1543). He was long confounded with JHAN GERO.—See Q.-Lex.

Galston, Gottfried, pianist; b. Vienna, Aug. 31, 1879. From 1895–9 pupil of Leschetizky in Vienna, and (1899–1900) of Jadassohn and Reinecke at Leipzig Cons.; 1903–7 taught at Stern's Cons. in Berlin; since 1908 titular Prof. (without duties) of the Petrograd Cons.; living since 1910 in Planegg, n. Munich. On his extended tours he has proved himself a player of keen analytical powers and splendid intellectual grasp; in 1902 he toured Australia; then Germany, France and Russia; 1912–13, America. He has publ. a Studienbuch (1909; analytical notes to a series of 5 histor. recitals [Bach-Brahms]).

Galup'pi, Baldassare, surnamed il Buranel'lo from the island of Burano, near Venice, on which he was b. Oct. 18, 1706; d. Venice, Jan. 3, 1785. A pupil of his father, a barber and violin-player; in 1722 he brought out at Vicenza an opera, La fede nell' incostanza which, though a failure, attracted attention to his talent; he now studied hard under Lotti, and in 1729 prod. Dorinda (Venice, Teatro S. Angelo) with brilliant success. His forte was comedy-opera, which he cultivated with such success as to earn the title of 'padre dell' opera buffa.' He was also a distinguished player on and composer for the harpsichord: In 1741 he visited England; from 1762–4 he was maestro at S. Marco, director of the Cons. degli Incurabili, and organist at various churches. From 1765–8 he acted as maestro to the Russian court (Catherine II); then resuming his post as director of the Incurabili at Venice. His 112 operas and 20 oratorios are now obsolete. He also wrote a cantata and much other sacred music (all in MS.); one fine sonata for harpsichord is included in Pauer's 'Alte Klaviermusik.'—Cf. A. Wotquenne, B. G. Étude bibliographique sur ses œuvres dramatiques (Brussels, 1902).—See Q.-Lex.

Gamba'le, Emmanuele, Milanese music-teacher, wrote La riforma musicale . . . (1840), advocating a basic scale of 12 semitones (Ger. transl. by Häser, 1843); this 'reform' he practically exemplified in his La prima parte della riforma musicale (1846), wherein are études written out in his new notation. He transl. Fétis' work on Harmony into Italian.

Gambi'ni, Carlo Andrea, pianist; b. Genoa, Oct. 22, 1819; d. there Feb. 14, 1865. —Over 150 works, among them 4 operas; an oratorio; La Passione (by Manzoni) for 4-part ch. and orch.; a symphonic ode, Cristoforo Colombo; masses and other church-music; many piano-pieces, a piano-trio, etc.

Gamuc'ci, Baldassare, b. Florence, Dec. 14, 1822; d. there Jan. 8, 1892. Pupil of C. Fortini (pf.) and L. Picchianti (comp.). In 1849 he founded the 'Società Corale del Carmine,' which later became the 'Scuola Corale' of the Mus. Inst. at Florence, G. still remaining director.—Works: Masses, a requiem, psalms, etc., and pf.-pieces; also publ. Intorno alla vita ed alle opere di Luigi Cherubini . . . (Florence, 1869); Rudimenti di lettura musicale . . . several times reprinted; many essays for the reports of the Institute, one of special interest being Perchè i greci non conoscevano la molteplicità delle voci; also contributions to various mus. journals.

Ganas'si, Silvestro, b. Fontego, near Venice, about 1500, and hence named 'del Fontego'; wrote two rare and valuable works: La Fontegara, la quale insegna di suonare il flauto . . . (Venice, 1535; is a method for the 7-hole flûte-à-bec, and explains the graces); and Regula Rubertina che insegna suonare de viola d'arco tastada (1542–3, in 2 parts; a Method for viola and bass-viol). Both were printed by G. himself; only one copy of each is extant (in the Liceo Filarmonico at Bologna).

Gandi'ni, Alessandro (cav.), b. Modena, 1807; d. there Dec. 17, 1871. Taught by his father, Antonio G., and in 1828 brought out his first opera, Demetrio, which was followed by 4 more. In 1842 he succeeded his father as maestro to the Duke of Modena. He wrote Cronistoria dei teatri di Modena da 1539 a 1871 (Modena, 1873; 3 vols.), augm. by a fourth vol., 1875–83, compiled by Ferrari-Moreni and Valdrighi (Modena, 1883).

Gandolfi, Riccardo (Cristoforo Daniele Diomede), b. Voghera, Piedmont, Feb. 16, 1839. Pupil of Conti at the Naples Cons., then of Mabellini in Florence; app. inspector of studies at the 'Real Istituto di Musica' in Florence, 1869; chief librarian in 1889; pensioned since 1912. He began as a dramatic comp., then turned to the larger instrl. and vocal forms, and finally abandoned comp. altogether, devoting himself to historical studies, which have won him distinction.—Works: The operas Aldina (Milan, 1863), Il Paggio (Turin, 1865), Il Conte di Monreale (Genoa, 1872), Caterina di Guisa (Catania, 1872); Messa da Requiem; 2 masses; a cantata, Il Battesimo di S. Cecilia; a Psalm for soli, ch. and orch.; a symphony; several overtures; chamber-music.—Sulla relazione della poesia colla musica melodrammatica (1868); Una riparazione a proposito di Francesco Landino (1888); Commemorazioni di W. A. Mozart (1891); Illustrazioni di alcuni cimeli concernanti l'arte musicale in Firenze (1892); Appunti di storia musicale (1893); Onoranze Fiorentine a G. Rossini (1902); in 'Rivista Mus. It.' he has publ. La Cappella musicale della corte di Toscana, 1539–1859 (xvi, 3); 5 Lettere inedite di G. Verdi (xxi); etc.

Ganne, Louis-Gaston, b. Buxières-les-Mines, Allier, April 5, 1862. Pupil of Th. Dubois, Massenet and C. Franck at Paris Cons. He is chef d'orchestre of the balls at the Opéra, and 1st chef d'orchestre at the municipal Casino at Monte Carlo; very popular and succ. comp. of lighter operas, ballets and divertissements.—Works: Tout Paris (Paris, 1891; vaudev.); Rabelais (ib., 1892); Les Colles des femmes (ib., 1893); Les Saltimbanques (ib., 1899); Miss Bouton d'Or (ib., 1902); Hans, le joueur de flûte (Monte Carlo, 1906; N. Y., 1910); Rhodope (ib., 1910); Cocorico (ib., 1914); the ballets Phryné, Au Japon, Les Ailes, etc.; about 150 minor pieces for piano.

Gäns'bacher, Johann, b. Sterzing, Tyrol, May 8, 1778; d. Vienna, July 13, 1844. In early youth he learned singing, the organ, piano, 'cello, and harm.; in 1801, at Vienna, he studied under Abbé Vogler and Albrechtsberger, and then devoted himself to composition. He visited Prague, and (1809) Dresden and Leipzig; in 1810 resumed study under Vogler, at Darmstadt, Weber and Meyerbeer being his fellow-pupils and friends; with Weber he went to Mannheim and Heidelberg, and rejoined him later in Prague. In Vienna G. also met Beethoven. He served in the war of 1813, led a roving life for several years, and finally (1823) settled in Vienna as Kapellm. of the cathedral (Stephansdom), as Preindl's successor. His 216 comps. show little originality, but solid workmanship. Only 2 masses, 2 requiems, and several small church-works, also 3 terzettos for 2 S. and T., Schiller's Erwartung, and some pf.-sonatas and trios, have been publ. Besides 15 other masses, and 2 other requiems, 2 Te Deums, offertories, etc., he wrote a symphony, serenades, marches, concerted pieces, pf.-pieces, a 'Liederspiel,' music to Die Kreuzfahrer (by Kotzebue), songs, etc.

Gant'voort, Arnold Johann, b. Amsterdam, Holland, Dec. 6, 1857. Went to America in 1876; gave private lessons, and taught in various colleges (Bowling Green, Ky.; Oxford, O.; Piqua, O.); in 1894, head of dept. for prep. public-school music-teachers, Coll. of Mus., Cincinnati; 1901, gen. mgr. of the Coll.; Pres. Ohio M. T. A. 1891-4. Has publ. Familiar Talks on the History of Music (N. Y., 1913), and a series of public-school music-readers.

Ganz, Adolf, b. Mayence, Oct. 14, 1796; d. London, Jan. 11, 1870. Violinist; 1819, cond. at Mayence; 1825, Kapellm. to the Grand Duke of Hesse-Darmstadt.

Ganz, Eduard, son of Adolf; b. Mayence, April 29, 1827; d. Berlin, Nov. 26, 1869. He came with his father to England in 1840, and studied with Moscheles and Thalberg in London; settled in Berlin, where he established a music-school in 1862.

Ganz, Leopold, violinist, brother of Adolf; b. Mayence, Nov. 28, 1810; d. Berlin, June 15, 1869. After concert-tours with Moritz, he joined with him the Berlin court orch. in 1827, obtaining the title (1836) and position (1840) of Concertmeister (leader). Publ. duos for vln. and 'cello.

Ganz, Moritz, 'cellist, brother of Adolf; b. Mayence, Sept. 13, 1806; d. Berlin, Jan. 22, 1868; joined the Berlin court orch. in 1827 as first 'cello. Wrote good 'cello-music (concertos, fantasias, trios, duets, etc.).

Ganz, Rudolf, distinguished pianist; b. Zurich, Switzerland, Feb. 24, 1877. Pupil of

R. Freund (pf.) and F. Hegar (vcl.) in Zurich; 1893–6, of C. Eschmann-Dumur (pf.) and Ch. Blanchet (comp.) in Lausanne; 1897–8, of F. Blumer (pf.) in Strassburg; 1899 of F. Busoni (pf.) and H. Urban (comp.) in Berlin. Although he had played occasionally in public —chiefly as 'cellist—since his twelfth year, his début as a mature artist took place with the Berlin Philh. Orch., Dec., 1899 (Beethoven's E♭ and Chopin's E m. concertos); in May of the following year the same orch. perf. his first Symphony; from 1900–05 he was head of the pf.-department at the Chicago Mus. Coll., succeeding A. Friedheim; 1905–8 made succ. tours of the U. S. and Canada; 1908–11 tours of Europe, playing in Berlin alone 16 different pf.-concertos; since 1912 he has divided his time concertizing in Europe and America. He has played for the first time many important works by contemporary composers (Busoni, Ravel, Bartok, Debussy, Dohnányi, d'Indy, Loeffler, Korngold, etc.), and revived older works that had fallen into undeserved neglect. In July, 1900, he married Mary Forrest, an Amer. concert-singer.—Works: Symphony in E, op. 1; Konzertstück for pf. and orch., in B, op. 4; Variations on a theme by Brahms, for pf., op. 21; pf.-pieces, op. 5, 10, 20, 24; several choruses for male voices; about 150 songs.

Ganz, Wilhelm, son of Adolf; b. Mayence, Nov. 6, 1833; d. London, Sept. 12, 1914. Pupil of C. Eckert and C. Anschütz; in 1850 he settled definitely in London, where he soon won a reputation as a fine pianist; in 1856 Jenny Lind engaged him to accompany her on her tours. When Dr. H. Wylde organized the New Philh. Soc. in 1852, G. joined the orch. as violinist. From 1874–9 he alternated with Wylde as cond., and after the latter's resignation continued the concerts as 'Ganz's Orchestral Concerts' (1879–83); in that time he produced, for the first time in England, many of the larger works of Liszt and Berlioz, and artists like Saint-Saëns, de Pachmann, Menter, Essipov, etc., made their English début at his concerts. For many years G. was prof. of singing at the G. S. M. In 1913 he publ. Memories of a Musician.

Garat [găh-răh′], Pierre-Jean, famous concert-singer and teacher; b. Ustaritz, Basses-Pyrénées, April 25, 1764; d. Paris, March 1, 1823. His remarkable talent discovered itself early, and he had lessons in singing from Franz Beck in Bordeaux, whither the family had removed; but his father wished him to become a lawyer, and sent him to the Univ. of Paris in 1780. Music, however, had far greater attractions than the law; G. neglected his legal studies, and fell out with his father, but was happily aided by the Count d'Artois, who made him his private secretary and introduced him to Marie Antoinette, whose special favor he enjoyed up to the Revolution. Now obliged to earn his livelihood as a concert-singer, he accomp. Rode to Hamburg; after great successes, they returned to Paris in 1794, and G. sang (1795) at the Feydeau Concerts, where his triumphs speedily procured him a professorship of singing in the newly-opened Cons. For 20 years longer, his wonderful tenor-baritone voice, trained to perfection in coloratura, and of remarkable compass, rendered him the foremost singer on the French concert-stage in every department of vocal music. Nourrit, Levasseur and Ponchard were his pupils.

Garaudé [găh-roh-dā′], Alexis de, b. Nancy, March 21, 1779; d. Paris, March 23, 1852. He studied theory under Cambini and Reicha, and singing under Crescentini and Garat; was a singer in the imp. (later royal) choir from 1808–30 and prof. of singing in the Cons. from 1816–41.—Publ. 3 string-quintets, many ensemble-pieces for violin, flute, cl., and 'cello, sonatas and vars. for pf., a solemn mass, solfeggî, vocalises, arias, duets and songs; also a Méthode de chant (1809, op. 25; 2d revised ed. as M. complète de chant, op. 40); Solfège, ou méthode de musique; Méthode complète de piano; and L'harmonie rendue facile, ou théorie pratique de cette science (1835). —See Q.-Lex.

Gar′brecht, Fr. F. W. (d. 1875), founded at Leipzig (1862) an establishment for engraving and printing music, which has been owned by Oskar Brandstetter since 1880.

Garcia, Eugénie (née Mayer), wife and pupil of Manuel; b. Paris, 1818; d. there Aug. 12, 1880. Soprano stage-singer; for several years in Italian theatres, then (1840) at the Opéra-Com., Paris; 1842 in London; finally, separated from her husband, she lived as a singing-teacher at Paris.

Garcia [gar-thē′ăh], Don Francisco Saverio (Padre Garcia, called in Rome 'lo Spagnoletto'); b. Nalda, Spain, 1731; d. Saragossa, Feb. 26, 1809. He lived for some years in Rome as a student and singing-teacher; in 1756 he was app. maestro at Saragossa cath. A prolific and influential church-comp., his works show a marked contrast to the fugal style prevailing before, being more natural and simple. Wrote an oratorio, Tobia (1773); the operas La Finta Schiava (Rome, 1754), Pompeo Magno in Armenia (ib., 1755), La Pupilla (ib., 1755), Lo Scultore deluso (ib., 1756); masses and motets, chiefly in 8 parts. His most noted pupil was Caterina Gabrielli.

Garcia, Gustave, son of Manuel Patricio, b. Milan, Feb. 1, 1837. In 1860 he began to study singing with Bucine, a pupil of his father; then, after a few months' study with his father, he made his début in Donizetti's Don Sebastiano at La Scala (1862); he sang alternately in Italy and England until about 1880, when he settled permanently in London as a singing-teacher; for some years he was prof. at the R. A. M.; then, simultaneously, at the R. C. M. and G. S. M.; retired in 1911. —His son Albert is a concert-singer (baritone), and prof. at the R. C. M.

Garcia, Manuel del Popolo Vicente, famous tenor, singing-teacher, and dram. comp.; b. Sevilla, Jan. 22, 1775; d. Paris, June 2, 1832. A chorister in Sevilla cath. at 6, he was taught by Ripa and Almarcha, and at 17 was already well known as a singer, composer and conductor. After singing in Cadiz, Madrid, and Malaga, he proceeded (1806) to Paris, and sang to enthusiastic audiences at the Théâtre Italien (Opéra-Bouffe); in 1809, at his benefit, he sang his own monodrama El poeta calculista with extraordinary success. In Italy, from 1811–16, he profited by Auzani's advice, and improved his style of singing by adopting the old Italian method. In 1812 Murat app. him chamber-singer. On his return to Paris, his disgust at the machinations of Catalani, the manageress of the Th. Italien, caused him to break his engagement and go to London (1817), where his triumphs were repeated. From 1819–24 he was again the idol of the Parisians at the Th. Italien; sang as first tenor at the Royal Opera, in London, 1824–5, and in this latter year embarked for New York with his family (wife, son Manuel, and daughter Maria [Malibran]), and the distinguished artists Crivelli fils, Angrisani, Barbieri, and de Rosich; from Nov. 29, 1825, to Sept. 30, 1826, they gave 79 performances at the Park and Bowery Theatres, with evident artistic and apparent pecuniary success. The troupe then spent 18 months in Mexico, when G. returned to Paris, and devoted himself to teaching and composition. His operas comprise 17 in Spanish, 18 in Italian, and 8 in French, besides a number never performed, and numerous ballets—all forgotten. A preeminently successful teacher, his 2 daughters, Mmes. Malibran and Pauline Viardot-Garcia, Ad. Nourrit, Rimbault, and Favelli, were a few of his best pupils.—See 'Mus. Quart.', July 1915 to Jan. 1916: Pauline V.-G. to Julius Rietz (letters).

Garcia [gar'shăh, in Engl. and Amer.; gar'siah, in Germany; correct Spanish pron., gar-thē'ăh], Manuel Patricio Rodriguez, distinguished vocal teacher, son of preceding; b. Madrid, March 17, 1805; d. London, July 1, 1906 (aged 101). Intended for a stage-singer (bass), he went to New York with his father, but in 1829 adopted the vocation of a singing-teacher (in Paris) with conspicuous success. An exponent of his father's method, he also carefully investigated the functions of the vocal organs; invented the laryngoscope, for which the Königsberg Univ. made him Dr. phil. (hon. c.). In 1840 he sent to the Academy a Mémoire sur la voix humaine, a statement of the conclusions arrived at by various investigators, with his own comments. He was app. prof. at the Cons. in 1847, but resigned in 1850 to accept a similar position in the London R. A. M., where he taught uninterruptedly till 1895. Among G.'s pupils were his wife, Eugénie, Jenny Lind, Henriette Nissen, and Jul. Stockhausen. His Traité complet de l'art du chant was publ. in 1847; a German ed., by Wirth, appeared soon after. In 1904 he publ. Hints on Singing, a compendious catechism of the vocal art, remarkable for its denial of the value (for the pupil) of anatomical and physiological study. —Cf. S. Mackinlay, G. the Centenarian and His Time (London, 1908); also 'M. T.', Apr., 1905.

Garcia, Mariano, b. Aoiz, Navarra, July 26, 1809. Director of the Pampluna School of Music, and a noteworthy composer of church-music.

Garcia, Marie-Félicité. See MALIBRAN.

Garcin [gähr-săn'], Jules-Auguste-Salomon, b. Bourges, July 11, 1830; d. Paris, Oct. 10, 1896. Violinist; pupil, in Paris Cons., of Clavel and Alard, also of Bazin (harm.) and A. Adam (comp.). In 1856 he joined the Grand Opéra orch., becoming first solo violin and 3d cond. in 1871; in 1882, 2d cond. of the Cons. Concerts (succeeding Altès); and was first cond. (succeeding Deldevez) from 1885–92. From 1890, also prof. of vln. at the Cons., as Massart's successor.—Works: A suite symphonique for orch., op. 25; a concertino for vla.; a concerto and other pieces for vln.; etc.

Garda'no, Antonio (up to 1557 he wrote his name Gardane), b. after (?) 1500; d. Venice, 1571 (?). One of the earliest and most celebrated Italian music-printers; from 1537 he reprinted many current publications, as well as important novelties, and compositions of his own; e.g., Motetti del frutto (1539) and Canzoni francesi (1564). After 1571 his sons Alessandro and Angelo carried on the business till 1575, when the former set up for himself in Rome, while the latter remained in Venice till his death (1610); his heirs continued publishing under his name till 1650. —See Q.-Lex.

Garden, Mary, dramatic soprano; born Aberdeen, Scotland, Feb. 20, 1877. Brought as a mere child to the United States, and lived in Chicago; when 6 she began to study the vln., and at 12 she also took up the piano. In 1893 she began the study of singing with Mrs. S. R. Duff of Bangor, Maine, who (1895) took her to Paris, where she was coached by Trabadello and Lucien Fugère. Début in the title-rôle of Charpentier's Louise at the Opéra-Comique, April 12, 1900, where she was immediately engaged. Her success, especially as an actress, was so emphatic that two years later Debussy chose her to create the rôle of Mélisande. Has created the rôles of Marie in La Marseillaise (July 14, 1900), Diane in La Fille du Tabarin (Feb. 20, 1901), Mélisande in Debussy's Pelléas et Mélisande (April 30, 1902), and Fiammette in Leroux's La Reine Fiammette (Dec. 23, 1903). Her Amer. début occurred Nov. 25, 1907, at the Manhattan Op. H., New York, in Thaïs, and she soon became a prime favorite; she remained at the Manh. Op. H. till 1910; since then she has been with the Chicago Op. Co. Although her voice is not extraordinary, nor her vocalism above criticism, her phenomenal success is due to her marvelous acting, prepossessing stage-appearance and plasticity of pose. Her répertoire, which is rather limited and practically confined to modern French works, comprises Thaïs, Grisélidis, Mélisande, Marguerite (Faust), Sappho, Louise, Jean (Jongleur de Notre-Dame), Carmen, Salome (R. Strauss), etc.

Gardiner, H. Balfour, b. London, Nov. 2, 1877. Pupil of I. Knorr in Frankfort; taught singing for a short time in Winchester, but then devoted his whole time to comp. He has written a Phantasy for orch.; English Dance; a symph. in D; a string-quintet in C m.; a string-quartet in B; News from Wydah, for soli, ch. and orch.

Garibol'di, Giuseppe, flutist and comp.; b. Macerato, Italy, March 17, 1833. Lived many years in Paris, as a concert-player, and publ. numerous pieces for flute and piano, and flute solo. He also brought out 3 operettas, and wrote songs.

Gariel [gah-r'yel'], Edoardo, b. Monterey, Mexico, Aug. 5, 1860. Pupil of A. Daunic in Monterey and Marmontel in Paris; app. teacher of mus., French and Engl. in State Normal School at Saltillo in 1887; made dir. in 1899; 1900–8 supervisor of school-mus. in Mexico City; 1908–15 prof. of methodology for school-mus. at Normal School for Girls; since 1915 prof. of harm. and music pedagogy at the Cons. Nacional de Música. In 1915 he was sent by the government to the U. S. to study methods of instruction; also lectured on his new system of harmony at various institutions (Columbia Univ., N. Engl. Cons., etc.); in 1916 he was sent on a similar mission to Spain, Italy, Switzerland and France. He has published Chopin, Consideraciones sobre algunas de sus obras y la manera de interpretarlas (1895); Solfeo Elemental (2 parts, 1905); Solfeo y Canto Coral en notación modal cifrada (1906); Elementos de Solfeo y Canto Coral (1908); Nuevo Sistema de Armonía basado en cuatro acordes fundamentales (1916; published simultaneously in English as A New System of Harmony based on four fundamental chords). He has also written some works for piano.

Garlandia, Johannes de, French writer, author of a treatise on plain-song and mensural music (abt. 1210–32), 2 versions of which were printed by Coussemaker in his 'Scriptores,' vol. i.—See Q.-Lex.

Garnier [gähr-n'yā'], François-Joseph, oboist; b. Lauris, Vaucluse, 1759; d. there 1825. Pupil of Sallantin at Paris; in 1778 second, in 1786 first oboe at the Grand Opéra.—Publ. 3 oboe-concertos; 2 symphonies concertantes for 2 oboes; 1 do. for flute, ob., and bassoon; 6 duos for oboe and vln.; and a Méthode pour le hautbois (German edition translated by P. Garsó [gahr'shoh], Siga, distinguished singing-master; b. Tisza Vesceny, Hungary, Sept. 17, 1831; d. Vienna, March 8, 1915. Pupil of Gentilhuomo in Pest; début 1854 at Arad as Lionel in Martha; having sung in various theatres, he established himself as a teacher in Bremen. He wrote Ein offenes Wort über Gesang (1884); Wie lernt man singen? (1889); Schule der speziellen Stimmbildung auf der Basis des losen Tones (1911).—Cf. H. Rasch, S. G., in 'Allgem. Musik-Ztg.' (1915, No. 13).

Gärt'ner, Joseph, b. Tachau, Bohemia, 1796; d. Prague, May 30, 1863. Organ-builder at Prague. Published Kurze Belehrung über die innere Einrichtung der Orgeln . . . (1832; 2d edition 1841).

Gascue [gähs'kwā], Francisco, b. San Sebastian, Spain, Oct. 4, 1848. Although by profession a civil engineer, he has devoted much time to the study of Basque folk-music, and his contributions to the subject are valuable. He has publ. La música popular vascongada (1906); La ópera vascongada (1906); Ensayos de crítica musical (1909–10; on operas by Colin, Urandizaga, Guridi and de Inchausta); Historia de la Sonata (1910); Origen de la música popular vascongada (1913); also several essays in 'S. I. M.' and 'Revista Musical de Bilbao' and 'Revue des Études basques.'

Gaspa'ri, Gaetano, historiographer; b. Bologna, March 14, 1807; d. there March 31, 1881. Entered the Liceo Musicale in 1820 (pupil of B. Donelli); took 1st prize in comp. in 1827, and was made honorary maestro of the institution in 1828. Until 1836 he was m. di capp. at Cento, and then for a brief space at Imola, leaving this position to aid his old teacher Donelli; on the latter's death (1839), instead of succeeding him, G. was app. merely prof. of solfeggio (1840); not until 1855 did his sterling merit win him the post of Librarian to the Liceo, and prof. of esthetics. In 1857 (to 1866) he also became m. di capp. at the Ch. of S. Petronio. His growing influence as an authority on music led to his appointment, in 1866, as a member of the Royal Deputation for hist. research in Romagna, and to him was assigned the report on the musicians of Bologna. Thenceforward he devoted himself to historical research.—Writings: Ricerche, documenti e memorie risguardanti la storia dell' arte musicale in Bologna (1867); Ragguagli sulla cappella musicale della Basilica di S. Petronio in Bologna (1869); Memorie . . . dell'arte mus. in B. al XVI secolo (1875). Among his excellent comps. may be mentioned masses, a Miserere in 2 parts w. small orch., a Miserere mei Deus a 5, with organ, and an Ave Maria for children's voices, w. pf.—Cf. F. Parisini, Elogio funebre del professore G. G. (1882).

Gaspari'ni (or Guasparini), Francesco, b. Camaiore, n. Lucca, Mar. 5, 1668; d. Rome, Mar. 22, 1727. Pupil of Corelli and Pasquini in Rome, where he taught for a time, and became (about 1700) director of music at the Cons. della Pietà, Venice. In 1735 he was app. m. di capp. at the Lateran, Rome. Between 1702–30 he prod. about 40 operas at Venice, Rome, Vienna, etc., with great success; he also wrote masses, motets, cantatas, psalms, an oratorio Moses, etc. His chief work was a Method of thorough-bass playing, L'Armonico pratico al cembalo. . . (Venice, 1683; 7th ed. 1802), used in Italy for nearly 200 years. His most famous pupil was Benedetto Marcello.—See Q.-Lex.

Gaspari'ni, Michelangelo, celebrated contralto singer and dramatic comp.; b. Lucca, 1685; d. Venice, 1732. A pupil of Lotti, he devoted himself to vocal teaching, and founded a famous singing-school at Venice (Faustina Bordoni was his pupil). He prod. 5 operas in Venice.—See Q.-Lex.

Gaspa'ro da Salò, family-name Bertolotti, b. Salò (prov. of Brescia, Italy), about 1542; d. Brescia, Apr. (buried 14th), 1609. He came to Brescia about 1563, and settled there as a maker of viols, viole da gamba, and contrabass viols, which gained much celebrity; his violins were not so good. He is credited with having modernized the form of the violin, giving the f-holes their present shape, also its graceful curve to the scroll, and prolonging and sharpening the 4 corners of the bouts. His pupils were his first-born son, Francesco; Giovan Paolo Maggini; and Giacomo Lafranchini. Dragonetti's favorite double-bass was an altered 'viola contrabbassa' of Gasparo's.—Cf. P. Bettoni, G. da S. e l'invenzione del violino, in 'Commentarî del Ateneo di Brescia' (1901); M. Butturini, G. da S. Studio critico (Salò, 1901).

Gasperi'ni, Guido, b. Florence, June 7, 1865. Pupil of Tacchinardi (comp.) and Sbolci (vcl.); since 1902, librarian at Parma Cons.; in 1908 he founded the 'Associazione dei Musicologi Italiani,' one of the chief purposes of which is the examination and cataloguing of all books on music and musical MSS. in the Italian libraries; in 1909 it was affiliated with the 'Internationale Musik-Gesellschaft' (as its Italian branch), and began the issue of a quarterly 'Catalogo delle opere musicali . . . esistenti . . . nelle biblioteche e negli archivi pubblici e privati d'Italia'; so far (1916) complete catalogues of the libraries of Parma, Bologna, Milan and Florence have been published. G.'s writings are Storia della musica (1899; a series of 10 lectures); Dell'arte d'interpretare la scrittura della musica vocale del Cinquecento (1902); Storia della Semiografia musicale (1905); I caratteri peculiari del Melodramma italiano (1913).

Gassier, L.-Édouard, dramatic baritone; b. France, 1822; d. Havana, Dec. 18, 1871. Début at the Opéra-Comique, Paris, 1845; he sang in Italy; married (1848) the Spanish singer Josefa Fernandez [d. Madrid, Oct. 8, 1866], with whom he sang successfully at Madrid, Barcelona, and Sevilla, then (1854) at the Th. Italien, Paris, and in London and Moscow.

Gass'mann, Florian Leopold, b. Brüx, Bohemia, May 3, 1723; d. Vienna, Jan. 20, 1774. He had an excellent mus. education, but his father insisted on his adopting a commercial career; G. therefore ran away from home when 12 years old, and made his way as a harper to Padre Martini in Bologna, who taught him for two years. After living at Venice in the service of Count Leonardo Veneri, he was called by Emperor Francis I (1764) to Vienna as ballet-comp.; in 1771 he succeeded Reutter as court Kapellm., and founded the 'Tonkünstler-Societät' (now the 'Haydn') for the relief of the widows and orphans of musicians. He wrote 23 operas, a quantity of orchestral and chamber-music, and much church-music. His most famous pupil, Salieri, was the teacher of G.'s two daughters, Maria Anna and Maria Theresia (Rosenbaum), distinguished opera-singers in Vienna.—Cf. R. Haas, F. G. als dramatischer Komponist, in 'Studien zur M.-W.', ii.—See Q.-Lex.

Gass'ner, Ferdinand Simon, violinist; b. Vienna, Jan. 6, 1798; d. Karlsruhe, Feb. 25, 1851. In 1816 violinist, later chorusmaster, at the National Th., Mayence; 1818, mus. director at Giessen Univ., which in 1819 made him Dr. phil. and lecturer on music. In 1826 he joined the court orch. at Darmstadt, and afterwards became teacher of singing and chorusmaster at the Theatre. From 1822–35 he publ. the 'Musikalischer Hausfreund' at Mayence; and edited, 1841–5, the 'Zeitschrift für Deutschlands Musikvereine u. Dilettanten.'—Wrote Partiturenkenntniss, ein Leitfaden zum Selbstunterricht. . . (1838; French ed. 1871, Traité de la partition); and Dirigent u. Ripienist (1846). He contributed to the Supplement of Schilling's 'Universallexikon der Tonkunst' (1842) and compiled an 'Universallexikon der Tonkunst' (1849). He composed 2 operas, several ballets, a cantata, songs, etc.

Gast, Peter. See KÖSELITZ, HEINRICH.

Gastal'don, Stanislas, b. Turin, April 7, 1861. At the age of 17 he began publishing nocturnes, ballabili, and other pieces for pf.; he has written about 300 songs, some of which have had great vogue (La musica proibita; Ti vorrei rapiti; Frate Anselmo; Donna Clara); he has been fairly successful with his operas Mala Pasqua! (Rome, 1890), Il Pater (Milan, 1894), Stellina (Florence, 1905), Il Reuccio di Caprilana (Turin, 1913). He has also written marches for military band; a piano-fantasia, La dansa delle scimmie; etc.

Gastinel, Léon-Gustave-Cyprien, born Villers, n. Auxonne (Côte d'Or), Aug. 15, 1823; d. Fresnes-les-Rungis, Nov., 1906. Pupil of Halévy at Paris Cons., taking 1st Gr. prix de Rome for his cantata Vélasquez in 1846. A successful comp. of comic operas, he produced Le Miroir (1853), l'Opéra aux fenêtres ((1857), Titus et Bérénice (1860), Le Buisson vert (1861), Le Barde (Nice, 1896), and the well-received ballet Le Rêve (Grand Opéra, 1890); besides 4 operas not prod.: La Kermesse, Eutatès, Ourania and La Tulipe bleue; also 4 oratorios and 3 solemn masses, orch. comps., chamber-music, choruses, etc.

Gastoué [găh-stwā'], Amédée, b. Paris, March 13, 1873. Studied piano and harm. with A. Deslandres (1890), harmony with Lavignac (1891), then organ with Guilmant and cpt. and comp. with A. Magnard. From 1896–1905 he was editor of 'Revue du Chant Grégorien'; in 1897 he began to contribute to the 'Tribune de St.-Gervais,' became editor in 1904, and on the death of Ch. Borde (1909) editor-in-chief and dir.; prof. of Greg. Chant at the Schola Cantorum since its foundation (1896); mus. critic of 'La Semaine Littéraire' since 1905; app. advisory member of the Pontifical Commission of the Editio Vaticana in 1905; at the internat. congress of the Int. M. G., in 1914, he was commissioned to organize and direct at La Ste.-Chapelle a series of 'Primitifs de la Musique Française' (works of the 11th-14th cents.). For many years he was org. and m. de ch. at St.-Jean-Baptiste-de-Belleville, where he also gave concerts of works in the Palestrina style; Laureate of the 'Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres' and commander of the 'Order of St. Gregory the Great.'—Compositions: Op. 9, Missa Paschalis, a capp. (also arr. a 3 w. org.); op. 15, Messe brève; op. 19, do.; op. 24, Petite Messe; op. 34, Messe solennelle, w. 2 orgs.; op. 14, Au Christ Rédempteur, cantata for soli, ch. and org.; op. 31, Jeanne d'Arc, for recitation, soli, ch. and orch.; op. 36, incid. mus. to G. Gatayes [găh-tā'], Félix, son of Guillaume; b. Paris, 1809. Orchestral comp. and good pianist, chiefly self-taught; for 20 years on concert-tours in Europe, America, and Australia. Wrote fine symphonies and overtures; later devoted himself to composing military music.

Gatayes, Guillaume-Pierre-Antoine, b. Paris, Dec. 20, 1774; d. there Oct., 1846. Guitar-player and song-composer; he publ. trios for guitar, flute and vln.; duets for 2 guitars, for guitar and piano, for guitar and vln. (or flute), for harp and horn, for harp and guitar; also guitar soli, and harp-sonatas. Wrote 3 Methods for guitar, and one for harp.

Gatayes, Joseph-Léon, son of the preceding; b. Paris, Dec. 25, 1805; d. there Feb. 1, 1877. Excellent harpist, and composer of soli, duets and études for harp. Musical critic for several Paris papers.

Ga'thy [-tē], August, b. Liège, May 14, 1800; d. Paris, April 8, 1858. Pupil of F. Schneider in Dessau (1828–30); lived 1830–41 in Hamburg, editing a 'Musikalisches Conversationsblatt'; also publ. (1835) a 'Mus. Conversationslexikon' (2d ed. 1840; 3d ed., rev. by Reissmann, 1873; a valuable work); transl. into Ger. Berlioz' Voyage musical en Allemagne (1844). From 1841, music-teacher in Paris.—Songs.

Gatti-Casazza [-zăht'tsăh], Giulio, distinguished impresario; b. Udine, Italy, Feb. 3, 1869. He was educated at the universities of Ferrara and Bologna, and grad. from the Naval Engineering School at Genoa; when his father, who had been chairman of the Board of Directors of the Munic. Th. at Ferrara, accepted a position in Rome in 1893, the young man abandoned his career as engineer and became dir. of the theatre. His extraordinary ability attracted the attention of the Viscount di Modrone and A. Boito, who, in 1898, offered him the directorship of La Scala at Milan. During the ten years of his administration the famous institution came to occupy the first place among the opera-houses of Italy; he introduced into Italy Wagner's later works in the vernacular, and not until then did a real appreciation of these masterpieces on the part of Italian audiences begin. Since 1908 he has been Gen. Dir. of the M. O. H., and the period of his administration has been, both artistically and financially, the most prosperous in the history of the house; he vastly improved the orch., chorus and all mechanical departments, so as to produce an almost perfect ensemble; no school or nation is unduly favored; one of his first suggestions to the Board of Directors was to offer a $10,000 prize for the encouragement of native operatic composers (won by H. Parker with Mona, 1912); the doors were opened to Amer. composers (Converse, Herbert, Damrosch), and eminent foreign composers gladly accepted invitations to have the world-première of new works take place at the M. O. H. (Humperdinck, Puccini, Giordano, Granados); the list of novelties produced is a long one, an average of 3 having been brought out every season; besides, there have been noteworthy revivals of older works. On April 3, 1910, G.-C. married the dramatic soprano Frances Alda.

Gatty, Sir Alfred Scott, b. Ecclesfield, Yorkshire, April 26, 1847. In 1880 he was app. Rouge Dragon; Poursuivant of Arms, Heralds' College, London, 1886–1904; since then Knight of Justice of the Order of St. John; knighted in 1904.—Works: 2 operettas, Sandford and Merton's Christmas Party (1880) and Not at Home (1886); the mus. plays for children Rumpelstiltkin, The Goose Girl, The Three Bears; 4 vols. of 'Plantation Songs' and 3 vols. of 'Little Songs for Little Voices'.

Gatty, Nicholas Comyn, b. Bradfield, England, Sept. 13, 1874. He was educated at Downing Coll., Cambridge (A.B., 1896; Mus. B., 1898); then pupil of Sir C. V. Stanford at R. C. M.; org. to the Duke of York's R. Mil. School at Chelsea; mus. critic of 'Pall Mall Gazette,' 1907–14; also has acted as asst.-cond. at Cov. G.—Works: The 1-act operas Greysteel (London, 1906), Duke or Devil (ib., 1909), The Tempest (not yet prod.); Milton's On Time, for soli, ch. and orch.; Vars. for orch.; a piano-concerto; a string-quartet; several choruses.

Gaudenzi, Giuseppe, dramatic tenor; b. Bologna, 1880. Student at Bologna Univ., graduating in 1898; practised law for 3 years, also studying vln. and singing; after numerous appearances as an amateur, made professional début as Canio (Pagliacci) at Florence in Nov., 1906; met with instant success, and sang at Bologna and Rome; scored special success at La Scala in Andrea Chénier; 1909–13 member of the Boston Op. Co.; has sung since then in the principal Italian cities and in South America; created chief tenor rôles in Cortopassi's Santa Poesia and the Ital. premières of Boris Godunov and Elektra.

Gaul, Alfred Robert, b. Norwich, Engl., April 30, 1837; d. Edgbaston, Birmingham, Sept. 13, 1913. A chorister in the cathedral at 9, he was articled to Dr. Buck; was org. at Fakenham, Birmingham, and Edgbaston; graduated (1863) as Mus. Bac., Cantab.; became cond. of the Walsall Philharmonic in 1887, then teacher and cond. at The Birmingham and Midland Inst., and teacher at King Edward's High School for Girls and at the Blind Asylum.—Works: An oratorio, Hezekiah (1861); several cantatas, some of which (Ruth and The Holy City) are popular in the U. S.; Passion music; the 96th Psalm; an ode, A Song of Life; glees, vocal trios and duets, songs and part-songs, etc.

Gaul, Harvey Bartlett, b. New York, April 11, 1881. Studied harmony, comp. and organ there with G. F. Le Jeune and Dudley Buck (1895). Later (1906), in England, he studied comp. with A. R. Gaul and Dr. Armes. In Paris he attended the Cons. and the Schola Cantorum; studied comp. and orchestration with V. d'Indy, and organ with Widor, Guilmant and Decaux (1910).—At 17 he was asst.-organist at St. John's Chapel, New York; later, organist at St. Luke's Chapel, Paris, Emmanuel Ch., Cleveland, and Calvary Ch., Pittsburgh (his present position, 1916).—Works: Oratorios, cantatas, other church choral music, songs, organ-pieces, etc.; he is also well known as a critic and contributor to the music magazines.

Gaultier [goh-t'yā'], Aloysius-Édouard-Camille (Abbé), b. Italy, circa 1755; d. Paris, Sept. 19, 1818. Was an innovator with regard to methods for teaching the young; and publ. Éléments de musique propre à faciliter aux enfants la connaissance des notes . . . (1789).

Gaultier, Pierre, b. Cioutat, Provence, 1642; drowned at Cette, Sept., 1697; he purchased the patent for an operatic enterprise at Marseilles, from Lully, the first performance being that of his own opera, Le Triomphe de la paix (1687).

Gauntlett, Henry John, b. Wellington, Shropshire, July 9, 1805; d. Kensington, London, Feb. 21, 1876. A lawyer by profession, he was likewise an excellent musician, org. in several churches, and Mus. Doc., Lambeth, 1843. He was chiefly instrumental (with the assistance of the organ-builder Wm. Hill) in introducing the C organ, instead of the earlier F and G organs, into England. He composed many anthems, hymns, songs, glees, and organ-pieces, and publ. several valuable compilations of church-music.

Gauthier [goh-t'yā'], Gabriel, b. in the dept. of Saône-et-Loire, France, in 1808; lost his sight when 11 months old, and entered the Paris Inst. for the Blind in 1818, where he was later instructor (1827–40). He afterwards became org. of St.-Étienne-du-Mont, Paris.—Publ. Répertoire des maîtres de chapelle (1842–5, 5 vols.); Considérations sur la question de la réforme du plain-chant . . . (1843); and Le mécanisme de la composition instrumentale (1845).

Gauthiers-Villars [goh-t'yā' vē-yahr'], Henri (called Willy), b. Villiers-sur-Orge, France, Aug. 10, 1859. Music critic for the 'Revue des Revues'; writer for the 'Revue Internationale de musique,' the 'Écho de Paris' (over the signature 'L'ouvreuse du Cirque'), and other Paris papers. Several volumes of his numerous criticisms have been published: Lettres de l'ouvreuse, Bains de sons, Rythmes et rires, La mouche de croches, Entre deux airs, Notes sans portées, La colle aux quintes, etc.; also Bizet, in 'Musiciens célèbres' (1912).

Gautier, Jean-François-Eugène, b. Vaugirard, n. Paris, Feb. 27, 1822; d. Paris, April 3, 1878. Pupil of Habeneck (vln.) and Halévy (comp.) at the Cons.; 1848, 2d cond. at the Th.-Lyrique, and in 1864 chef du chant at the Th. Italien; also prof. of harm. at the Cons., and in 1872 prof. of history. For several years he was m. de chap. at Saint-Eugène. He also wrote for various papers.—Works: 14 comic operas; an oratorio, La mort de Jésus; a cantata, Le 15 août, an Ave Maria, etc.

Gautier, Théophile, b. Tarbes, France, Aug. 31, 1811; d. Paris, Oct. 23, 1872. He edited for years the dramatic feuilleton of the 'Presse' and the 'Moniteur Universelle'; and publ. Histoire de l'art dramatique en France depuis 25 ans (1859, 6 small vols.). Interesting observations on music and musicians are to be found in his Histoire du romantisme (1873), Portraits contemporains (1874) and Souvenirs du Théâtre (1883).

Gaveaux [găh-voh'], Pierre, b. Béziers, Hérault, Aug., 1761; d. Paris, Feb. 5, 1825. A pupil of Franz Beck at Bordeaux, and tenor at the church of Saint-Séverin; opera-singer at Bordeaux, Montpellier, and (1789) Paris (Opéra-Comique).—Works: 33 operas, chiefly for the Th. Feydeau.—See Q.-Lex.

Gaviniés [găh-vē-ñā'], Pierre, brilliant violinist, styled by Viotti 'the French Tartini'; b. Bordeaux, May 26, 1726; d. Paris, Sept. 9, 1800. Self-taught in great measure, his expressive and elevated style, formed upon that of the old Italian masters, created a profound impression at his début in a Concert Spirituel (1741)—a concert-enterprise established by himself and Gossec. He settled in Paris as a concert-player and teacher; in 1795 he was app. prof. of vln. at the Cons. He had numerous distinguished pupils, and is considered, in France, the founder of the French school of violin-playing. He brought out a 3-act comic opera, Le Prétendu, in 1760; and publ., for vln., 6 concertos; 6 sonatas; Les 24 Matinées, studies for vln. in all the keys; 3 more sonatas; his celebrated Romance de Gaviniés, etc.

Gavron'ski [Gawronski], Woitech, b. Seimony, near Vilna, June 27, 1868; pupil of Strobl and Sigmund Noskowski at the Warsaw Mus. Inst.; then conductor of an orchestra in Vilna; after studying in Berlin and Vienna, he opened a music-school in Orel; now living in Warsaw.—Works: The operas Marja and Pojata, a symphony, 3 string-quartets (one won the Leipzig Paderewski prize in 1898), many piano-pieces, songs, etc.

Gay, John, the librettist of The Beggar's Opera; b. Barnstaple, Devon, Sept., 1685; d.

London, Dec. 4, 1732. The opera was brought out in London, Jan. 29, 1728; its immense popularity for a century was due both to pungent satire and the popularity of the English and Scotch folk-tunes employed. The perf. of a sequel, Polly, was forbidden by the government, but the score was printed in 1729; on its first perf. in 1777 it made a fiasco, because the conditions satirized were no longer understood.

Gay, Maria, dramatic contralto; b. Barcelona, June 13, 1879. Until she was 16 her great ambition was to become a sculptress; a six months' imprisonment for having sung a revolutionary song then awakened her musical instincts, and she began to study the violin, on which her progress was very rapid. Pugno, on one of his tours of Spain, hearing her sing, was so impressed by the natural beauty and volume of her voice that he immediately engaged her for some of his concerts; a few months later, at a concert with Ysaÿe at Brussels, the director of the Th. de la Monnaie heard her and asked her to study the rôle of Carmen. Although she had had no instruction in singing, she made her début five days later, creating a sensation (1902). Now she began to feel the necessity of regular training, and spent the next year in serious study with Mme. Ada Adiny in Paris; when she reappeared, she was a finished artist, and has made triumphal tours of Belgium, Germany, France, Russia, Spain and England; in 1908–9 she sang at the M. O. H.; 1910–12, with the Boston Opera Co., and since 1913 has been a member of the Chicago Op. Co. In 1913 she married the tenor Giovanni Zenatello. Her répertoire comprises the rôles of Carmen, Dalila, Amneris, Azucena, Brangäne, Geneviève (Pelléas et Mélisande), Orfeo, Santuzza, Maddalena (Rigoletto), Suzuki (Madama Butterfly), Charlotte (Werther), La Mère (Louise), Carmela (Giojelli della Madonna), Pilar (Habanera), Lia (l'Enfant prodigue), etc.

Gaynor, Mrs. Jessie Smith, b. St. Louis, Feb. 17, 1863. Pupil of L. Maas (pf.), A. J. Goodrich and A. Weidig (theory); has taught in Chicago, St. Louis and St. Joseph, Mo.; known chiefly as a composer of charming songs for children; has publ. Songs of the Child World (2 books), Playtime Songs, Lilts and Lyrics, Melody Pictures for Little Players; a children's operetta, The House that Jack Built.

Gaztambide [găth-tăhm-bē′dĕ], Joaquin, b. Tudela, Navarra, Feb. 7, 1822; d. Madrid, March 18, 1870. Pupil of Madrid Cons.; cond. of the Concerts and one of the founders of the 'Concert Society'; also honorary prof. at the Cons.— Works, 44 zarzuelas (operettas) which had immense success.—Xavier Gaztambide, a younger relation, also wrote zarzuelas.

Gazzani′ga, Giuseppe, b. Verona, Oct., 1743; d. Crema, 1819. A pupil, at Naples, of Porpora and Piccinni; on going to Venice in 1770, he met Sacchini, who helped him to bring out his first opera, Il finto cieco, at Vienna (1770). He wrote 32 more operas, mostly for Italian theatres; his Il Convitato di pietra (Bergamo, 1788; at Lucca, 1792, as Don Giovanni Tenorio) is interesting as identical in subject with Mozart's Don Giovanni. In 1791, G. was app. m. di capp. of Crema cathedral, for which he wrote considerable sacred music (masses, a Stabat Mater, a Te Deum, etc.) and 4 oratorios.—See Q.-Lex.

Gear, George Frederick, b. London, May 21, 1857. Concert-pianist and comp.; pupil of Dr. Wylde and J. F. Barnett; gained a scholarship in 1872 at the London Acad. of Mus., in which he is professor. Gebauer, François-René, b. Versailles, 1773; d. Paris, July 6, 1844. Bassoonist, pupil of his brother Michel, and of Devienne. Prof. of bassoon at Cons., 1796–1802, and after 1825; member of Grand Opéra orch., 1801–26. —Works for wind-instrs.: Quintets, quartets, trios, duets, sonatas, études, and symphonies concertantes; also overtures, military marches, and pot-pourris. Wrote a Method for bassoon.

Gebauer [gā′bowr], Franz Xaver, born Eckersdorf, n. Glatz, 1784; d. Vienna, Dec. 13, 1822. From 1816, choirmaster at the Augustiner Hofpfarrkirche, Vienna; in 1819 he founded the celebrated 'Concerts spirituels,' being their first cond.; he was also a member of the 'Gesell. d. Musikfreunde,' and a friend of Beethoven.—Publ. songs and part-songs.

Gebauer, Michel-Joseph, b. La Fère, Aisne, in 1763; d. Dec., 1812, during the retreat from Moscow. At 14 he was an oboist in the Royal Swiss Guard; and became an expert violinist and viol-player. In 1791, oboist in the Garde Nationale; from 1794–1802, prof. at the Cons.; thereafter bandmaster of the Garde des Consuls, and later of the Imperial Guard, having to accompany the army on various campaigns, during which he studied and profited by German military music. His marches for band (over 200) were very popular; he publ. many duets for 2 vlns., for vln. and vla., for 2 flutes, for flute and horn, flute and bassoon, etc.; also quartets for flute, clar., horn and bassoon.

Ge'bel, Franz Xaver, b. Fürstenau, near Breslau, 1787; d. Moscow, 1843. Pupil of Albrechtsberger and Abbé Vogler; Kapellm. at Leopoldstadt Th., Vienna, in 1810; later at theatres in Pest and Lemberg; from 1817, piano-teacher in Moscow.—Works: Operas, a mass, 4 symphonies, overtures, string-quintets and -quartets, many piano-pieces, etc.

Ge'bel, Georg (Sr.), b. Breslau, 1685; d. there 1750. A runaway tailor's apprentice, he studied under Winkler and Krause, became org. at Brieg (1709), and at Breslau (1713). He invented a clavichord with quarter-tones, and a clavicymbalum with a pedal-keyboard. His numerous comps. (a Passion oratorio, cantatas, masses, psalms, canons [up to 30 parts!], organ-pieces, clavichord-music, etc.) are unpublished.

Ge'bel, Georg (Jr.), b. Brieg, Silesia, Oct. 25, 1709; d. Rudolstadt, Sept. 24, 1753. Pupil of his father; in 1729, 2d org. at St. Maria Magdalene, Breslau, and Kapellm. to the Duke of Öls. In 1735 he joined Count Brühl's orch. at Dresden, where he met Hebenstreit, the inventor of the Pantalon, and learned to play that instr. In 1747 he was app. Kapellm. to the Prince of Schwarzburg-Rudolstadt. A very prolific composer; wrote, while in Rudolstadt, 12 operas, 2 Passions, 2 Christmas cantatas, sets of cantatas for several years, more than 100 orch. symphonies, partitas, and concertos, etc.; and in Breslau a great variety of instrl. and vocal music.

Geb'hard, Heinrich, born Sobernheim, Rhine Prov., July 25, 1878. As a boy of 10 he came with his parents to Boston; studied there piano and comp. with Clayton Johns until 1895, when he went to Vienna; after four years of study under Leschetizky he returned to Boston; made his pianistic début with Boston Symph. Orch. in 1900; since then he has been heard with the principal orchestras and chamber-music organizations; also in numerous recitals; he is an excellent interpreter of the classics and romanticists, but shows also a decided liking for the moderns (Loeffler, Strauss, d'Indy, etc.). He has written a string-quartet, a sonata for piano and vln., and many piano-pieces.

Gebhar'di, Ludwig Ernst, b. Nottleben, Thuringia, Jan. 1, 1787; d. Erfurt, Sept. 4, 1862. Organist and music-teacher at Erfurt Seminary. Publ. several collections of organ-pieces; also school-songs, a Choralbuch, a Method for organ, and a Method of Thorough-bass (1828–35, 4 vols., frequently republ.).

Meere, Der wilde Jäger, Der neue Tannhäuser; 2 'cycles' for soli, chorus and orch., Sansara and Golgatha; 4 Symphonische Fresken for orch.; orchestral episodes; songs; etc.

Geis'tinger, Maria ['Marie'] Charlotte Cäcilia, b. Graz, Styria, July 26, 1836; d. Rastenfeld, Sept. 29, 1903. Brilliant operetta-singer (soprano), chiefly in Vienna, but also in Prague, Leipzig, Berlin, etc. In 1897 she sang with success in New York. Inimitable in Strauss rôles.

Gelinek [gā'-], Hermann Anton (called Cervetti), b. Horzeniowecs, Bohemia, Aug. 8, 1709; d. Milan, Dec. 5, 1779. A priest in the Premonstrant Abbey at Seelau, who, wearied of monastic discipline, fled to Naples, where he assumed the name of Cervetti, and became noted as a violinist.—Publ. works: Violin-concertos and sonatas; church-music and organ-pieces in MS.

Gelinek, Joseph, Abbé, b. Selcz, Bohemia, Dec. 3, 1758; d. Vienna, April 13, 1825. On Mozart's recommendation he became 'Claviermeister' (pf.-tutor) in the family of Count Kinsky, whom he followed to Vienna; here he publ. a vast number of variations, fantasias, etc., on popular themes (125 down to 1815), brilliant in sound, but of slight artistic value. G.'s chamber-music (trios, sonatas for vln., and for pf., etc.) is on a par with the above.—See Q.-Lex.

Geminiani [jĕh-mē-ñah'nē], Francesco, violinist and writer; b. Lucca, circa 1674; d. Dublin, Sept. 17, 1762. A pupil of Scarlatti, Corelli, and Lunati (called 'il Gobbo'); in 1714 he settled in London, where he won reputation as a teacher and concert-player; indeed, he is credited with having introduced into England an improved (simplified) system of violin-playing. He also publ. the earliest known violin-method, Art of Playing the Violin (1740; 2d ed. entitled The Entire New and Complete Tutor for the Violin French and German translations); further (but of minor importance) Lessons for the Harpsichord, Art of Playing the Guitar, Guida armonica (1742, English; also French and Dutch), Supplem. to the Guida armonica, Art of Accompaniment (1755), Rules for playing in a true taste on violin, German flute, violoncello, harpsichord, Treatise on Good Taste (1747), Treatise on Memory, The Harmonical Miscellany (1755).—Violin compositions (valuable): 12 solos (op. 1, 1716), 6 concertos (op. 2, 1735), 12 solos (op. 4, 1739), 6 concertos (op. 6, 1741), 6 do. (op. 7), 12 sonatas (op. 11, 1758), 12 trios for 2 vlns. and 'cello; also 6 solos for 'cello (op. 5).—Sonatas Nos. 1, 2, and 7 are reprinted (arr. by G. Jensen); also some piano-pieces.—See Q.-Lex.

Gemün'der, August, celebrated violin-maker; b. Ingelfingen, Württemberg, March 22, 1814; d. New York, Sept. 7, 1895. In 1846, he emigrated to Springfield, Mass., and establ. a shop. Went to New York about 1860. His reputation was second to that of no contemporary maker. Instrs. of his make were used by Wilhelmj and Brodsky; his copy of Sarasate's 'Amati' was pronounced by the owner equal to the original. After his death the business was continued by his four sons (August M., Rudolf F. [d. Leonia, N. J., July 8, 1916], Charles H. and Oscar A.) as 'August Gemünder & Sons.'

Genast', Eduard Franz, baritone stage-singer; b. Weimar, July 15, 1797; d. Wiesbaden, Aug. 4, 1866. Début 1814 at Weimar as Osmin in Mozart's Entführung; 1828, director of Magdeburg theatre; 1829, accepted a life-engagement at the court theatre, Weimar. His most successful rôle was Don Giovanni.—Works: 2 operas, Die Sonnenmänner (Leipzig, 1828), and Die Verräther auf den Alpen (Weimar, 1833); songs; also publ. Aus dem Tagebuch eines alten Schauspielers (1862–6), 4 vols. of memoirs (after losing his singing-voice, he became an actor).—Of his two daughters the older, Doris (b. 1826; d. Munich, Nov. 7, 1912), became a celebrated actress, and married Joachim Raff (1859); the younger, Emilie (b. 1833; d. Weimar, March 5, 1905), achieved distinction as a concert-singer and teacher, being highly esteemed by Liszt.

Genée [zhŭ-nā'], Franz Friedrich Richard, opera-composer; b. Danzig, Feb. 7, 1823; d. Baden, n. Vienna, June 15, 1895. At first a medical student, he took up music, and studied under Ad. Stahlknecht at Berlin; was theatre-Kapellm. (1848–67) at Reval, Riga, Cologne, Aix-la-Chapelle, Düsseldorf, Danzig, Mayence, Schwerin, Amsterdam, and Prague; from 1868–78, Kapellm. at the Th. an der Wien, Vienna, then retiring to his villa at Pressbaum, near Vienna. He wrote (some with F. Zell) several of his own libretti; he also wrote libretti for Strauss, Suppé, and Millöcker.—Operettas: Der Geiger aus Tirol (1857), Der Musikfeind (1862), Die Generalprobe (1862), Rosita (1864), Der schwarze Prinz (1866), Am Runenstein (with Fr. von Flotow, 1868), Der Seekadett (1876), Nanon (1877), Im Wunderlande der Pyramiden (1877), Die letzten Mohikaner (1878), Nisida (1880), Rosina (1881), Zwillinge (1885), Die Piraten (1886), Die Dreizehn (1887).

Generali [jā-nā-rah'lē], Pietro (real name Mercandetti), b. Masserano, Piedmont, Oct. 12, 1782; d. Novara, Nov. 3, 1832. He studied under G. Massi at Rome, where he prod. his first opera, Gli Amanti ridicoli, in 1802. He brought out 51 more in the chief Italian cities, Lisbon, etc., the best being I baccanali di Roma (Venice, 1815). From 1817–1820 he was conductor in a Barcelona theatre, but his star was waning before Rossini's brilliant successes; he accepted the post of m. di capp. at Novara cath., thereafter devoting himself chiefly to sacred music (an oratorio, Il voto di Jefte, 1827; also masses, psalms, etc.). A sketch of his life, by Piccioli, Elogio di P. Generali, was publ. at Novara, 1833.

Genet, Eleazar (called il Carpentras'so, or Carpentras, from his native place); see CARPENTRAS.

Genss, Hermann, b. Tilsit, Jan. 6, 1856. Pianist, pupil of Köhler and Alb. Hahn; later of Kiel, Grell and Taubert at the Royal Hochschule für Musik at Berlin. 1877, music-teacher at Lübeck; 1880, at Hamburg; 1890, teacher of piano and theory at Sondershausen Cons.; 1891, director of Schumacher Cons., Mayence; 1893, co-director of the Scharwenka-Klindworth Cons., Berlin; 1899, prof. of piano and comp. at the Irving Institute at San Francisco, since 1905 dir.—Works: An opera, Hunold, der Spielmann (San Francisco, 1914); chamber-music, orchestral works, songs, etc.

Georges [zhôhrzh], Alexandre, b. Arras, France, Feb. 25, 1850. Pupil of the Niedermeyer School, Paris, where he is now prof. of harmony.—Works: The operas Le Printemps (Rouen, 1890), Poèmes d'amour (1892), Charlotte Corday (1901), Miarka (1905), Myrrha (1909), Sangre y Sol (Nice, 1912; all others at Paris); music to the dramas Le nouveau Monde (1883), Axel (1894), and Alceste (1891); also songs.

Gérard [zhā-rahr'], Henri-Philippe, born Liège, 1763; d. Versailles, 1848. Studied for 5 years at Rome under Gregorio Ballabane; from about 1788 he taught singing in Paris, and, from 1795, in the Cons. for over 30 years.—Publ. a Méthode de chant, in 2 parts, the second being Considérations sur la musique en général, et particulièrement sur tout qui a rapport à la vocale . . . (1819); and a simplified Traité méthodique d'harmonie . . . (1833; a resuscitation of Rameau's theories).

Gérardy [zhā-răhr-dē'], Jean, b. Spa, Belgium, Dec. 6, 1878. At the age of 5 he began to study the 'cello with R. Bellmann; 1885–9 pupil at the Cons. at Liège of Massau; on graduation he was awarded the gold medal by unanimous vote of the jury. While still a student of the Cons. he appeared in 1888 at Anstrudel in a trio with Ysaÿe and Paderewski, but his official début as soloist occurred in London in Dec., 1890, with sensational success; what caused general surprise was the maturity of his conception; the next year he created a similar sensation in Vienna, when he played with the Philh. Soc. under Hans Richter; he then spent some time in Dresden, studying with F. Grützmacher; since 1893 has toured Europe and America; visited the U. S. for the first time in 1899; 1915–16 he made the seventh visit. A famous ensemble player, having been heard frequently with Kreisler, Marteau, Hofmann and Godowsky; Ysaÿe, Godowsky and G. in 1913–14 formed a trio and toured the U. S. Among contemporary 'cellists G. has no superior; his instrument is a Stradivari, made in 1710.

Ger'ber, Ernst Ludwig, celebrated lexicographer, son and pupil of Heinrich Nikolaus; b. Sondershausen, Sept. 29, 1746; d. there June 30, 1819. He likewise studied law and music in Leipzig, becoming a skilful 'cellist and org., in which latter capacity he became (1769) his father's assistant, and succeeded him in 1775. He was also a chamber-musician. He was able to visit Weimar, Kassel, Leipzig, and other cities, and gradually gathered together a large collection of musicians' portraits; to these he appended brief biographical notices, and finally conceived the plan of writing a biographical dictionary of musicians. Though his resources, in a small town without a public library, and having to rely in great measure on material sent him by his publisher, Breitkopf, were hardly adequate to the task he undertook, his Historisch-biographisches Lexikon der Tonkünstler (Leipzig, 2 vols., 1790–92) was so well received, and brought in such a mass of corrections and fresh material from all quarters, that he prepared a supplementary edition, Neues hist.-biogr. Lexikon der Tonkünstler (4 vols., 1812–14). Though the former was intended only as a supplement to Walther's dictionary, and both are, of course, out of date, they contain much material still of value, and have been extensively drawn upon by more recent writers. He composed sonatas for pf., choral-preludes for org., and music for wind-band. The Viennese 'Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde' purchased his large library. —See Q.-Lex.

Ger'ber, Heinrich Nikolaus, b. Wenigen-Ehrich, n. Sondershausen, Sept. 6, 1702; d. Sondershausen, Aug. 6, 1775. A law-student in Leipzig from 1724–7, but also took organ-lessons of J. S. Bach; org. at Heringen in 1728, and to the court at Sondershausen from 1731. He comp. much organ-music and many pieces for clavichord and pianoforte (all in MS.); invented improvements in the organ, also a xylophone with keyboard.

Ger'bert (von Hornau), Martin, born Horb-on-Neckar, Aug. 12, 1720; d. St.-Blaise, May 13, 1793. A student in the Benedictine monastery at St.-B., he joined the order in 1736, became a priest in 1744, then prof. of theology, and 1764 Prince-Abbot of the monastery. His writings on music were De cantu et musica sacra (St.-B., 1774, 2 vols.), Vetus liturgia alemannica (1776, 2 vols.), Monumenta veteris liturgiae alemannicae (1777, 2 vols.), and Scriptores ecclesiastici de musica sacra potissimum (1784, 3 vols.); the last is still one of the most valued sources for the study of mus. history, being a collection of treatises by most noteworthy authors of the middle ages, given verbatim et litteratim—i.e., with all the mistakes of the several originals.—Cf. J. Bader, Fürstabt M. G. (Freiburg, 1875); A. Lamy, G. (Rheims, 1898).

Gerhardt [gār'-], Elena, distinguished lieder-singer (contralto), b. Leipzig, Nov. 11, 1883. Pupil of Marie Hedmont at the Leipzig Cons., 1899–1903; début at Leipzig in 1903 in recital, with A. Nikisch at the piano; her success was such that she was offered an eng. at the Opera, where she appeared as Mignon and Charlotte (Werther) in 16 performances. But the stage had no allurements for her, and she devoted herself entirely to concert and oratorio, in which fields she soon was recognized as an artist of the first rank; on her first tour of America, in 1912, she was heard with all the great orchestras and in numerous recitals; since then she has been a regular visitor every season.

Gericke [gā'rĭ-kĕh], Wilhelm, b. Graz, Styria, April 18, 1845. He was a pupil of Dessoff in the Vienna Cons. 1862–5, and then became Kapellm. of the theatre at Linz; 1874, 2d Kapellm. of the Vienna court opera (w. Hans Richter); in 1880, succeeded Brahms as cond. of the 'Gesellschaftsconcerte,' and also conducted the Singverein. From 1884–9 he was cond. of the Boston (Mass.) Symphony Orch. (his successor was Nikisch); returning to Vienna, he resumed the direction of the 'Gesellschaftsconcerte' until 1895, when he was succeeded by R. v. Perger. From 1898–1906 he again cond. the Boston Symph. Orch., succeeding Emil Paur; since then he has been living in retirement in Vienna. G. is a remarkably fine conductor and an efficient drill-master.—Publ. works, several Lieder, choruses and piano-pieces.—In MS.: Operetta Schön Hännchen (Linz, 1865); a Requiem; a concert-overture for orch.; a septet, piano-quintet, string-quartet, piano-trio, 2 sonatas for vln. and pf., 2 ditto for piano, over 100 songs and choruses, etc.

Ger'lach, Dietrich, celebrated music-printer of the 16th century at Nuremberg; succeeded Joh. v. Berg as Ulrich Neuber's partner in 1566 till the latter's death (1571); carried on the business alone until his decease in 1574, when his widow continued it till 1592. Catalogue of works from his press was publ. Frankfort-on-Main, 1609, by N. Stein.

Ger'lach, Theodor, b. Dresden, June 25, 1861. Pupil of Fr. Wüllner; student in Berlin Univ. 1883; and attracted attention by a strong work, the cantata Luther's Lob der Musica. 1884, in Italy; 1885, Kapellm. in Sondershausen Th.; 1886, of German Opera in Posen. His Epic Symphony caused his app. as Hofkapellm. in Coburg, 1891. In 1894 Kapellm. at Kassel. After holding several other posts as Kapellm. (Dresden, 1905), he settled in Karlsruhe; now (1916) dir. of the 'Musikbildungsanstalt' there.—Works: Op. 1, Vars. (F) on orig. theme, f. 'cello and pf.; op. 3, Serenade for string-orch.; op. 7, Vaterlandslied for male ch., acc. by wind-instrs.; op. 9, 6 Lieder; op. 10, Bei fröhlicher Laune, 4 part-songs; op. 11, Alle Zeit treu bereit, military march; op. 12, Ein Blick ins Frauenherz, 3 Lieder; op. 13, 5 Patriotic Songs for male ch.; op. 14, Aus seliger Zeit, 10 songs for tenor w. pf.; also Eine Bismarckrose, for tenor or bass solo. A 3-act opera, Matteo Falcone, of which G. wrote text and music, was prod. at Hanover, 1898, with great success. His experiments with 'spoken opera,' Liebeswogen (Bremen, 1904) and Das Seegespenst (Altenburg, 1914), have not met with success, and are of doubtful value; he has tried the same principle (ordinary speech over an instrl. accomp.) in his Gesprochene Lieder.

Ger'le, Hans, d. Nuremberg, 1570. He was well known, as early as 1523, as a violinist and maker of violins and lutes. His works in tablature are historically valuable.—See Q.-Lex.

German, Edward, b. Whitchurch, Engl., Feb. 17, 1862. With great natural proclivities for music, he began serious study in Jan., 1880, under W. C. Hay at Shrewsbury; in Sept. he entered the R. A. M., studying organ (Steggall), violin (Weist Hill and Burnett), theory (Banister), and comp. and orchestr. (Prout), graduating with a symphony in E m.; he was elected Fellow of the R. A. M. in 1895. In 1888–9 he cond. the orch. at the Globe Th. for 7 months; here his incidental music to Richard Mansfield's production of King Richard III was so successful that Sir Henry Irving commissioned him to write the music to Henry VIII (1892). G. was now enabled to give up teaching, and to devote himself entirely to composition. His works occupy a high place among contemporary productions in Britain: 2 symphonies, in E m. and A m.; Gypsy Suite (1892); Suite in D m. (1895); English Fantasia Commemoration (1897); symphonic poem Hamlet (1897); Symph. Ger'ster, Etelka (Mme. Gerster-Gardi'ni), accomplished stage-soprano; b. June 16, 1857, at Kaschau, Hungary; through Hellmesberger's good offices she became (1874–5) a pupil of Frau Marchesi at the Vienna Cons., and made her début at Venice, Jan. 8, 1876, as Gilda in Rigoletto, with such success that her impresario, Dr. Carlo Gardini, closed a favorable contract, under which she sang at Marseilles, Genoa, and (March, 1877) at Kroll's Th., Berlin, where she was greeted with tumultuous applause. She married Gardini in Pest, April 16, 1877, and has since then sung in the chief cities of Europe and America (Amer. tours 1878, 1883, 1887). Her wonderful voice (a high soprano) and great skill in coloratura singing made her one of the renowned singers of the century. In 1896 she opened a school for singing in Berlin. She wrote Stimmführer (1906; 2d ed. 1908).—Her husband died in Berlin, May 15, 1910.

Gervaso'ni [jär-], Carlo, writer on music; born Milan, Nov. 4, 1762; d. there June 4, 1819. For many years he was m. di capp. at the Chiesa Matrice, Borgo Faro; also a member of the Ital. Acad. of Arts and Sciences.—Publ. Scuola della musica (Parma, 1800; on the theory of mus.); Carteggio musicale (1804; his autobiography occupies 30 pages); and Nuova teoria di musica ricavata dall' odierna pratica . . . (1812).

Gesual'do, Don Carlo, Prince of Venosa; born toward the middle of the 16th century; d. 1614. Living at the epoch when the 'new music' (the homophonic style) made its appearance, he was one of the most enlightened musicians of the time, and, indeed, far in advance of his age. Like Rore, Banchieri, and Vicentino, he was a so-called 'Chromaticist'; in his works the counterpoint is enriched by ingenious expedients, the melody led with greater skill, and the music better adapted to the words.—Publ. 6 vols. of madrigals a 5 (Genoa, 1585, each part separately; an edition in score was publ. in 1613).—See Q.-Lex.

Gevaert [gĕ-vahrt'], François-Auguste, eminent Belgian comp. and musical scientist; b. Huysse, n. Oudenarde, July 31, 1828; d. Brussels, Dec. 24, 1908. Pupil of Sommère (pf.) and Mengal (comp.) at Ghent Cons., 1841–7, taking the Gr. prix de Rome for composition; from 1843 he was also org. at the Jesuit church. He produced 2 operas in 1848, with some success; lived in Paris for a year (1849–50), and was commissioned to write an opera for the Th.-Lyrique; then a year in Spain, his Fantasía sobre motivos españoles winning him the order of Isabella la Católica; he also wrote a Rapport sur la situation de la musique en Espagne (Brussels, 1851). After a short visit to Italy and Germany, he returned to Ghent in 1852, and up to 1861 brought out 9 operas in quick succession. In 1857 his festival cantata De nationale verjaerdag won him the Order of Léopold. In 1867 he was app. chef du chant at the Grand Opéra, Paris; in 1870, the German investment caused him to return home, and from 1871 he was Director of the Brussels Cons., succeeding Fétis. In this position he gave evidence of remarkable talent for organization. As cond. of the 'Concerts du Cons.' he exerted a far-reaching influence through his historical concerts, producing the works of all nations and periods. In 1873 he was elected member of the Academy, succeeding Mercadante; in 1907 he was created a baron.—Compositions: The operas Hugues de Somerghem and La Comédie à la ville (Ghent, 1848); Georgette, ou le Moulin de Fontenoy (Paris, Th.-Lyr., 1852); Le billet de Marguerite (Paris, 1854); Les Lavandières de Santarem (Paris, 1855); Quentin Durward (Paris, Op.-Com., 1858); Le Diable au moulin (P., 1859); Château-Trompette (P., 1860); La Poularde de Caux (P., 1861); Les deux amours (Baden-Baden, 1861); Le Capitaine Henriot (Paris, 1864); Pertinax (1884); also the cantatas Retour de l'armée, Jacques van Artevelde, and Le départ (for 3-part chorus); a Missa pro defunctis and Super flumina Babylonis (both for male ch. and orch.); overture Flandre au lion; ballads (Philipp van Artevelde, etc.); songs (many in the collection 'Nederlandsche Zangstukken').—Even more important than G.'s compositions are his scholarly books: Leerboek van den Gregoriaenschen Zang (1856); Traité d'Instrumentation (1863; revised and enlarged as Nouveau traité de l'Instrum., 1885; Ger. transl. by Riemann, 1887; Span. by Neuparth, 1896; Russ. by Rebikov, 1899); Histoire et Théorie de la musique de l'antiquité (2 vols., 1875, '81); Les origines du chant liturgique de l'église latine (1890; Ger. transl. by Riemann; throws new light on the Gregorian tradition); Cours méthodique d'Orchestration (2 vols., 1890; complement of Nouveau traité); La Mélopée antique dans l'église latine (1895; a monumental work); Les Problèmes musicaux d'Aristote (3 vols., 1899–1902; adopts the theories of Wèstphal, many of which have since been proved untenable); Traité d'Harmonie théorique et pratique (2 vols., 1905, '07). Edited 'Les gloires de l'Italie' (a collection of vocal numbers from operas, oratorios, cantatas, etc., of the 17th and 18th centuries); 'Recueil de chansons du XV^e^ siècle' (transcribed in modern notation); 'Vademecum de l'organiste' (classic transcriptions).—Cf. Giacomel'li [jäh-], Geminiano, b. Parma, 1686; d. Naples, Jan. 19, 1743. Dramatic composer, pupil of Capelli. After the successful performance of his opera Ipermnestra at Parma in 1704, the Duke of Parma sent him to study under Scarlatti at Naples. He became a favorite opera-composer; entered the service of the emperor Charles VI at Vienna, and returned to Naples in 1731. Of his 8 operas, Cesare in Egitto (Turin, 1735) was thought to be the best. Other works: Psalm viii for 2 tenors and bass; concert-arias with continuo.—See Q.-Lex.

Gialdini [jähl-dē'nē], Gialdino, b. Pescia, Nov. 10, 1843. Pupil of T. Mabellini at Florence. His first opera, Rosmunda (prize opera in a competition instituted by the Pergola Th., Florence), given in 1868, was unsuccessful; after prod. 2 'opere buffe,' La Secchia rapita (Florence, 1872), and L'idolo cinese (1874), in collaboration with other musicians, he gave up opera-writing, and devoted himself to conducting, a career in which he has been eminently successful. Later he again turned to dramatic composition, producing w. succ. the operas I due soci (Bologna, 1892), La Pupilla (Trieste, 1896), La Bufera (Pola, Spain, 1910). Has also written a Preghiera di sera for full orch.; a Menuetto for strings; and publ. 'Eco della Lombardia,' a collection of 50 folk-songs.

Gianel'li [jäh-], Pietro (Abbate), writer; b. Friuli, Italy, c. 1770; d. Venice, 1822 (?). Review'; member of Natl. Inst. of Arts and Letters. He has written Phases of Modern Music (1904); Edward MacDowell (1905, in 'Living Masters of Music'; rev. and enlarged as E. M. A Study, 1909); The Music of To-Morrow (1906); Guide to Strauss's 'Salome' (1907); Stories of Symphonic Music (1907); Guide to Debussy's 'Pelléas et Mélisande' (1907); Aspects of Modern Opera (1908); Nature in Music (1914). He has set to music 3 poems of W. B. Yeats (The Heart of the Woman [song]; A Dream of Death and The Curlew [for recitation w. pf.]).

Gilmore, Patrick Sarsfield, b. n. Dublin, Dec. 25, 1829; d. St. Louis, Mo., Sept. 24, 1892. He went to Canada with an English band, but soon settled in Salem, Mass., where he cond. a military band. In 1859 he went to Boston, and organized the famous 'Gilmore's Band.' As bandmaster in the Federal army at New Orleans (1864), he gave a grand mus. festival with several combined bands, introducing the novel reinforcement of strong accents by cannon-shots. He won wide renown by the 'National Peace Jubilee' (1869), and the 'World's Peace Jubilee' (1872), two monster musical festivals held at Boston; in the former, G. led an orch. of 1000 and a chorus of 10,000; in the latter, an orch. of 2000 and a chorus of 20,000; the orch. was reinforced by a powerful organ, cannon fired by electricity, anvils, and chimes of bells. After the second Jubilee, G. went to New York, and, as a popular bandmaster, travelled with his men throughout the United States and Canada, and also (1878) to Europe. He also led bands or orchestras in various resorts in and near New York.—Works: Military music, dance-music, many arrangements for band. Some of his songs were popular.

Gilse, Jan van, b. Rotterdam, May 11, 1881. Gilson [zhil-sŏhn′], Paul, Belgian composer; b. Brussels, June 15, 1865. Although he had a few lessons from an organist, Cantillon, he was practically self-taught until he entered the Brussels Cons. in 1886; studied there with Gevaert, and won the Prix de Rome in 1889 with the cantata Sinaï; since 1902, professor of harmony at the Brussels Cons., and since 1904 also at the Antwerp Cons.; since 1906, mus. critic of 'Le Soir.' The public performance of his prize-cantata attracted considerable attention; his subsequent works have won him a foremost place among modern Flemish composers.—Works: A symphony, La Mer; the symph. poems Halia and La Destinée; a Norwegian Suite for wind-instrs.; an orchestral Fantasy on Canadian folk-themes; a Scotch Rhapsody; Scotch Dances; Suite pastorale; a Septet, 2 Humoresques, and minor pieces for wind-instrs.; a cantata for the Brussels Exposition (1897); the operas Alvar (Brussels, 1895), Gens de Mer (ib., 1902; as Zeevolk at Antwerp, 1904), Prinses Zonnenschijn (Antwerp, 1903); a ballet, La Captive (Brussels, 1902); incid. music to Liefdebloem, Alva, Rooversliefde; a dram. cantata, Francesca da Rimini; David and Les Suppliantes, for soli, ch. and orch. He is the author of a valuable treatise on orchl. dynamics, Le Tutti orchestral (1913).

Giner [hē-när′], Salvador, b. Valencia, Jan. 17, 1832; d. there Nov. 3, 1911. Pupil at the Valencia Cons. of Pascal Gascons; comp. of Las cuarto Estaciones, symphony; Feria de Valencia, cantata; Judit, oratorio; etc. Of ten operas Sagunto (Valencia, 1891) and El Soñador (ib., 1901) achieved more than average success.

Ginguené [zhăn-g'nā′], Pierre-Louis, b. Rennes, April 25, 1748; d. Paris, Nov. 16, 1816. A writer on the history of literature, member of the Academy, etc. Touching music he publ. Lettres et articles sur la musique (1783; his collected journalistic papers on the Gluck-Piccinni controversy); the historical articles in the 'Dict. de mus.' of the 'Encyclopédie méthodique' (1791–1818; only in vol. i); Notice sur la vie et les ouvrages de Piccinni (1800; partial to Piccinni); Rapport . . sur une nouvelle exposition de la séméiographie, ou notation musicale des Grecs (1815). Interesting matter on Guido, the Troubadours, etc., is contained in his Histoire littéraire de l'Italie, continued by Salfi (1811–35, 14 vols.).

Giordani [jôr-dah'nē], Giuseppe (called Giordanello), brother of Tommaso; b. Naples, 1744; d. Fermo, Jan. 4, 1798. Prolific opera-comp.; fellow-student of Cimarosa and Zingarelli at the Cons. of Loreto. From 1772–82 he was a popular teacher and comp. in London; returning to Italy, he was eng. in dramatic comp. till 1791, when he was app. m. di capp. of Fermo cath.—Works: About 30 operas (Il Bacio, 1794, was quite in vogue at London), 6 pf.-quintets, 3 pf.-quartets, 6 string-quartets, 30 trios, 6 vln.-concertos, pf.-sonatas for 2 and 4 hands; preludes and exercises for pf.; soprano duets; 5 books of Canzonette for solo voices; other secular and sacred music in MS.—See Q.-Lex.

Giordani, Tommaso (real family-name Carmine), b. Naples, in 1744; died Dublin, after 1816. In 1762 he appeared in buffo rôles at the Haymarket Th., London; taught music for a while, and then undertook the management of an Italian opera-troupe at Dublin; failing, he remained in Dublin as a teacher.—Works: An opera, Perseverance (Dublin, 1789); an oratorio, Isaac; trios for flutes and bass, and 5 books of flute-duos; also duos for 'cello, pf.-pieces, songs, etc.—See Q.-Lex.

Giorda'no [jôr-dah'noh], Umberto, born Foggia, Aug. 26, 1867; pupil there of Gaetano Briganti, later of Paolo Serrao in the Naples Cons. In 1889 he competed for the Sonzogno prize, handing in the 1-act opera Marina; although Mascagni won with Cavalleria Rusticana, Marina attracted favorable attention, and G. was commissioned to write an opera in 3 acts; he chose Mala Vita, the book by N. Daspuro after a work by Di Giacomo and Cognetti. Prod. at the Argentina Th., Rome, Feb. 21, 1892, with a cast including the Bellincioni and Stagno, it had ephemeral success. (Remodelled as Il Voto, it was brought out at Milan in 1897.) Next came the 2-act opera seria Regina Diaz, book by Targioni-Tozzetti and Menasci (Fondo Th., Rome, Feb. 21, 1894; unsucc.). His first triumph was won with the 4-act opera seria Andrea Chénier, book by Luigi Illica (La Scala, Milan, March 28, 1896; N. Y., Nov. 13, 1896); followed by the 3-act opera Fedora (T. Lirico, Milan, Nov. 17, 1898; N. Y., Dec. 5, 1906), book by Colautti after Sardou's drama, and the 3-act opera Siberia, book by Illica (La Scala, Milan, Dec. 19, 1903; Chicago, Jan. 31, 1906); neither scored a decided success; still less successful were Marcella (Milan, 1907) and Mese Mariano (Palermo, 1910), while even the glamour of a world-première at the M. O. H. could not assure genuine success to Madame Sans-Gêne, book by Renato Simoni (N. Y., Jan. 25, 1915; Turin, Feb. 28). G. is Chev. of the Legion of Honor, and Commander of the Crown of Italy.

Giornovi'chi. See JARNOVIC.

Giorza [jôr'tsăh], Paolo, b. Milan, 1838; d. Seattle, Wash., May 4, 1914. Pupil of his father (an organist and dram. singer), and La Croix (cpt.). Devoted himself exclusively to writing dances, marches, and ballet-music, in which latter genre he achieved great renown. Among over 40 ballets, the most successful were Un Fallo (1853), I Bianchi ed i Negri ('53), Il Giuocatore ('54), Il Conte di Monte-Cristo ('57), Rodolfo ('58), Cleopatra ('59), La Contessa d'Egmont ('59), Leonilda ('65), and Fiammella ('66), all at La Scala, Milan; Un' Aventura di Carnevale a Parigi (Genoa, '63), Farfalletta (London, '63); also La Capanna dello zio Tom, Folgore, La Silfide a Pechino, Un ballo nuovo, Cherubini, o la rosa di Posilippo, Pedrilla, etc. One opera, Corrado, consule di Milano (Milan, 1860) was unsuccessful. G. lived for some years in New York, then in London and San Francisco; since 1906 in Seattle.

Giovacchini [joh-văh-kē'nē], Giovacchino, excellent violinist and teacher; born Florence, June 3, 1825; d. there Jan. 8, 1906. Pupil of Giorghetti; for a time he was court violinist to the Grand Duke of Tuscany, first violin in the Florentine Quartet founded by Dr. A. Basevi, and professor at the R. Istituto Musicale. Among his pupils were Consolo, Chiosti and Ragghianti.

Giovanel'li, Ruggiero, b. Velletri, circa 1560; d. Rome, Jan. 7, 1625. In 1587 he was maestro in the ch. of San Luigi de' Francesi at Rome, later in the Collegium Germanicum; in 1594 he succeeded Palestrina as maestro at St. Peter's, and in 1599 joined the Pontifical Chapel. One of the most famous masters of the Roman School; of his works there have been printed 3 books of madrigals (a 5 1586, '87, '89); 2 of Madrigali sdruccioli a 4 (1587); 2 books of motets a 5–8 (1592); Canzonette and Villanelle a 3 (1592, 1593); also scattered madrigals in the colls. of Scotto and Phalèse. In the Vatican Library are many sacred works in MS.—To G. was entrusted, by Pope Paul V, the preparation of a new edition of Graduals (1614, 1615, 2 vols.). —See Q.-Lex.

Giraldo'ni [jē-], Leone, distinguished baritone stage-singer; b. Paris, 1824; d. Moscow, Sept. 30 (?), 1897. Début at Lodi, 1847; sang at La Scala from 1850, and terminated his stage-career at Rome in 1885. Taught for several years at the Moscow Cons. Publ. Guida teorico-pratico ad uso degli artisti cantanti (Bologna, 1864; 2d ed. 1884); and Compendium Metodo analitico, filisofico e fisiologico per la educazione della voce (Milan, 1889).

Girard [zhē-rahr'], Narcisse, b. Mantes, France, Jan. 27, 1797; d. Paris, Jan. 16, 1860. A pupil of Baillot (vln.) at Paris Cons., he was from 1830–2 m. de chap. at the Opéra Italien, and 1837–46 at the Opéra-Comique, then succeeding Habeneck as cond. at the Grand Opéra, also becoming (1847) prof. of vln. at the Cons. and conductor of the concerts; in 1856 he was app. general mus. dir. of the Grand Opéra.—His two 1-act operas, Deux Voleurs (Opéra-Com., 1841), and Le Conseil des Dix (1842), were short-lived.

Giraudet [zhĕ-roh-dā'], Alfred-Auguste, dram. basso and famous teacher; b. Étampes, 1845. Pupil of Delsarte; he sang some time in minor theatres in the provinces before making his début in Paris at the Th.-Lyrique (1868) as Mephistopheles; 1871–2 in Bordeaux as first bass; after a tour of Italy he returned to Paris, where he sang at the Th. Italien (1874), Op.-Com. (1875), and Opéra (1880); here he sang the principal bass rôles in Les Huguenots, l'Africaine, Le Prophète, La Juive, Aida, Hamlet, etc.; created Dante in Thomas's Francesca da Rimini (1882); in 1883 he retired from the stage, and devoted himself to teaching; from 1888–1900 he was prof. at the Cons. He has publ. Mimique; Physionomie et Gestes (1895).

Gizziello. See CONTI, GIOACCHINO.

Gladstone, Francis Edward, noted English organist; b. Summertown, n. Oxford, Mar. 2, 1845. Pupil of S. Wesley, 1859–64; has filled positions as org. at Weston-super-Mare, Llandaff, Chichester, Brighton, London, and Norwich. After embracing the Catholic faith, he was choir-director at St. Mary of the Angels, Bayswater, until 1894. In 1876 he took the degree of Mus. Bac., Cantab.; in 1879, Mus. Doc.; prof. of cpt., etc., at Trinity Coll., London, in 1881; prof. of harm. and cpt. at R. C. M., 1883–1910.—Works: An oratorio, Philippi (1883), much church-music, an overture, some chamber-music (all in MS.); publ. organ-pieces, The Organ-Student's Guide and A Treatise on Strict Counterpoint (1906).

Glarea'nus, Henricus (real name Heinrich Lo'ris [Latinized Loritus]), b. Glarus (whence his appellation), 1488, d. Freiburg, Baden, March 28, 1563. After attending the Latin School at Bern, he studied theology at Cologne, also music (under Cochläus); here, in 1512, he was crowned poet-laureate by Emperor Maximilian I. After teaching and lecturing in Basel and Paris, he settled in Freiburg, lectured on history and literature, and died isolated and embittered.—He wrote Isagoge in musicen (Basel, 1516); his principal work is the Dodecachordon (1547); in it he contends for 12 church-modes instead of the usually-accepted 8; it is also valuable as a source for the history of mensural music, notation, and early music-printing. P. Bohn publ. a German translation, with the musical examples in modern notation, in the 12th annual vol. of the 'Gesellsch. für Musikforschung.'—J. L. Wonegger publ. Musicae epitome ex Glareani Dodekachordo (1557; 2d ed. 1559; in German: Uss Glareani Musik ein Usszug . . . 1557). Glareanus' revised ed. of Boethius's writings, edited by M. Rota, was published in 1570.—Biographies of G. have been written by H. Schreiber (Freiburg, 1837) and O. F. Fritzsche (Frauenfeld, 1890).

Gla'senapp, Carl Friedrich, born Riga, Oct. 3, 1847; d. there April 1, 1915. He studied philosophy at Dorpat; since 1875, headmaster at Riga. An ardent admirer of Wagner's art, he devoted his entire life to the study of the master's works, and was one of the principal contributors to the 'Bayreuther Blätter' since their foundation. His great work is the monumental biography of Wagner, Richard Wagners Leben und Wirken, of which the first two vols. were publ. at Kassel and Leipzig (1876, '77); after the 2d ed. (1883) these were rewritten, and the entire work was issued at Leipzig as Das Leben Richard Wagners (vol. i, 1813–43 [1894]; vol. ii, 1843–53 [1896]; vol. iii, 1853–62 [1899]; vol. iv, 1862–72 [1904]; vol. v, 1872–77 [1907]; vol. vi, 1877–83 [1911]). Vols. i and ii appeared in English translation (with amplifications) by W. A. Ellis (London, 1900, '03), but after that E. continued the biogr. as an original work. G.'s other books are Wagner-Lexikon, Hauptbegriffe der Kunst- u. Weltanschauung R. W.'s (1883; jointly w. H. von Stein); Wagner-Encyklopädie, Haupterscheinungen der Kunst- u. Kulturgeschichte im Lichte der Anschauung R. W.'s (2 volumes, 1891); Siegfried Wagner (1906); S. Wagner u. seine Kunst (1911; 2d ed. 1913); he also ed. Bayreuther Briefe (1907) and Familienbriefe an R. W. (1907).

Glä'ser, Franz, b. Obergeorgenthal, Bohemia, April 19, 1798; d. Copenhagen, Aug. 29, 1861. Violin-pupil of Pixis at Prague Cons., and, at Vienna, of Heydenreich (cpt.); in 1817, Kapellm. at the Josephstädter Th., Vienna, in 1830 at the Königstädtisches Th., Berlin; from 1842, royal conductor at Copenhagen. Of 13 operas, Des Adlers Horst (Berlin, 1833) was most successful; he also wrote music for many dramas, farces, melodramas, etc.; a Festival Overture, a Funeral Cantata, etc.

Glä'ser, Karl Gotthelf, b. Weissenfels, May 4, 1784; d. Barmen, April 16, 1829. St.

at the Thomasschule, Leipzig; received his mus. training from J. A. Hiller, A. E. Müller (pf. and harm.), and Campagnoli (vln.). Studied law in Leipzig Univ., but became (1814) a teacher, musical director, and later music-dealer, in Barmen.—Publ. chorales, school song-books, pf.-music; a Neue praktische Clavierschule (1817), a Kurze Anweisung zum Choralspiel (1824), and Vereinfachter . . . Unterricht in der Theorie der Tonsetzkunst mittels eines musikalischen Compasses (1828).

Glass, Louis Christian August, b. Copenhagen, March 23, 1864. Pupil of his father, Christian Hendrik (1821–93), then at Brussels Cons. of J. de Zarembski and J. Wieniawski (pf.) and J. Servais (vcl.); has appeared both as pianist and 'cellist, but is more important as composer.—Works: 4 symphonies; 2 overtures, Der Volksfeind and Dänemark; Sommerliv, suite for orch.; a string-sextet; a pf.-trio; 4 string-quartets; a concerto for oboe and orch.; 2 vln.-sonatas; numerous works for piano (3 sonatas [E, E♭, A♭], etc.).

Glazunov [glah'zoo-nŏhv], Alexander Konstantinovitch, b. Petrograd, Aug. 10, 1865. He studied till 1883 at the Polytechnic Inst. there, and then devoted himself wholly to music, having made the acquaintance of Balakirev and Rimsky-Korsakov in 1880, the latter being his principal teacher. In 1881 his first symphony was produced, and again in 1884 at Weimar under Liszt's auspices. At the Trocadéro, in Paris, he conducted his second symphony, and other comps., in 1889; and at London, his fourth symphony (Philharm. concert). 1896–7 he cond., with Rimsky-Korsakov and Liadov, the Russian Symphony Concerts at Petrograd; 1899–1909, prof. of orchestration at the Cons.; 1909–12, dir.; he then resumed his class in orchestr.; is also a director of the Imp. Russ. Mus. Soc.—G. and Rimsky-Korsakov are undoubtedly the two greatest living Russian masters. G. himself claims to be a follower of Brahms, but that is true only in respect to his technical mastery and regard for form; on the other hand he carefully avoids all chauvinistic and futuristic tendencies; as a master of instrumentation he ranks with the best.—Cf. A. W. Ossowsky, A. K. G. His Life and Work (Petrograd, 1907; in Russian).

Gleason, Frederick Grant, b. Middletown, Conn., Dec. 17, 1848; d. Chicago, Dec. 6, 1903. Pupil of Dudley Buck at Hartford; in 1869 of Moscheles, Richter, Plaidy, Lobe, etc., at Leipzig Cons.; from 1870, at Berlin, of Loeschhorn, Weitzmann, and Haupt; later took pf.-lessons with Beringer, in London. In 1875, org. of the Asylum Hill Cong. Ch., Hartford; in 1876, of First Cong. Ch., New Britain. In 1877 he was appointed teacher of pf., organ, comp. and orchestration at the Hershey School of Music, Chicago; in 1884 he was elected examiner, director and fellow of the American College of Musicians; in 1896, president of the Chicago MS. Soc.; in 1897, pres.-general of the American Patriotic Music League; from 1900 till his death he was dir. of the Chicago Auditorium Cons.; 1884–9, also critic of the 'Tribune.'

Works: Op. 1, Three songs; op. 2, Organ-sonata in C♯m.; op. 3, Barcarole for pf.; op. 4, Episcopal churchservice; op. 5, Set of songs; op. 6, Episcopal churchservice; op. 7, Otho Visconti, grand rom. op. in 3 acts, text and music by G. (MS.; overture perf. in Old Gewandhaus, Leipzig, 1892); op. 8, Pf.-pieces; op. 9,

Gleich, Ferdinand, b. Erfurt, Dec. 17, 1816; d. Langebrück, n. Dresden, May 22, 1898. He studied philosophy and music (under Fink) at Leipzig; from 1866, manager of a theatre-bureau in Dresden. His writings, Wegweiser für Opernfreunde (1857), Handbuch der modernen Instrumentirung für Orchester und Militärmusikkorps (1860, several eds.), Die Hauptformen der Musik, populär dargestellt (1862), Charakterbilder aus der neuern Geschichte der Tonkunst (1863), and Aus der Bühnenwelt (1866), are of a light character; he composed symphonies, pf.-pieces, songs, etc. For 20 years he was critic for the 'Dresdner Anzeiger.'

Gleiss'ner, Franz, b. Neustadt-on-the-Waldnab, 1760; d. Munich, after 1815; famous as the first to print music by lithographic process, the first work so printed being a set of songs by Gleissner. He was then a partner of Falter, at Munich; in 1799 he est. a similar printing-office at Offenbach for André; went to Vienna to introduce the invention, and thence to Munich. He also wrote numerous instrl. works and some operas.

Gleitz, Karl, b. Hitzerode, near Kassel, Sept. 13, 1862. Pupil of the Leipzig Cons. and the Munich Akademie; comp. of the symph. poems Fata Morgana, Alberich's Drohung, Ahasver, Venus und Bellona, Joss Fritz, Pietà, Irrlichter; fantasy for pf. and orch.; a vln.-sonata; has also publ. Künstlers Erdenwallen (2 vols., 1896, '97).

Glen, John, b. Edinburgh, June 13, 1833; d. there Nov. 29, 1904. His father, Thomas G. (1804–73), the inventor of the 'Serpentcleide,' had established himself as a manufacturer of musical instruments, and the son succeeded to the business in 1866; he confined himself to the manufacture of bagpipes, of which he was soon recognized as the foremost manufacturer of Great Britain. But he was also a famous investigator of the sources of Scottish music. He wrote The Glen Collection of Scottish Dance Music, Strathspeys, Reels and Jigs . . . containing an Introduction on Scottish Dance Music (2 vols., 1891, '95); vol. i contains 144, vol. ii 148, tunes. His chief work is Early Scottish Melodies: including examples from MSS. and early printed works, along with a number of comparative tunes, notes on former annotators, English and other claims, and Biographical Notices, etc. (1900). 'The works of John Glen form a complete repertory of material on the subject of which he was so great and reliable an authority.' ('M. T.', Jan., 1905.)

Glière, Reinhold Moritzovitch, b. Kiev, Jan. 11, 1875. Pupil of Tanéiev and Ippolitov-Ivanov at the Moscow Cons., 1894–1900; since 1913, dir. of the Cons. and cond. of the Symph. Orch. at Kiev. As a comp. he has attracted favorable attention with his orchl. and chamber-music works, which give evidence of remarkable inventive power and fine technical workmanship.—Works: 3 Symphonies (op. 8, E♭; op. 25, C; Ilia Murometz [really a symph. poem]); op. 33, Die Sirenen, symph. poem; op. 13, Suite; op. 5, String-octet in D; 2 String-quartets (op. 2, A; op. 20, G); 3 String-sextets (op. 1, F m.; op. 7, B m.; op. 11, C); pf.-pieces and songs. He has just finished an opera, Awakened, in which folk-themes are extensively employed (1916).

Glin'ka, Michail Ivanovitch, the pioneer Russian national composer; b. Novospaskoë, near Smolensk, Russia, June 1, 1804; d. Berlin, Feb. 15, 1857. A nobleman by birth, he studied languages in Petrograd from 1817; somewhat later he studied music under Böhm (vln.), and C. Mayer (theory and pf.). In 1822 he also took pf.-lessons of Field at Moscow, and became a brilliant pianist; his op. 1 was a set of pf.-variations on an Ital. theme. From 1830 he passed four years in Venice, Milan, Rome and Naples for the sake of his health, but improving the opportunity by studying Italian vocal composition. In 1834 he studied in Berlin with S. W. Dehn; hitherto an amateur composer, he began to feel a 'mission' for dramatic work, the first fruit of which was the first Russian national opera, A Life for the Czar (Zhiznj za Zarya, or Ivan Sussanina), produced at Petrograd, Dec. 9, 1836, with great success, and still a favorite in Russia. A second opera, Russlan and Ludmilla (Petrograd, 1842), won almost equal popularity; the book is based on Pushkin's poem, and was partially arranged by the author. In both of these works Russian musical themes and motives are skilfully employed, the coloring being national throughout. In 1844, partly on account of his health, partly from a wish to obtain a wider hearing for his music, Glinka travelled to Paris, and gave orchestral concerts, which aroused Berlioz's enthusiasm, but were coolly criticized by Fétis. G.'s success does not appear to have been striking, for he soon left Paris, and spent 1845–7 in Madrid and Sevilla; his Jota aragonesa (a 'capriccio brillante' for orch.), and Souvenir d'une nuit d'été à Madrid (for orch.), belong to this period. After visiting Italy, he lived in Warsaw and Petrograd for a time, and in 1851 set out for Spain again, but did not cross the Pyrenees, and returned to Paris. From 1854–5 he lived near Petrograd, busied with his autobiography and with ideas for a third opera which was never written. He revisited his old teacher, Dehn, at Berlin, in 1856, and died there in 1857.—Glinka's other comps. include 2 unfinished symphonies; 2 polonaises for orch.; a tarantella for orch. (with song and dance); a fantasia for orch., La Kamarinskaja; a string-quartet; a trio for pf., clar. and bassoon; a sextet for piano and string-quintet; a minuet for string-quartet; some rondos, waltzes, and sets of vars. for piano; dramatic scenes; vocal quartets; romances, songs.—A considerable number of G.'s early works have never been publ. The MSS. of these were presented to the public library at Petrograd by W. P. Engelhardt; a thematic catalogue was prepared by N. Findeisen (1898).

Glög'gl, Franz, son of the following; b. Linz, 1797; d. Jan. 23, 1872, at Vienna, where he founded a music-business in 1843 (afterwards purchased by Bösendorfer); from 1850–62 he publ. the 'Neue Wiener Musikzeitung.' He was archivist to the Ges. d. Musikfreunde, and musical dir. at the ch. of St. Paul; founded an 'Akademie d. Tonkunst' (1849–53), and later a vocal school, 'Polyhymnia.'

Glög'gl, Franz Xaver, b. Linz-on-Danube, February 21, 1764; d. there July 16, 1839. Kapellm. at Linz theatre when 18 years old; in 1790, Kapellm. at the cathedral, and town musical director.—Writings: Erklärung des musikalischen Hauptzirkels (1810; a short treatise on harmony); Allgem. musikal. Lexikon (1822; only 248 pages printed); Der musikalische Gottesdienst (1822). In 1824, the 'Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde' acquired his collection of mus. instrs.

Glover, John William, b. Dublin, June 19, 1815; d. there Jan. 15, 1900. Violinist in the Dublin Orch., 1830; prof. of vocal mus. in the Normal Training School of the Irish Natl. Educ. Board in 1848; established the Choral Institute of Dublin in 1851; succeeded H. Corri as director of the cathedral choir in 1860. Lecturer on Irish music; active promoter of choral music.—Works: The opera The Deserted Village (London, 1880; book by E. Falconer, after Goldsmith); cantata St. Patrick at Tara (1870); Erin's Matin Song, Patria (1873); 100 Years Ago, ode to Moore (1879); masses, hymns, songs, etc.—Concerto f. vln.; orchl. fantasias; concertos, etc., for organ; pf.-pieces. Edited Moore's 'Irish Melodies' (1859).

Glov'er, Sarah Ann, b. Norwich, Engl., 1785; d. Malvern, Oct. 20, 1867. To her is due the invention of the Tonic Sol-fa system of notation, afterwards modified and developed by the Rev. John Curwen.—Published A Manual of the Norwich Sol-fa System . . . (1845); and a Manual Containing a Development of the Tetrachordal System (London, 1850).

Glov'er, Stephen, b. London, 1812; died there Dec. 7, 1870. A music-teacher, and composer of many popular songs and duets, part-songs, trios, etc.; also salon-music for pf. From the financial viewpoint many of his 1,300 compositions were enormously successful; but all have been justly forgotten.

Glov'er, William Howard, b. London, June 6, 1819; d. New York, Oct. 28, 1875. Violinist, pupil of Wagstaff; later a member of the Engl. Opera orch. After artistic tours in Italy, Germany, and France, he founded a school for music and drama in London; also sang in opera. In 1868 he settled in N. Y.—Works: Grand opera Ruy Blas (London, Covent Garden, 1861); the operettas The Coquette (1845?), Aminta (1855?), Once too often (1862), Palomita; the cantata Tam O'Shanter (1855); orchestral overture Manfred; 12 romances for pf., and other pf.-pieces; vocal quartets, duets, and songs.—G. was for some years critic for the 'Morning Post.'

Gluck, Alma [stage-name of Reba Fiersohn], celebrated concert-soprano; b. Bucharest, Rumania, May 11, 1884. As a child of 5 her parents brought her to New York, where she was educated in the public schools and the Normal College. From 1906–9 she studied singing with Buzzi-Peccia in N. Y., who had her sing for Mr. Gatti-Casazza; the latter immediately offered her an engagement at the M. O. H., where she made her début, with striking success, in Massenet's Werther on Nov. 16, 1909; before the end of the season she had established herself in the favor of the public, and numerous concert-engagements followed; she continued as a member of the M. O. H. until 1912, when her preference for concert-work led her to abandon the operatic stage. Then for a year she studied interpretation and song literature with Marcella Sembrich in Berlin, resuming concert-work in 1913. On June 15, 1914, she married the violinist Efrem Zimbalist. During the three years of her operatic career she was heard in more than 20 rôles, including Venus, Freia, Marguerite, Leonora, Gilda, Nedda, Mimi, Lucinda (Armide), etc.

Gluck, Christoph Willibald (Ritter von), renowned dramatic composer; b. Weidenwang, near Neumarkt in the Upper Palatinate, on July 2 (according to authenticated certificate of baptism), 1714; d. Vienna, Nov. 25, 1787. His father was head-gamekeeper to Prince Lobkowitz. G. received elementary instruction in the village school of Eisenberg. At twelve he was sent to the Jesuit college at Komotau (1726–32), learning to play the violin, harpsichord, and organ; he was also a chorister in the church of St. Ignaz. At eighteen he went to Prague to continue his musical studies. To maintain himself, he played at rural dances, gave concerts, and sang and played in the various churches; in the Polish convent of St. Agnes he was noticed by Father Czernohorsky, an eminent musician, who undertook his further instruction. Under his tuition G. became proficient in singing, and playing the 'cello, which was his favorite instrument. In 1736 he went to Vienna, and found a patron in Prince Melzi, who had previously heard him in the palace of Prince Lobkowitz. Melzi took him to Milan, and confided him to the teaching of Sammartini, who completed his instruction in harmony and counterpoint. After four years' study, Gluck began dramatic writing, and produced Artaserse at La Scala in 1741 with such success, that he was commissioned to compose for other theatres, and produced Demofoonte (Milan, 1742), Demetrio and Ipermnestra (Venice, 1742), Artamene (Cremona, 1743), Sofonisba (Milan, 1744), Fedra (Milan, 1744), and Poro, or Alessandro nell'Indie (Turin, 1745). His reputation became European; he was invited to London in 1745, and wrote two operas for the Haymarket, then being run in opposition to Handel. La Caduta dei Giganti, a tribute to the Duke of Cumberland on the defeat of the Pretender, was given on Jan. 7, 1746. A reproduction of Artamene was followed by a pasticcio, Piramo e Tisbe, but without success. Handel privately declared that Gluck knew no more counterpoint than his cook; indeed, up to this time his operas were typically Italian. The pasticcio was composed of his most successful arias, with other words; and its failure, though mortifying, had a salutary effect. It led him to a serious study of the cause, and to a change of style. He next visited Paris to hear Rameau's operas, and returned via Hamburg and Dresden to Vienna, where he cultivated the acquaintance of literary men, and applied himself to the study of musical esthetics. La Semiramide riconosciuta (Vienna, 1748), to a poem by Metastasio, was more dramatic and grandiose than its predecessors, and foreshadowed the coming reform. In 1749, G. was invited to Copenhagen to write a festival cantata, Filide (score in the Berlin Royal Library). In 1750 he visited Italy, and there produced Telemacco (Rome, 1750), La Clemenza di Tito (Naples, 1751), Il Trionfo di Camillo and Antigono (Rome, 1755), La Danza (Laxenburg festival, 1755), and Il Trionfo di Clelia (Bologna, 1762). From 1754–64, G. was director of the court opera, Vienna, and during that period wrote L'Eroe cinese (Vienna, 1755), L'Innocenza giustificata and Il Re pastore (Vienna, 1756), Tetide, in 3 acts (Vienna, 1760), a great number of new arias for old operas revived for performance, and several French vaudevilles for the amusement of the court; of these the Le Cadi dupé (1761), and La Rencontre imprévue (1764), were played on German stages as Der betrogene Cadi and Die Pilgrimme von Mekka. Orfeo ed Euridice (1762), Alceste (1767), Paride ed Elena (1769), the libretti by Calzabigi, were brilliant successes, notwithstanding the hostile criticism they provoked. The other works of this period, to words by Metastasio (two of which, Il Parnasso confuso and La Corona, were performed by members of the reigning family [1765]), were much inferior. In Calzabigi, G. found a poet who shared his strong dramatic mood; and the dedicatory epistles [given in extenso by Fétis] to Alceste and Paride ed Elena expressed G.'s views, which may be summarized thus: The true mission of music is to second the poetry, by strengthening the expression of the sentiments and increasing the interest of the situations, without interrupting and weakening the action by superfluous ornaments to tickle the ear and to display the agility of fine voices. —The harsh and carping criticism of his countrymen, contrasted with the encouragement of the bailli du Rollet of the French Embassy at Vienna in 1772, who made an adaptation of Racine's Iphigénie en Aulide for Gluck, influenced him to set out for Paris, after unsatisfactory rehearsals in Vienna in 1772. Here, with indomitable energy, he paved the way for the triumph of his views by introductions, public notices, compliments to authors, etc. Du Rollet's letter to the administration of the Opéra, explaining in detail G.'s new system, was the signal for an outburst of heated opposition on the part of the partisans of Italian opera. It required all the influence of Marie Antoinette, the dauphiness, whose teacher in singing and harpsichord-playing G. had been, to bring about the first representation of Iphigénie en Aulide, which took place April 19, 1774, with great success. Orpheus (Aug., 1774), Alceste (1776), and Armide (1777), created equal enthusiasm and equal opposition. Piccinni was invited to Paris to contest G.'s supremacy, and composed and produced his Roland, during the time that G. was engaged upon an adaptation of the same poem. Furious at being forestalled, G. burned his sketches and wrote an intemperate letter to du Rollet, the publication of which reopened the war with redoubled fury. Abbé Suard, Arnaud, et al., for Gluck,—d'Alembert, La Harpe, Marmontel, Ginguené, for Piccinni, wrote pamphlets and newspaper articles (a list may be found in the supplement to Fétis). With the production of his masterpiece, Iphigénie en Tauride (libretto by Guillard), on May 18, 1779, the supremacy of Gluck was established; though Piccinni (who had been simultaneously commissioned to compose this opera) still dared contest it, thus inviting overwhelming defeat (cf. Piccinni). G.'s last opera, Écho et Narcisse (Sept. 21, 1779), produced little impression. In 1780 he retired to Vienna, but his strength was failing; in 1784, he had a slight attack of apoplexy, and a second attack three years later terminated his life.—Besides operas, G. wrote a De profundis for ch. and orch.; 7 odes for one voice, with pf.; 6 overtures; 7 trio-sonatas; 9 symphonies (really overtures). An édition de luxe of G.'s masterpieces (Orfeo, Alceste, Iphigénie en Aulide, Iph. en Tauride, Armide, Écho et Narcisse) ed. by Damcke, Saint-Saëns and Tiersot was publ. by Breitkopf & Härtel (1873–96).—Bibliography. Gluth [gloot], Viktor, b. Pilsen, May 6, 1852; prof. at the Kgl. Akademie der Tonkunst in Munich; comp. of the operas Der Trentajäger [Zlatorog] (Munich, 1885; re-written ib., 1911), Horand und Hilde (ib., 1914), Et Resurrexit (not yet produced).

Gnecchi [ñĕk'kē], Vittorio, b. Milan, July 17, 1876. Pupil of the Cons. G. Verdi at Milan; has written the operas Virtù d'Amore (priv. perf. Verderio, 1896), Cassandra (Bologna, 1905; Phila., 1914), Rosiera (not yet prod.); an overture for 2 pfs. (8 hands) and songs. At present (1916) he is writing another opera, Judith (text by Illica). After the publication of the score of Strauss's Elektra (1908) G. Tebaldini caused a sensation by his article in 'Riv. Mus. Ital.' (May, 1908), Telepatia Musicale, in which he attempted to explain the evident similarity, or rather identity, of some 50 themes in Cassandra and Elektra.

Gnec'co, Francesco, b. Genoa, 1769; d. Milan, 1810; a prolific and quite successful opera-composer of slight originality. His best-known work is La Prova d'un' opera seria (Milan, La Scala, 1805).

Gobat'ti, Stefano, b. Bergantino, July 5, 1852; d. (insane) Bologna, Dec. 20, 1913. He abandoned the career of an engineer, and studied harm. with G. Busi at Bologna and cpt. with L. Rossi at Parma, completing his studies at the Cons. of Naples, where Rossi had become director. His first opera, I Goti (Bologna, 1873) was received with enthusiasm, and soon made the rounds of the principal Italian stages; Luce (ib., 1875) and Cordelia (ib., 1881) won only moderate success.

Gobbaerts [gŏhb'bahrts], Jean-Louis, b. Antwerp, Sept. 28, 1835; d. Saint-Gilles, n. Brussels, May 5, 1886. Fine pianist, pupil of Brussels Cons. He publ. abt. 1,200 numbers of pf.-pieces, mostly light music, and some quite popular. He used 3 pseudonyms: 'Streabbog' (Gobbaerts reversed), 'Ludovic,' and 'Lévi.'

Gob'bi, Aloys, brother of Henri; b. Pest, Dec. 20, 1844; resides there as a player on and teacher of the violin at the Natl. Cons.

Jahrh.* (1890); Der Vokalismus des neuhochdeutschen Kunstgesangs und der Bühnensprache (1892); Handbuch der deutschen Gesangspädagogik (1896); Studien zur Geschichte der italienischen Oper im 17. Jahrh. (2 vols., 1901, '04); Die Lehre von der vokalen Ornamentik (vol. i [the 17th and 18th centuries to the time of Gluck], 1907); also articles in mus. journals.

Gold'schmidt, Otto, fine pianist; born Hamburg, Aug. 21, 1829; d. London, Feb. 24, 1907. At first a pupil of Jakob Schmitt and F. W. Grund, then of Mendelssohn at the Leipzig Cons., and of Chopin at Paris (1848). In 1849 he played in London at a concert given by Jenny Lind; accompanied her on her American tour (1851), and married her at Boston, Feb. 5, 1852; from 1852–5 they lived in Dresden, from 1858 until her death (1887) in London. He was made an hon. member of the London Philh. Soc. in 1861, became vice-principal of the R. A. M. in 1863, and founded the Bach Choir in 1875, which he cond. till 1885. He also cond. mus. festivals at Düsseldorf (1863) and Hamburg (1866).—Works: An oratorio, Ruth (Hereford, 1867); pf.-concerto (op. 10); pf.-trio (op. 12); 12 studies for pf. (op. 13); 12 songs with pf.-accomp. (op. 8 and 9); part-songs; also, with S. Bennett, the Choral-Book for England (1862; suppl. 1864).

Gold'schmidt, Sigismund, born Prague, Sept. 28, 1815; d. Vienna, Sept. 26, 1877. Pupil of Tomaschek in Vienna, and of Dreyschock in Paris, where he lived as a concert-pianist from 1845–9, then returning to Prague to manage his father's banking-business.—Works: Overtures, piano-sonatas, songs.

Göllerich, August, b. Linz, July 2, 1859. Pupil of Liszt (pf.) and Bruckner (comp.); acquired Ramann's music-school in Nuremberg in 1890, and established branches in Erlangen, Fürth and Ansbach; since 1896 cond. of the Musikverein and dir. of the Cons. in Linz; his wife, Gisela Pasthory-Voigt (also a pupil of Liszt), supervises the other schools. He has published A. Reissmann als Schriftsteller und Komponist (1884); Liszt (1887; being the continuation of Nohl's biogr. in Reclam's Ed.); Beethoven (1904, in 'Die Musik' [3d ed. 1907]); Liszt (1908, in 'Die Musik'; biogr. and complete catalogue of works); Guides to Liszt's Graner Festmesse (1897) and Wagner's Nibelungen (1897). lin, Sept. 27, 1774; d. Frankfort-on-M., July 2, 1852]. While a theological student at Strassburg, he took lessons in music of Spindler, and in 1817 settled in Frankfort as a teacher of French. He was eng. by Spohr as drummer in the City Th., for a time he was also chorusmaster, and was pensioned in 1858. For pf. he composed rondos, variations, potpourris, etc., for 2 and 4 hds.; and also publ. a Praktische Gesangschule; Leitfaden für junge Musiklehrer; Kritische Terminologie für Musiker u. Musikfreunde (1833; 2d edition 1839); Musikal. Novellen u. Silhouetten (1842); Karl Guhr (1848); Fétis . . . als Mensch, Critiker, Theoretiker u. Componist (1852); Handlexikon der Tonkunst (1858); Autobiographie (1866); and fugitive articles.

Gol'termann, August, born 1826; died Schwerin, Nov. 2, 1890, as court pianist.

Gol'termann, Georg (Eduard), b. Hanover, Aug. 19, 1824; d. Frankfort-on-Main, Dec. 29, 1898. 'Cello-pupil of Prell, and (1847–9) of Menter at Munich, and of Lachner (comp.). After long concert-tours (1850–2), he became (1852) mus. dir. at Würzburg; in 1853, second, and in 1874, first Kapellm. at the City Th., Frankfort-on-Main. A celebrated 'cellist, and comp. for 'cello (6 concertos, sonatas w. pf., Morceaux caractéristiques w. pf., Danses allemandes w. pf., Adagio w. orch., Élégie w. pf.); also a symphony in A m. (op. 20), 2 Festspiel-Ouvertüren (op. 24 and 94), songs, etc.

Gol'termann, (Johann August) Julius, b. Hamburg, July 15, 1825; d. Stuttgart, April 4, 1876. Fine 'cellist; 1850–62, teacher at Prague Cons.; 1862, first 'cello at Stuttgart; retired 1870.

Golther [[gŏhl'ter], Wolfgang, b. Stuttgart, May 25, 1863; since 1895 Prof. of Germanic philology at Rostock. Besides his purely literary works he has written several important books bearing upon the subject of music.—Die Sage von Tristan u. Isolde (1887), Die sagengeschichtlichen Grundlagen der Ringdichtung Richard Wagners (1902), Bayreuth (1904), R. Wagner als Dichter (1904; Engl. transl. by Haynes, 1907), Tristan u. Isolde in den Dichtungen des Mittelalters u. der neueren Zeit (1907), Zur deutschen Sage u. Dichtung (1911), Parsifal u. der Gral in deutscher Sage des Mittelalters u. der Neuzeit (1913); he has also edited 'R. Wagner an Mathilde Wesendonk' (1904), 'Briefe R. Wagners an Otto Wesendonk' (1905), 'Familienbriefe von R. Wagner' (1907), 'Robert Franz u. Arnold Freiherr Senfft von Pilsach' (1907; correspondence).

Gom'bert, Nicolas, b. Bruges, circa 1495; d. after 1570. Flemish contrapuntist, one of Josquin Després' most eminent pupils; in 1530, master of the boys at the Imperial Chapel, Madrid; probably maestro there later; the gift of a sinecure office in the Netherlands, from his patron Charles V, enabled him to retire in his old age. In church-music Fétis styles him a forerunner of Palestrina, but he was especially fond of secular and pastoral music, with a decidedly sentimental leaning, and refreshing simplicity and directness; while in his sacred works he discarded rests, thus rendering his polyphony more connected and fuller than that of his predecessors. Of his numerous motets and masses many are preserved.—See Q.-Lex.

Go'mes, Antonio Carlos, Brazilian operacomposer; b. Campinas, Brazil, July 11, 1839; d. Pará, Sept. 16, 1896. Pupil of Lauro Rossi in Milan Cons. First stage-work, in Portuguese, A noite do castello (Rio de Janeiro, 1861), followed by Joanna de Flandres (ib., 1863); then Se sa minga [Nobody knows!] (Milan, Teatro Fossati, 1867; a 'rivista' in Milanese dialect, the 'Song of the Needle-gun' becoming immensely popular); a second 'review,' Nella Luna (1868); 4-act ballet-opera Il Guarany (Milan, La Scala, 1870; fairly successful); Fosca (ibid., 1873; a failure); Salvator Rosa (Venice, Carlo Felice, 1874; successful); Maria Tudor (Milan, 1877; successful); Lo Schiavo (Rio, 1889; very succ.); Condor (ibid., 1891; unsucc.)—Also a hymn to celebrate American independence, Il saluto del Bresile (Phila., 1876), and the cantata Colombo for the Columbus Festival in 1892. In 1895 he was app. Dir. of Pará Cons.; sickness detained him in Lisbon, and he died a few months after reaching Pará.—Biogr. sketch (in Portuguese) by E. Vieira (Rio de Janeiro, 1897).

Goodrich, Alfred John, theorist; born Chilo, Ohio, May 8, 1848. With the exception of a year's instruction in harm. and pf.-playing, from his father, he is wholly self-taught. After teaching theory for some years in the Grand Cons., N. Y., G. succeeded John Howard (voice) and A. K. Virgil (pf. and theory) at the Fort Wayne Cons., Ind. (1876). Later he was Director of the vocal department in the Beethoven Cons., St. Louis, and for 2 years of the mus. dept. at Martha Washington College, Abingdon, Va.; lived several years in Chicago as a writer and teacher, and was a regular contributor to leading mus. periodicals, more especially the New York 'Musical Courier,' in which he has publ. many interesting essays; lived in Paris, 1909–15; since then spends his time travelling.—Publ. works: Music as a Language (1880); The Art of Song (1888); Complete Musical Analysis (1889); Analytical Harmony (1894); Theory of Interpretation (1898; publ. by subscription); Guide to Memorizing Music (1904; revised ed. 1906). A treatise on Synthetic Counterpoint is still MS.—He has written an overture and several orchestral suites; piano-pieces and songs.

Goodrich, (John) Wallace, b. Newton, Mass., May 27, 1871. Pupil at N. E. Cons. of H. M. Dunham (org.) and G. W. Chadwick (comp.); then at Kgl. Akademie in Munich of Rheinberger (1894–5), of Widor in Paris (1895–6); 1896–7 Repetitor at the Leipzig Th. On his return to the U. S. he became a member of the faculty of the N. E. Cons. in 1897; since 1907 Dean of Faculty; org. Trinity Ch., Boston, 1902–9; org. Boston Symph. Orch. 1898–1909; founder and cond. Boston Choral Art Soc., 1901–7; Choral cond. of the Worcester Festivals, 1902–7; cond. Cecilia Soc., 1907–10; cond. Boston Op. Co., 1909–12.

Goodson, Katharine, distinguished pianist; b. Watford, Hertfordshire, June 18, 1872. From 1886–92 she was a pupil of O. Beringer at the R. A. M., and from 1892–6 of Leschetizky in Vienna; début in London at a Saturday Pop. Concert, Jan. 16, 1897, with signal success; then followed tours of England, France, Austria and Germany, which established her reputation; at her American début with the Boston Symph. Orch. in Boston, Jan. 18, 1907, the impression created was so favorable that she was engaged by all the important orchestras; since then she has made several tours of this country, also of Holland, Belgium and Italy. In 1903 she married the English composer Arthur Hinton.

Goodwin, Amina Beatrice, b. Manchester, Engl., Dec. 5, 1867. Pianist of precocious talent, taught by her father, and played in public at 6. Studied later at Leipzig (Reinecke, Jadassohn), and Paris (Delaborde); finally with Liszt and Frau Schumann. Founded a Pianoforte College for ladies in 1895, at London, but continued her concert-career, appearing with the best orchestras in England; also made a successful tour of Germany and Holland; with Pecskai (vln.) and Whitehouse (vcl.) she formed the 'London Trio.' She ranks high as a concert-player; has written some pf.-pieces, also Practical Hints on the Technique and Touch of Pf.-playing (London, 1892). Married an American, Mr. W. Ingram-Adams.

Goovaerts [goh'vahrts], Alphonse-Jean-Marie-André, b. Antwerp, May 25, 1847. In 1866 he became asst.-librarian at Antwerp; is a profound student of mus. history, and a reformer of the church-music in his native city, having est. an amateur cathedral-choir for performing works by Palestrina and the Netherland contrapuntists. In 1887 he was app. royal archivist at Brussels.—Writings: La Musique d'église . . . (1876; in Flemish as De Kerkmuziek), in which he replies to attacks on his attempted reforms; and Histoire et bibliographie de la typographie musicale . . . (1880; took the gold medal of the Belgian Académie); a monograph on Pierre Phalèse; and minor works. He has also publ. considerable excellent church-music, as well as Flemish songs, pieces for pf. and vln., etc.

Göp'fert, Karl Andreas, b. Rimpar, n. Würzburg, Jan. 16, 1768; d. Meiningen, April 11, 1818. A pupil of Meissner in clarinet-playing, he became, in 1788, first clar. at Meiningen, and later director of the military music there.—Works: An opera, Der Stern des Nordens; 4 concertos for clar.; a symphonie concertante for clar. and bassoon; 5 quartets for clar. and strings; much other chamber-music for wind; songs, etc.

Göpfert, Karl Gottlieb, violinist; b. Weesenstein, n. Dresden, 1733; d. Weimar, Oct. 3, 1798. Played in Frankfort, Leipzig and Berlin; settled in Weimar, 1770, where he was chamber-virtuoso, conductor and leader. J. F. Cranz was his pupil.—Works: 6 Polonaises for violin.

Gordigiani [gôr-dē-jah'nē], Giovanni Battista, b. Mantua, July, 1795; d. Prague, March 2, 1871. Pupil of Milan Cons.; sang in opera and concert, taught singing in Ratisbon, and in 1822 went to Prague, where he was vocal teacher in the Cons. until he died.—Works: 3 operas, Pygmalion (Prague, 1845), Consuelo (1846); Lo Scrivano pubblico (1850); church-music, canzonets, songs, and 12 cavalry marches.—His brother, Gordigiani, Luigi, renowned comp. of Tuscan popular songs; b. Modena, June 21, 1806; d. Florence, May 1, 1860. He brought out 7 operas, a ballet, an oratorio, and 3 cantatas; but his fame rests on his Canti popolari toscani; in 1836 he happened upon a volume of old Tuscan folk-poems, which he set to music, and which became extraordinarily popular; 67 of these songs, in 2 vols., are publ. by Ricordi in the series 'Canti popolari italiani.'

Go'ria, Alexandre-Édouard, pianist; b. Paris, Jan. 21, 1823; d. there July 6, 1860. A pupil of Paris Cons., 1830–9 (Laurent, Zimmerman, Dourlen). Took 1st pf.-prize in 1835. Became a teacher and composer; publ. many pf.-pieces of a brilliant and popular style.

Goritz, Otto, celebrated dram. baritone; b. Berlin, June 8, 1873. He received his entire musical education from his mother, Olga Nielitz; début, Oct. 1, 1895, as Matteo (Fra Diavolo) at the Hoftheater in Neustrelitz; his success led to an immediate engagement for 3 years; 1898–1900, at the Stadtth. in Breslau; 1900–3, at Stadtth. in Hamburg. On Dec. 24, 1903, he made his Amer. début at the M. O. H. as Klingsor in the first production of Parsifal outside of Bayreuth. For once, interest in the composer's work overshadowed all other considerations, so that the performance of the individual artist passed almost unnoticed. But as the season progressed, and as G. appeared in one after another of the great Wagner parts, the public gradually realized that the newcomer was one of the finest Wagnerian interpreters ever heard at the M. O. H. The climax of his triumphs came when he appeared as Beckmesser; his representation of that character has come to be regarded as an ideal, like the Hans Sachs of the unforgettable Emil Fischer. In all the performances of Parsifal at the M. O. H. (57) up to 1916 no other artist has ever sung Klingsor, in which rôle G. gives as finely wrought a presentation as in Beckmesser. Nothing, in fact, affords more conclusive proof of G.'s universality than his masterly and complete identification with these two diametrically opposite characters. Since his first appearance at the M. O. H. he has practically never been heard elsewhere. His voice, of large volume and sympathetic quality, ranges from F to a^1, while his histrionic powers rival those of the foremost actors. He created in the Amer. premières the rôles of Klingsor (Parsifal, 1903), Moriccio (Tiefland, 1908), Kezal (Bartered Bride, 1909), Spielmann (Königskinder, 1910), Lampe (Versiegelt, 1912), Ochs von Lerchenau (Rosenkavalier, 1913). He has no favorite rôles. He is 'Grossherzogl. Mecklenburgischer Kammersänger,' and among numerous decorations received the gold medal of Pres. Taft of the U. S.

Gor'no, Albino, pianist and composer; b. Casalmorano (Cremona), Italy; studied Milan Cons., taking 3 gold medals at graduation. Pianist and accomp. to Adelina Patti on her Amer. tour 1881–2. Then eng. as piano-prof. at Cincinnati Coll. of Music; now (1916) head of piano-dept. and dean of faculty.—Works: 2-act opera Cuore e Patria (Milan Cons., 1881[?]); fantasia for pf., organ and orch.; La festa dei Montanari, fant. for piano and orch.; Arabian Legend; cantata Garibaldi; Marinaresca for pf. and orch.; scherzo for 2 pianos; concert-studies for piano; nocturne for piano; many songs.

Gö'roldt, Johann Heinrich, b. Stempeda, n. Stolberg (Harz), Dec. 13, 1773; d. after 1835 at Quedlinburg (?), where he was mus. dir. from 1803.—Writings: Leitfaden zum Unterricht im Generalbass und der Composition (1815–16, 2 vols.; 2d ed. 1828); Die Kunst, nach Noten zu singen (2d ed. 1832); Die Orgel . . . (1835); Über Kirchenmusik (1830); a Method for Horn (1830); he also comp. pf.-music, chorales for men's voices w. organ, and other church-music in MS.

Gorrio, Tobia. Pen-name of Arrigo Boito.

Gor'ter, Albert, b. Nuremberg, Nov. 23, 1862. Intended for a medical career, but embraced music as a profession; studied from 1878 at the R. Music School in Munich, under Carl Bärmann, Jr., and Bussmeyer (pf.), and Rheinberger (org. and cpt.), taking 3 prizes for composition. Studied one year in Italy; took part in the Bayreuth Festivals as asst.-cond.; was eng. as cond. in turn at Ratisbon, Trier, Elberfeld, Breslau; then for 3 mos. at Stuttgart as 2d Kapellm. to Zumpe; from 1894–9 he was asst.-Kapellm. to Mottl at the Karlsruhe Court Th., then succeeding Panzner as Kapellm. at the Leipzig City Th. in 1899; in 1903 he went to Strassburg; since 1910 munic. cond. in Mayence.—Works: Text and music of the opera Harold, of the 3-act comic opera Der Schatz des Rhampsinit (Mannheim, 1894), the 1-act comic opera Das süsse Gift (Cologne, 1906), 1-act opera Paria (Strassburg, 1908); 2 symphonic poems, choral works, pf.-pieces, songs, ballads, etc. (Der Schatz d. R., and 2 books of songs, are published).

Goss, Sir John, b. Fareham, Hants Engl., Dec. 27, 1800; d. Brixton (London), May 10, 1880. A son of Joseph Goss, the org., he became a chorister of the Chapel Royal, under J. S. Smith, in 1811; in 1821, org. of Stockwell chapel; 1824, org. of St. Luke's, Chelsea; 1838–72, org. at St. Paul's Cath., succeeding Attwood. From 1856–72 he was comp. to the Chapel Royal as Knyvett's successor; was knighted in 1872; received the degree of Mus. Doc., Cantab., in 1876.—Works: Church Service in A; Burial Service in E m.; 4 Te Deums; many anthems, and other church-music; 13 glees, and 2 madrigals; 2 orch. overtures (in F and E♭); other orch. music.—He also publ. Parochial Psalmody (1827); Church Psalter and Hymn Book (1862); The Organist's Companion (4 vols.; collections of voluntaries); Coll. of Chants, Ancient and Modern (1841, w. W. Mercer); Introd. to Harm. and Thorough-bass (1833, often reprinted).—Cf. 'M. T.', April and June, 1901.

Gossec [Gossé], François-Joseph, b. Vergnies, Belgium, Jan. 17, 1734; d. Passy, n. Paris, Feb. 16, 1829. A chorister at Antwerp cath. from 1741–49, he then studied the vln. and comp. for 2 years, and went to Paris in 1751, with letters to Rameau, through whom he became cond. of the private orch. of La Popelinière, then 'fermier-général.' In 1754 his first symphonies (the first of their kind in France and 5 years before Haydn's) were publ.; his first string-quartets followed in 1759. In 1762 G. became the cond. of Prince Conti's orch. at Chantilly, a post which the fame of his Requiem (1760) aided him to obtain; he soon turned his attention to dramatic comp., beginning with a 1-act opera, Le faux Lord (1765); his first real stage-success was Les Pêcheurs, also in one act (Comédie Italienne, 1766); at the same theatre were produced Toinon et Toinette (1767), and Le double déguisement (1767), and at the Opéra Sabinus (1773), Alexis et Daphné (1775), Philémon et Baucis [ballet] (1775), Hylas et Sylvie (1776), La fête du village (1778), Thésée (1782), Rosine (1786), Les visitandines (with Trial), and La reprise de Toulon (1796); also Berthe (Brussels, 1775), Les sabots et le cerisier (Th. des Jeunes Élèves, 1803), Le Périgourdin and Nitocris (not perf.). These works won him a high position among French dramatic composers. In 1770 he founded the Concerts des Amateurs; in 1773 he reorganized the Concerts Spirituels, at first directing them conjointly with Gaviniés and Leduc aîné, then alone till 1777. From 1780–2 he was assistant-cond. at the Académie de Musique (Gr. Opéra). In 1784 he established and became the manager of the École Royale de Chant, the germ of the Conservatoire, at the inauguration of which latter (1795) G. was app. inspector (with Cherubini and Lesueur), being likewise made a member of the new Institut de France. From 1799–1804, and 1809–15, he was on the commission for examining the operas handed in at the Grand Opéra; in 1815 he retired to Passy.—G.'s chief claim to eminence lies in the dept. of instrumental comp.; his 26 orchestral symphonies mark an epoch in French art and an important enlargement of orchl. resources; his string-quartets were received with unbounded enthusiasm, and the Requiem above mentioned contains new and striking effects. Besides these must be noted a Symphonie concertante for 11 instrs.; overtures, serenades, quartets for flute and strings, string-trios, and violin-duets. He also wrote 3 oratorios (Saül, La Nativité, l'Arche d'Alliance), masses with orch., 2 Te Deums, and motets; and the choruses to Racine's Athalie and Rochefort's Électre.—G., himself of humble origin, and an enthusiastic republican, was one of the most popular comps. of the revolutionary era, to which his festival plays Offrande à la patrie (1792) and Le camp de Grand-Pré, the Chant du 14 Juillet (on the storming of the Bastille), and many hymns, marches, etc., belong.—Cf. Hédouin, G., sa vie et ses ouvrages (Paris, 1852); É. Gregoir, Notice sur G. (ib., 1878); F. Hellouin, G. et la musique française à la fin du 18e siècle (ib., 1903).—See Q.-Lex.

Gotthelf, Felix, b. Gladbach, n. Munich, Oct. 3, 1857. While pursuing his medical studies he seriously studied music, piano with J. Lange and J. Kwast, theory with G. Jensen and O. Tiersch and singing with K. Scheidemantel. After he had received the degree of M. D. he took a course in comp. with F. Draeseke from 1887–91; in 1892 he was for a short time Repetitor at the Stadtth. in Cologne and cond. in Kolberg; in 1893 he settled in Bonn, devoting his time to comp.; since 1898 he has been living in Vienna.—Works: Symph. Fantasie, Frühlingsfest; a string-quartet in C; Hymnus, for vln., vcl., harp and organ; Der Zauberspiegel, ballad for sop. and piano; a mystery, Mahadeva (Stuttgart, 1909); also has written Der Mythos in den Meistersingern (in 'Bayreuther Bl.', 1911).

Gott'schalg, Alexander Wilhelm, b. Mechelrode, n. Weimar, Feb. 14, 1827; d. Weimar, May 31, 1908. Pupil (1842) in the Teachers' Seminary at Weimar, of Töpfer (org. and harm.) and Wettig (pf.); Liszt also aided him. In 1847, teacher in Tiefurt; from 1870–81, he was Töpfer's successor in the Seminary, also court org., and (1874) teacher of music history in the 'Musik- und Orchesterschule.' From 1865 he edited the 'Urania'; from 1885, the 'Chorgesang'; and from 1872 he was also critic for Dittes' 'Pädagogischer Jahresbericht.' He publ. (with Liszt) a Repertorium für die Orgel (a coll. of the finest modern organ-music); also a Kleines Handlexikon der Tonkunst (1867).

Gottschalk, Louis Moreau, pianist; b. New Orleans, La., May 8, 1829; d. Rio de Janeiro, Dec. 18, 1869. He studied in Paris from 1841–6 under Hallé and Stamaty (pf.) and Maleden (harm.), and began composing at 16 (the Bananier was one of his first essays). After his pianistic début in 1845, he made brilliant tourneys through France, Switzerland, and (1852) Spain; his triumphs were repeated in 1853 in the U. S. Beginning in New Orleans, he traversed the length and breadth of the land, playing his own pf.-works, and conducting his orchestral works at grand festivals. Max Strakosch, later celebrated as the impresario of Patti, now engaged him for a comprehensive American tour, during which he visited Cuba, California (1865), and nearly every noteworthy town in Spanish America; he died worn out by excessive exertion.—G. was a great virtuoso of individual type, and most admired in his performances of his own works for pf.; no other player has so brought out their peculiar charm and characteristic 'Spanish' warmth of color, and they have lapsed into almost total neglect.—Works: 2 operas, Charles IX, and Isura de Salerno (never performed); 2 symphonies, La Nuit des tropiques, and Montevideo; Gran Marcha solemne (to the Emp. of Brazil), Escenas campestres cubanas, and Gran Tarantella, all for full orch.; some 90 piano-compositions; and about 12 songs.—Compare Life and Letters of L. M. G., by Octavia Hensel (Boston, 1870); Gottschalk, by Fors (Havana, 1880); and Notes of a Pianist . . . , by R. E. Petersen (Philadelphia, 1881).

Göt'ze, Auguste, daughter of Franz; b. Weimar, Feb. 24, 1840; d. Leipzig, April 29, 1908. Taught in the Dresden Cons. from 1870–75; then est. a singing-school in Dresden, and in 1891 was eng. at the Leipzig Cons. She was a much-sought vocal teacher (Frau Moran-Olden was one of her pupils);—publ. Über den Verfall der Gesangskunst (1884); also some stage-poems under the pen-name 'Auguste Weimar.'—Cf. La Mara, Mus. Studienköpfe (vol. v, Leipzig, 1902).

Göt'ze, Emil, brilliant dramatic tenor; b. Leipzig, July 19, 1856; d. Charlottenburg, Sept. 28, 1901. Pupil of Prof. Gustav Scharfe at Dresden, where he was eng. 1878–81 at the court theatre, then at the Cologne theatre, afterwards singing as a star in the chief German cities. Owing to an affection of the throat he was obliged, in 1885, to retire for some time; he then resumed his triumphant career in Berlin, and was made 'Kgl. Kammersänger' in 1894.

Göt'ze, Franz, son of Karl; has brought out a 3-act Volksoper, Utopia (Stettin, 1892), and a 1-act opera, Die Rose von Thiessow (Glogau, 1895).

Göt'ze, Franz, b. Neustadt-on-Orla, May 10, 1814; d. Leipzig, April 2, 1888. A pupil of Spohr (vln.) at Kassel, he joined the Weimar court orch. in 1831; then studied singing, and was leading opera-tenor at Weimar from 1836–52. From 1853–67, he taught singing in the Leipzig Cons.; he explained his resignation in a pamphlet, Fünfzehn Jahre meiner Lehrthätigkeit (1868). He remained in Leipzig as a private singing-teacher.

Göt'ze, Heinrich, teacher and composer; b. Wartha, Silesia, April 7, 1836; d. Breslau, Dec. 14, 1906. He was a vocal pupil of Franz Götze at the Leipzig Cons.; losing his voice, he taught music in Russia and Breslau; in 1871 became teacher in the Liebenthal Seminary; in 1885 obtained a similar post at Ziegenhals, Silesia, and in 1896 in Breslau; he was made Royal Mus. Dir. in 1889.—Works: 2 serenades and 6 sketches for string-orch.; a 4-part mass w. orch.; pieces for organ and piano; songs, choruses, etc. Wrote Populäre Abhandlungen über Klavierspiel (1879), and Musikalische Schreibübungen (exercises in musical dictation).

Göt'ze, Johann Nikolaus Konrad, violin virtuoso; b. Weimar, Feb. 11, 1791; d. there Feb. 5, 1861. He was taught the violin by G. Spohr at Gotha, Aug. Müller at Weimar, and (1813) Kreutzer at Paris. Settled in Weimar; was mus. dir. to the Grand Duke 1826–48, and chorusmaster at the opera; also gave concerts in Vienna, etc. He prod. 4 operas at Weimar, also vaudevilles and melodramas; wrote much chamber-music, etc.

Göt'ze, Karl, composer; b. Weimar, 1836; d. Magdeburg, Jan. 14, 1887. A pupil of Töpfer and Gebhardi, later of Liszt; in 1855, chorusmaster at the Weimar opera; then theatre-cond. at Magdeburg, Berlin (1869), Breslau (1872), and Chemnitz (1875).—Works: The operas Eine Abschiedsrolle; Die Korsen (Weimar, 1866); Gustav Wasa, der Held des Nordens (W., 1868); Judith (Magdeburg, 1887); a symph. poem Eine Sommernacht (op. 20); other orchestral music; piano-pieces, songs, etc.

Göt'ze, Otto, in 1896 Kapellm. at Essen-on-Ruhr; has prod. a successful opera, Riscatto (Sondershausen, 1896).

Goudimel [goo-dē-mel'], Claude, renowned church-composer, b. Besançon, France, c. 1505; killed at Lyons, in the St. Bartholomew massacre, Aug. 24, 1572. Said to have been a pupil of J. Després. In 1555 G. was in Paris as a partner of the music-printer N. Duchemin; their partnership was dissolved in 1556. From 1557–67 (?) he lived in Metz; after 1568 he was a short time in Besançon, and then in Lyons. Brenet conclusively proves that G. was not the founder of the great Roman school; it seems that he not even visited Italy, and it is a fact that none of his numerous works was publ. there.—Cf. M. Brenet, C. G., Essai bio-bibliographique (Besançon, 1898). See also Q.-Lex.

Gould, Nathaniel Duren, b. Chelmsford, Mass., March 26, 1781; d. Boston, May 28, 1864. Pupil of Reuben Emerson. Conductor of singing-schools in N. H. and Mass.; of the Middlesex Mus. Society (1807); went to Boston in 1819. Besides editing several colls. of hymn-tunes, he publ. a History of Church-Music in America (1853), a work of but slight value.

Gounod, Charles-François, one of the most eminent of French sacred and dramatic composers; b. Paris, June 17, 1818; d. there Oct. 17, 1893. His father, Jean-François Gounod, painter and engraver of talent, winner of the Paris Fine Arts Academy's 2d Prix de Rome (1783), died when the boy was in his fifth year. His mother, a most accomplished woman, first contributed to his literary, artistic and musical education, and early sent him, an already proficient pianist, to the Lycée Saint-Louis. In 1836 he entered the Paris Conservatory, studied harmony with Reicha, cpt. and fugue with Halévy, and comp. with Lesueur and Paër. He won the 2d Prix de Rome with his cantata Marie Stuart and Rizzio in 1837, and in 1839, his cantata Fernand won the Grand prix de Rome by 25 votes out of 27. In Rome he studied ecclesiastical music, particularly the works of Palestrina, and in 1841 a grand orchestral Mass a 3 was performed at the ch. of San Luigi dei Francesi. In 1842, during a visit to Vienna, he conducted a Requiem of his own, in the church of St. Charles, which produced a profound impression. Returning to Paris, he became precentor and organist of the 'Missions Étrangères'; had serious intentions of taking holy orders, and was even called 'l'Abbé' Gounod; a publisher, in 1846, bringing out a series of religious choruses, entitled Offices of the Holy Week, by 'Abbé Charles Gounod.' For five years he remained in seclusion, almost forgotten, when the performance of parts of his Messe solennelle at one of Hullah's London Concerts evoked such high praise in the English and French press that G. shortly after prod. a symphony in E♭, and was commissioned to write a work for the Grand Opéra. Sapho, a 3-act opera, was perf. April 16, 1851; but, despite excellent musical numbers, was not a theatrical success. Revised and reproduced in 1884, it was equally unsuccessful. Choruses to Ponsard's tragedy Ulysse (1852), La Nonne sanglante, 5-act grand opera (1854), Le Médecin malgré lui, comedy-opera (1858), also failed to realize expectations. From 1852–60, he was conductor of the 'Orphéon,' the united male singing-societies and vocal schools of Paris, and for them composed several choruses, and 2 masses a 4. G.'s success came with Faust in 1859, which procured him European fame, and remains his masterpiece. Philémon et Baucis (1860), La Reine de Saba (1862), Mireille (1864), La Colombe (1866), were of ordinary interest. The success of Faust was revived with Roméo et Juliette (1867), considered in France superior to Faust. In 1870, during the Franco-German war, G. removed to London. He there founded Gounod's Choir, a mixed choral society, and gave large concerts at the Philharmonic and Crystal Palace, where, in 1871, at the opening of the exhibition, he produced Gallia, an elegiac cantata to words from the Lamentations of Jeremiah. The entr'actes to Legouvé's Les deux Reines (1872), and to Barbier's Jeanne d'Arc (1873), were well received. In 1875 he returned to Paris, and, in 1877, Cinq Mars was produced at the Opéra-Com., and in 1878, Polyeucte at the Opéra; but these and his last dramatic work, Le tribut de Zamora (1881), were inferior to his previous triumphs. The last years of his life were mainly devoted to sacred composition. La Rédemption (Birmingham, 1882), a sacred trilogy, of which he wrote the music and French words, and Mors et Vita (Birmingham, 1885), another sacred trilogy, the Latin text of which he arranged from the Catholic liturgy, have become standard works. G.'s comps. are of a highly poetic order, more spiritualistic than realistic; in his finest lyrico-dramatic moments he is akin to Weber, and his modulation even reminds of Wagner; his instrumentation and orchestration are frequently original and masterly. To the works mentioned must be added: Messe solennelle à Ste.-Cécile, and the mass Angeli custodes (1882), Messe à Jeanne d'Arc (1887), a fourth Mass (1888), a Stabat Mater w. orch., the oratorio Tobie, Les Sept Paroles de Jésus, Jésus sur le lac de Tibériade, a Te Deum, Pater Noster, Ave Verum, and O Salutaris; the cantatas A la Frontière (1870, Gr. Opéra), Le vin des Gaulois et la danse de l'épée, and much instrumental and vocal music, French and English songs, etc. Especially famous is his Méditation (Ave Maria) on the first prelude of Bach's 'Well-tempered Clavichord.' Among his posthumous works should be mentioned 2 operas, Maître Pierre (incomplete) and George Dandin (said to be the first comedy-opera set to a prose text); an Ave Maria for his daughter's birthday; a solemn mass for the inaug. of the new organs at St. Peter's, Rome; a Requiem in D m. (MS. in St. Charles' Ch., Vienna). He also wrote a Méthode de cor à pistons, contributed 'feuilletons' of musical philosophy and criticism to various Paris journals; publ. Berlioz' Lettres intimes (1882), and a book, Le Don Juan de Mozart (1890). In 1866, on the death of Clapisson, G. was elected member of the Institut de France. He was also a commander of the Legion of Honor.

Gouvy [goo'vē], Louis-Théodore, b. Goffontaine, n. Saarbrücken, Rhenish Prussia, July 2, 1819; d. Leipzig, April 21, 1898. Pianist and composer; 1840, law-student in Paris; turned to music, studied 3 years with Elwart, also in Berlin (1843) and Rome, returning 1846 to Paris, and giving his first and very successful concert of his own works in 1847. His works are often performed both in Germany and in Paris, where he lived till 1895 as a private teacher and composer; thereafter in Oberhomburg. In Germany, especially, his dramatic scenes for soli, chorus and orch. had great vogue. He was made a member of the Berlin Academy in 1895, and Chev. of the Legion of Honor in 1896.—Works: Missa brevis for soli, ch. and orch., op. 72; Requiem for do., op. 70; a sacred cantata, Golgotha; a Stabat Mater; the dram. cantatas Oedipus auf Kolonus (op. 75), Iphigénie en Tauride (op. 76), and Elektra (op. 85), for soli, ch. and orch.; Frühlings Erwachen for sopr. solo, male ch. and orch. (op. 73), and Polyxena for do.; Asléga, lyrico-dram. scene; an opera, Der Cid (not perf., though accepted 1863 at Dresden); 7 symphonies (the last is op. 87, in G m.); 2 concert-overtures (op. 14 and 15); an octet for wind; a nonet for do.; a sextet for flute and strings; a piano-quintet (op. 24); a string-quintet; 5 string-quartets; 5 pf.-trios; a serenade for 5 stringed instrs.; pieces for 'cello and piano, and for vln. and piano; pf.-sonatas for 2 and 4 hands; Phantasie for 2 pianos (op. 69); serenades, characteristic pieces, and studies, for piano; vocal duets, odes, and many songs.—His compositions are graceful and melodious.—Cf. O. Klauwell, Th. G. Sein Leben und seine Werke (Berlin, 1902).

Gow, George Coleman, b. Ayer Junction, Mass., Nov. 27, 1860. Studied music under B. C. Blodgett of Pittsfield, and E. B. Story of Worcester; graduate (A.B.) of Brown Univ., 1884, and of Newton Theol. Seminary, 1889, when he became instructor of harm. and pf. at Smith College, Northampton, Mass. During leave of absence (1892–3), G. spent a year in Berlin studying mainly w. L. Bussler. In 1895 he was app. Prof. of music at Vassar College, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., which position he still holds (1916).—Published 1st book of songs, 1884; since then several sets of songs and duets, and several part-songs, etc.; also an excellent text-book on notation and harmony, The Structure of Music (New York, 1895); contributed the articles on Harmony and Theory to the 'American History and Encyclopædia of Music' (1910).

Gow, Niel, violinist and comp.; b. Inver, Dunkeld, Scotland, March 22, 1727; d. there March 1, 1807. His teacher, John Cameron, was a retainer in the Grandtully family. A favorite player at the balls, etc., in Scottish towns, he excelled in the execution of native music.—Works: Six collections of Strathspey Reels (1784, '88, '92, '99, 1808, '22).—His son Nathaniel (1763–1831), also a violinist and comp., was for a time (from 1791) leader of the Edinburgh Concerts; he had a music-business in Edinburgh. Best known as the composer of the song Caller Herrin'.—Niel G., Jr. (1795–1823), son of Nathaniel, was a talented violinist and composer (Bonnie Prince Charlie, Flora McDonald's Lament, etc.).

Graan, Jean de, gifted violinist, a pupil of Joachim; b. Amsterdam, Sept. 9, 1852; d. The Hague, Jan. 8, 1874. Monograph by Kneppelhout: Een beroemde Knaap.

Gra'ben-Hoff'mann, Gustav (properly Gustav Hoffmann), b. Buin, n. Posen, March 7, 1820; d. Potsdam, May 21, 1900. By profession a teacher, his love for music caused him to embrace the latter profession; studied for the opera (1843) in Berlin, but had better fortune with song-composing; after teaching in Potsdam, studying in Leipzig under Hauptmann, and living in Dresden (1858) and Schwerin (1868), he settled (1869) in Berlin as a singing-teacher. —Works: Many songs (500,000 Teufel had great vogue); part-songs, duets, solfeggî, pf.-music; also Die Pflege der Singstimme (1865); Das Studium des Gesangs (1872); Praktische Methode als Grundlage für den Kunstgesang (1874).

Grä'dener, Hermann (Theodor Otto), son of Karl G. P.; b. Kiel, May 8, 1844. Pupil of his father, and of the Vienna Cons.; in 1862, org. at Gumpendorf n. Vienna; 1864, violinist in Vienna court orch.; 1873, harmony-teacher in Horak's Pf. School; ditto for some years in Vienna Cons.; and from 1899 Bruckner's successor as 'lector' for harmony and counterpoint at the Vienna Univ. He also conducts the Vienna 'Singakademie' and 'Orchesterverein für Klassische Musik.' —Works: Capriccietto for orch. (op. 4); Sinfonietta for orch. (op. 14); Lustspiel-Ouvertüre (op. 28); a vln.-conerto in D; a 'cello-concerto in E m. (op. 45); a piano-concerto in D m.; vars. for organ, strings and trumpet; string-octet (op. 12); string-quintet (op. 23); piano-quintet (op. 6); piano-trio in D m. (op. 1); string-quartets (op. 33, 39); 5 Impromptus for pf. and strings (op. 11); 5 Intermezzi for vln. and piano (op. 9); Sonata for 2 pianos (op. 18); other piano-music, songs, etc.

Grä'dener, Karl Georg Peter, b. Rostock, Jan. 14, 1812; d. Hamburg, June 10, 1883. Gave up study in Göttingen for music (his 'cello-teacher was Mattstädt); was for 3 years solo 'cellist and quartet-player in Helsingfors; for 10 years mus. dir. at Kiel Univ., and cond. of a choral society; during this period he wrote numerous fine choral works (oratorio Johannes der Täufer). He founded and directed (1851–61) a singing-academy at Hamburg, and cond. numerous concerts, at several of which his own works filled the programs; taught singing and theory at Vienna Cons. (1862–5), and thereafter at the Hamburg Cons.; elected President of the Hamburg 'Tonkünstler-Verein.' He was a fine and original harmonist, and a master of form. —Works: 2 symphonies; overture to Fiesco; 1 pf.-concerto; a Romanza for vln. and orch.; 1 string-octet; 5 piano-quintets; 3 string-quartets; 1 string-trio; 2 piano-trios; 3 vln.-sonatas; 1 'cello-sonata w. piano (op. 59; one of his best works); a sonata for pf. and vln. (D m.); and for piano, Phantastische Studien, Fliegende Blätter, Blättchen, Träumereien, etc. Also a Harmonielehre (1877), and musical essays in periodicals, coll. as Gesammelte Aufsätze (Hamburg, 1872).—In MS. 2 operas: König Harald and Der Müllerin Hochzeit.

Graffi'gna, Achille, b. San Martino Dall'Argine, Italy, May 5, 1816; d. Padua, July 19, 1896. Pupil of Milan Cons.; at 18, conductor in theatre at Cagliari, and successively in various other Italian theatres, also (1845) opera-director in Odessa, and (1872) manager and conductor of an opera-troupe in Paris. Finally, singing-teacher in Padua. Of his 18 operas none achieved real success, but he attracted considerable attention through his presumption in setting to music the text-books of Il Barbiere di Siviglia (Padua, 1879) and Il Matrimonio segreto (Florence, 1883), after Rossini and Cimarosa.

Grainger, Percy Aldridge, b. Brighton, Melbourne, Australia, July 8, 1882. He received his first instruction from his mother, a fine musician, and at the age of 10 appeared in public as a pianist; also had lessons from Louis Pabst and from 1894–1900 was a pupil of J. Kwast (pf.) in Frankfort; a little later he studied a short time with Busoni. His career as a pianist began in London (1900), where he created almost a sensation; he then toured Great Britain, New Zealand, Australia and South Africa, meeting everywhere with most enthusiastic receptions. Returning to London in 1906 he met Grieg, who was so impressed with the young artist's playing that he invited him to his villa, Troldhaugen. Here they spent the summer of 1907 preparing for the Leeds Festival in the fall, when Grainger was to have played Grieg's pf.-concerto with the master himself as conductor. Death, however, frustrated the plan, for on Sept. 4 Grieg passed away. Nevertheless, Grainger did play the concerto, and gave such a masterly interpretation that ever since he has been identified in a special manner with that work. After having played with phenomenal success throughout Europe, he made his Amer. début in New York on Feb. 11, 1915, in recital, electrifying his audience; the performance of the Grieg concerto with the N. Y. Philh. Soc. (March 13) brought him an ovation. As a pianist G. has securely established himself among masters of the first rank. His development as a composer is probably unique. He is self-taught; but instead of studying the great masters, he turned his attention to the folk-music of the numerous countries he has visited. G. himself says: 'I regard the study of native music and close association with folk-singers (peasants, sailors, etc.) as the most fruitful influence in my creative career.' Examination of his publ. works proves that this self-estimate is correct; it is the quality peculiar to folk-music that assured the instant and astonishing success of G.'s compositions. His first appearance as a composer was at one of Balfour Gardiner's concerts in London, in 1912, when he conducted his Mock Morris for string-orch.; statistics for 1915 show that the works of G. were more frequently performed than those of any other British composer. G. is not only an earnest student of folk-music, but also an ardent collector, having taken more than 500 phonographic records (European, African, Australian and American). In 1899 he began to experiment with beatless music, which he defines as 'music in which no standard duration of beat occurs, but in which all rhythms are free, without beat-cohesion between the various polyphonic parts.' He has not yet publ. any of his numerous works in this style.—Publ. works: For orch.: Mock Morris, Molly on the Shore, English Dance, Colonial Song, Shepherd's Hey, Green Bushes (Passacaglia); In a Nutshell, suite for piano and orch.; choruses w. orch: Father and Daughter, Sir Eglamore, Irish Tune from County Derry, Morning Song in the Jungle, Tiger-Tiger!, The Innuit, We Have Fed our Seas, I'm Seventeen come Sunday, Marching Tune, etc. All these are also issued in various arrangements. Larger works are The Warriors, for piano and orch. (music to an imaginary ballet), and Marching Song of Democracy, for ch. and orch. (Worcester Fest., 1916).—Cf. C. Scott, P. G., the Music and the Man, in 'Mus. Quart.' (July, 1916).

Gram'mann, Karl, dramatic comp.; b. Lübeck, June 3, 1844; d. Dresden, Jan. 30, 1897. From 1867–71 pupil of Leipzig Cons.; lived in Vienna as a comp. until 1885, and after that at Dresden. 2 operas, Die Schatzgräber and Die Eisjungfrau, were written while he was a youth studying in the gymnasium; his other works are the operas Melusine, op. 24 (Wiesbaden, 1875); Thusnelda und der Triumphzug des Germanicus, op. 29 (Dresden, 1881); Das Andreasfest, op. 35 (Dresden, 1882); the 2-act opera Ingrid, op. 57, and the 1-act opera Das Irrlicht, op. 58 (both prod. on the same evening at Dresden, 1894); Auf neutralem Boden (posth., Hamburg, 1901); a Trauercantate for soli, ch. and orch.; Die Hexe, op. 17, dram. scene for alto, ch. and orch.; 2 symphonies; string-quartets and trios, vln.-sonatas, pf.-music, songs, etc. —Cf. F. Pfohl. K. G. Ein Künstlerleben (Berlin, 1910).

Grana'dos y Campi'na, Enrique, b. Lerida, Catalonia, July 27, 1867; d. at sea, March 24, 1916 (victim of the Sussex disaster in the Engl. Channel). He studied pf. at the Barcelona Cons. with B. Pujol, and comp. at the Madrid Cons. with F. Pedrell (1884–7); then he was for one year a pupil of Ch. de Bériot (pf.) at the Paris Cons. He first attracted attention with a zarzuela, María del Carmen (Madrid, 1898), which soon made the rounds of the principal theatres of Spain; fragments of an opera, Folleto, were successfully prod. at Barcelona in 1903. In 1899 he wrote an opera, Goyescas (inspired by scenes from Goya's paintings); being dissatisfied with the work, he selected certain portions and arranged these as a suite for pf.; later F. Periquet wrote a new text, and G. used the music of the suite in the new opera. The première of Goyescas took place, in the presence of the composer, at the M. O. H. on Jan. 28, 1916; it was fairly successful, and has the distinction of being the first Spanish opera sung in Spanish in the U. S.—G.'s other works are an early opera, Miel de la Alcarria (1893); the symph. poems La Nit del Mort and Dante; incidental music to Mestres' fairy-play Liliano; a piano-trio; a string-quartet; piano-pieces (Danzas españolas, Cantos de la Juventud, Valses poéticos, Marche militaire, A la Cubana [the last two also arr. for orch.], etc.); songs (especially those on texts by Apeles Mestres). G.'s music is essentially impressionistic, with an admixture of specific Spanish rhythms and excess of rather meaningless ornamentation. —2-page sketch in 'M. T.', Dec., 1916.

Grancino [-chē'-], Paolo, a violin-maker, who worked at Milan from 1665–90; the instruments of his son Giovanni Battista (1696–1715) are more highly esteemed, especially the 'celli.

Gran'di, Alessandro de', b. Venice(?); d. Bergamo, 1630. Church-comp. of the Venetian school, pupil of G. Gabrieli. In 1597, m. di capp. at the Accad. della Morte in Ferrara; in 1617, singer at San Marco, Venice; in 1620 succeeded Negri as vice-maestro there and in 1627 became m. di c. at Santa Maria Maggiore, Bergamo, where he died of the plague.—Works: Madrigali concertati; Litanies, Vesper psalms, Masses, Motets, etc.—See Q.-Lex.

Grandjean [grähn-zhähn'], Axel Karl William, b. Copenhagen, Mar. 9, 1847. Pupil of the Cons. there; began as an operatic singer (1869), but gave up the stage at the end of the first year, and devoted himself to teaching and comp.; was for many years chorusmaster at the R. Opera and cond. of several choral societies.—Works: The operas De to Armringe (Copenhagen, 1876), Colomba (ib., 1882), I Möllen (ib., 1885), Oluf (ib., 1894); Traegfuglen, for soli, ch. and orch.; piano-pieces; songs. On the occasion of the Holberg bicentenary he edited a collection of incid. music written to H.'s dramas (1884).

Grandval, Mme. Marie-Félicie-Clémence de Reiset, Vicomtesse de, noted composer; b. Saint-Rémy-des-Monts (Sarthe), France, Jan. 21, 1830; d. Paris, Jan. 15, 1907. At first a pupil of Flotow, later of Saint-Saëns, in composition. Her début as a composer was with a Mass and a Stabat Mater (perf. in various churches); under various pen-names (Valgrand, Tesier, Blangy, Jesper, etc.) she produced the operas Le Sou de Lise (Paris, 1860), Les Fiancés de Rosa (ib., 1863), La comtesse Eva (ib., 1864), La Pénitente (ib., 1868), Piccolino (ib., 1869), Atala (ib., 1888), Mazeppa (Bordeaux, 1892); also wrote a dramatic poem, La Forêt (1875); an oratorio, 'drame sacré', St. Agnes (1876); a dram. scene La fille de Jaïre (won Prix Rossini, 1879); do., Jeanne d'Arc; Esquisses symphoniques; songs.

Gräner, Paul, b. Berlin, Jan. 11, 1873. Having filled various positions as operatic cond. in Bremerhaven, Königsberg, Berlin, and London (Haymarket Th., 1896), he taught at the R. A. M. from 1897–1902; then at the 'Neues Konservatorium' in Vienna until 1909; dir. of the 'Mozarteum' in Salzburg, 1910–13.—Works: The operas Das Narrengericht (Vienna, 1913) and Don Juan's letztes Abenteuer (Leipzig, 1914); a symphony in D m.; a sinfonietta; piano-pieces; songs and choruses. In his 'Kammermusikdichtungen' he attempts to carry out a definite program in the established forms of chamber-music (a piano-trio after Raabe's Der Hungerpastor; a piano-quintet, Sehnsucht an das Meer).

Granjon, Robert, celebrated music-printer and typefounder at Paris (1523), Lyons (1559), and Rome (1582), is particularly noteworthy for having engraved round note-heads (instead of the lozenge-shaped ones then in vogue), and for discarding the ligatures, etc.

Grant-Schaefer, George Alfred, b. Williamstown, Ontario, July 4, 1872. Pupil of D. Ducharme (pf.) and G. Couture (voice) in Montreal, of V. Garwood (pf.) and A. Weidig (theory) in Chicago, and of C. A. Harriss (org.) in London; org. and ch.m. at Centenary Ch., Chicago, 1896–1908; since then head of vocal dept. at Northwestern Univ. School of Mus., Evanstown, Ill.; comp. of meritorious songs and piano-pieces of moderate difficulty. His Thirty-six Songs for Children are deservedly popular.

Graphäus, Hieronymus, celebrated music-printer and typefounder in Nuremberg (from 1533), where he died May 7, 1556. He exchanged his patronymic Resch for Formschneider (Type-cutter), later assuming the Greek form of the latter appellation.

Grasse, Edwin, b. New York, Aug. 13, 1884. Although he became blind in infancy, he began to study the violin with Carl Hauser; went to César Thomson in Brussels, in 1898; ent. the Cons. the following year, and won 1st prize in 1900; awarded 'Prix de Capacité' in 1901; début in Berlin, playing the Sinding concerto with the Philh. Orch.; Amer. début, New York, Nov. 12, 1903, with Brahms concerto; since then has made several tours of Europe and America, meeting with considerable success.—Works: Symphony in G m.; Suite for orch. in C; Concerto for vln. and orch. in G; 2 string-trios; 4 sonatas for vln. and piano; 1 'cello-sonata; numerous smaller pieces for vln. and piano.

Grau, Maurice, operatic impresario; b. Brünn, Moravia, 1849; d. Paris, March 14, 1907. At the age of 5 he came to the U. S., where he was educated at the public schools and Columbia Law Sch. In 1872 he associated himself with C. A. Chizzola and managed the Amer. tours of Rubinstein, Wieniawski and Aimée; the next year he organized the Kellogg Opera Co., and later brought over Salvini, Ristori, Offenbach, Sarah Bernhardt, etc.; in 1882 the partnership of Abbey, Schoeffel & Grau was formed; the disastrous failure of the opening season (1883–4) of the M. O. H. then led them to retire from the operatic business for some years; in 1891 they again leased the M. O. H., and gave regular seasons of opera with better success until 1897, when G. became the sole director; he retired in 1903, owing to ill health. The secret of his success was an extraordinary ability to feel the pulse of the public; with him opera was frankly a business; he knew the public wanted great stars, and he gave them Nordica, Melba, Eames, Calvé, the de Reszkés, Plançon and others; all other factors received scant attention; the repertory was determined and limited by the favorite rôles of the stars; although personally G. had no sympathy for Wagner's art, he immediately included the master's works, as soon as Mr. Damrosch had shown that there was a decided demand for them; and it was the immense popularity of Wagner that contributed chiefly toward the financial success of G.'s last seasons.

Graun, Johann Gottlieb, violin-virtuoso, brother of Karl H.; b. Wahrenbrück, 1698; d. Berlin, Oct. 27, 1771. Studied with his brother in the Kreuzschule, Dresden, also the violin under Pisendel, and later under Tartini at Padua. In 1728 he was leader in Crown Prince Frederick's orch. at Rheinsberg; from 1740, leader in the royal orch. at Berlin.—Works: 40 symphonies, 20 violin-concertos, 24 string-quartets, string-trios, etc. —See Q.-Lex.

Graun, Karl Heinrich, b. Wahrenbrück, Prussian Saxony, May 7, 1701; d. Berlin, Aug. 8, 1759. Pupil at the Kreuzschule, Dresden (1713–20), of Grundig (voice) and Chr. Petzold (org. and pf.), and sang in the 'Rathskapelle' as a soprano; while his voice was changing, he studied comp. under J. Chr. Schmidt, and frequently attended opera-performances (then directed by Lotti). In 1725 he was eng. as operatic tenor at Brunswick; but within a year his first venture as a dramatic comp. (Pollidoro, 1726) won him success; he was app. vice-Kapellm., and comp. 5 more operas for Brunswick. The Crown Prince Frederick ('the Great') induced G. in 1735 to come to Rheinsberg, where he set to music many cantatas written (in French verse) by his gifted patron. On Frederick's succession, Graun was commissioned to establish Ital. opera in Berlin, of which he was made Kapellm. For this company he composed 28 operas, among which Rodelinda (1741), Artaserse (1743), Catone in Utica (1744), Alessandro nell' Indie (1745), Adriano in Siria and Demofoonte (1746), Mitridate (1751), Semiramide (1754), Ezio (1755), and Merope (1756), were some of the most successful; for years, Hasse was the only rival comp. whose operas had a hearing in Berlin. As a church-comp., Graun is still better known to-day; his Passion Oratorio, Der Tod Jesu (1755), is still, by virtue of a bequest, perf. yearly at Berlin; a Te Deum (1756), commemorating the battle of Prague, is equally fine. Other works: 2 passion cantatas; about 25 other church-cantatas with orch.; and 20 Latin motets a 4 voci a cappella; funeral music for Duke Aug. Wilh. of Brunswick (1738) and for King Fr. Wilh. I of Prussia (1740); church-melodies for every day in the year (2 sets). His instrumental music (12 concertos for harpsichord with strings; flute-concertos; a concerto for flute, vln., gamba and 'cello; trios, organ-fugues, etc.) is of less value, and unpublished.—Cf. A. Meyer-Reinach, K. H. G. als Opernkomponist, in 'Smb. Int. M.-G.', i; K. Mennicke, Zur Biographie der Brüder Graun, in 'N. Ztschr. für M.' Graup'ner, Christoph, b. Hartmannsdorf, n. Kirchberg, Saxony (bapt. Feb. 22), 1687; d. Darmstadt, May 10, 1760. Pupil of Kuhnau at the Thomasschule, Leipzig; in 1706, accompanist, at Hamburg, to the opera under Keiser; 1710, vice-Kapellm., and in 1711 Kapellm., at Darmstadt. A diligent comp., even engraving some of his own music; he was blind for 10 years before his death.—Works: 6 operas prod. in Hamburg: Dido (1707); Die lustige Hochzeit (1708), with Keiser; Hercules und Theseus (1708); Antiochus und Stratonice (1709), Bellerophon (1709), Simson (1709); 3 for Darmstadt: Berenice und Lucio (1710), Telemach (1711), and Beständigkeit besiegt Betrug (1719). For harpsichord: Acht Parthieen für Clavier (1718), Monatliche Clavierfrüchte (1722), Acht Parthieen für das Clavier (1726), Die vier Jahreszeiten (1733); also a Hessen-Darmstädtisches Choralbuch. An immense number of MS. comps. are in the Library at Darmstadt. —Cf. W. Nagel, Chr. G. als Symphoniker, No. 49 of 'Musikalisches Magazin' (Langensalza, 1912).—See Q.-Lex.

Graziani (or Gratiani) [grah-ts'yah'nē], Bonifacio, b. Marino, Papal States, c. 1606; d. Rome, June 15, 1664, where he was maestro in the Seminario Romano and in the Jesuit ch.—Publ. works (posth.): 7 vols. of Motets a 2–6; 6 vols. do. a 1; 1 vol. of Psalms a 5, w. organ; 1 vol. of Salmi concertati; 2 vols. of Masses a 4–6; Litanies a 3–8; Vespers; Musiche sacre e morali con basso d'organo—all works of real value.

Grazia'ni, Francesco, brother of Ludovico; b. Fermo, April 16, 1829. Baritone stage-singer, successful in Italy, Paris (1854, and 1856–61 at the Théâtre Italien), New York (1855), London, and Petrograd (1861–4).

Grazia'ni, Ludovico, dramatic tenor, b. Fermo, Italy, in Aug., 1823; d. there in May, 1885. He sang in the chief Ital. cities, also in Paris (1858), London, Barcelona, and Vienna (1860), meeting with great success. For him Verdi wrote the part of Alfredo (Traviata).

Grazzini [grăh-tsē'nē], Reginaldo, b. Florence, Oct. 15, 1848; d. Venice, Oct., 1906. Studied at the R. Cons. in Florence under T. Mabellini. After serving as an opera-cond. in that city, he was app. Director of the Civic School of Music at Reggio d'Emilia, and theatre-cond. in 1881; the following year he became prof. of mus. theory, and artistic director, in the Liceo Benedetto Marcello, Venice. Talented comp.—Works: A sacred cantata (1875); a mass a 3, w. orch.; symphonies; a Marcia solenne (1887); pf.-music; and (in MS.) an opera.

Great'orex, Thomas, b. North Wingfield, Derby, Engl., Oct. 5, 1758; d. Hampton, n. London, July 18, 1831. Pupil of Dr. B. Cooke (1772); chorister at Concert of Antient Music (1778); org. of Carlisle cath. (1780–4); after travelling in Holland and Italy, he taught in London (1789–93), when he became cond. of the C. of A. M. He revived the Vocal Concerts (1801), and from 1819 was org. of Westminister Abbey.—Works: 12 glees (1832); Psalms; chants; A Selection of Tunes . . . (London, 1829); Parochial Psalmody (n.d.).

Gre'co (or Grec'co), Gaetano, b. Naples, c. 1680; d. (?). Pupil of Aless. Scarlatti, at the Cons. de' Poveri di Gesù Cristo, and succeeded him as teacher there in 1717, passing later to the Cons. of San Onofrio, where Pergolesi, Vinci and Francesco Durante were his pupils.—Works: Litanies a 4, w. 2 violins, viola, bass and organ; harpsichord-music; toccatas and fugues for organ; etc.

Greef [grāf], Wilhelm, b. Kettwig-on-Ruhr, Oct. 18, 1809; d. Mörs, Sept. 12, 1875. With L. Erk (his brother-in-law) he publ. school song-books, and new editions of Rinck's preludes, postludes, and Choralbuch.

Green, Samuel, b. London, 1730; d. Isleworth, Sept. 15, 1796. Renowed organbuilder, who adapted the 'Venetian' swell to the organ. His instruments were exported to Russia, the West Indies, etc.

Greene, Harry Plunket, bass singer; b. Old Connaught House, County Wicklow, Ireland, June 24, 1865. Destined for the bar, he embraced music; studied in Stuttgart, 1883–6, under Hromada and Goetschius, and 6 months under Vannucini at Florence; later, in London, under J. B. Welch and Alf. Blume. Début Jan. 21, 1888, in Handel's Messiah; début in opera at Covent Garden, June 2, 1890, as the Commendatore in Mozart's Don Giovanni. But in spite of his emphatic success he gave up the stage, and devoted himself to oratorio and lieder singing, in which field he has achieved signal distinction. Sir H. Parry wrote for him the oratorio Job (Gloucester Fest., 1892); for many years he had no less an artist than Leonard Borwick as his pianist. He has undertaken several artistic tours to the U. S., where he made a most favorable impression. He is now (1916) prof. of singing at R. C. M. and R. A. M.; has publ. Interpretation in Song.

Greene, Maurice, b. London, 1696 (or 1695); d. there Sept. 1, 1755. Chorister in St. Paul's Cath., under King; studied with R. Brind, became (1716) org. of St. Dunstan's, of St. Andrew's, Holborn (1717), and of St. Paul's Cath. (1718). In 1727 he succeeded Croft as org. and comp. to the Chapel Royal, and in 1730 was Tudway's successor as prof. of music at Cambridge, receiving the title of Mus. Doc.; in 1735, master of the King's Band. Later he made a great coll. of old English sacred music ('Cathedral Music,' ed. by Boyce).—Works: 2 oratorios, Jephthah (1737), and The Force of Truth (1744); a dram. pastoral, Florimel, or Love's Revenge (1737); a masque, The Judgment of Hercules (1740); an opera, Phœbe (1748); 40 Select Anthems in Score, a 2–8 (1743; 2 vols.); Spencer's Amoretti for voice, harpsichord and violin; several odes; catches, canons, songs, organ-pieces, harpsich.-music; Church Service in C; Te Deum in D; etc.—Cf. E. Walker, The Bodleian MSS. of M. G., in 'Mus. Ant.,' April-July, 1910.—See also Q.-Lex.

Gre'finger (or Gräfinger), Johann Wolfgang, Viennese comp. of the 16th century, pupil of Hofhaimer.—Works: Aurelii Prudentii Cathemerinon, 4-part odes (1515); and single motets in collections. He edited the rare Psalterium Pataviense . . . (1512).

Gregh [grāg], Louis, music-publ. in Paris; b. 1843; d. Dourdan, Feb., 1915. Having attracted favorable attention with a number of pleasing works for piano, he tried the stage with Un Lycée de jeunes filles (Paris, 1881), and scored a decided success; this was followed by other operas, all of the light genre: Le Présomtif (1884), Patard-Patard et Cie. (1893), Le capitaine Roland (1895); and the pantomime-ballets Arlette (Nice, 1892), and Les Instantanés (Paris, 1894).

Gregoir [grĕ-gwahr'], Édouard-Georges-Jacques, b. Turnhout, n. Antwerp, Nov. 7, 1822; d. Wyneghem, June 28, 1890. Studied with his brother (J.-M.-Jos. Gr.), and under Rummel at Biebrich; gave piano-concerts, and in 1842 travelled with Teresa and Maria Milanollo; but settled about 1851 in Antwerp as a composer and writer. He left his library to the Antwerp Music School.—8 operas: La Vie (Antwerp, 1848); Marguerite d'Autriche (Antwerp, 1850); De Belgen en 1848 (Brussels, 1851); La dernière nuit du comte d'Egmont (Brussels, 1851); Leicester (Brussels, 1854); Willem Beukels, Flemish 'opéra comique' in 1 act (Brussels, 1856); Willem de Zwyger (1856); La belle Bourbonnaise (1860?); an historical symph., Les Croisades; a symph. oratorio, Le Déluge; an overture, Hommage à Henri Conscience; overture in C; music for organ and for piano; over 100 male choruses; harmonium-pieces; vln.-music; songs.—His literary writings contain a vast amount of original information regarding music and musicians of the Netherlands, and are of great value to the music-historian. These are: Essai historique sur la musique et les musiciens dans les Pays-Bas (1861); Histoire de l'orgue (1865, with biogr. notes on Belgian and Dutch organists and organ-builders); Galerie biographique des artistes-musiciens belges du XVIII^e^ et du XIX^e^ siècles (1862; 2d ed. 1885); Notice sur l'origine du célèbre compositeur Louis van Beethoven (1863); Les artistes-musiciens néerlandais (1864); Du chant choral et des festivals en Belgique (1865); Schetsen van nederlandsche toonkunstenaars meest allen wenig of tot hiertoe niet gekend; Notice historique sur les sociétés de musique d'Anvers (1869); Recherches historiques concernant les journaux de musique depuis les temps les plus reculés jusqu'à nos jours (1872); Notice biographique d'Adrian Willaert; Réflexions sur la régénération de l'ancienne école de musique flamande et sur le théâtre flamand; Les artistes-musiciens belges au XIX^e^ siècle : réponse à un critique de Paris (1874); Documents historiques relatifs à l'art musical et aux artistes-musiciens (1872–76; 4 vols.); Panthéon musical populaire (1877–79; 3 vols.); Notice biographique sur F.-J. Gossé dit Gossec (1878); 1830–80 : l'art musical en Belgique sous les règnes de Léopold I et Léopold II (1879); Les gloires de l'Opéra et la musique à Paris (4 vols., 1880–3; vol. i embraces the period 1392–1750); Souvenirs artistiques (3 vols., 1888–9).

Gregoir, Jacques-Matthieu-Joseph, b. Antwerp, Jan. 18, 1817; d. Brussels, Oct. 29, 1876, where he had settled in 1848 as a teacher and comp. Fine pianist, pupil of Henri Herz and Chr. Rummel.—Works: An opera, Le Gondolier de Venise (Antwerp, 1847); Lauda Sion and Faust, for ch. and orch.; a piano-concerto (op. 100); many piano-pieces and piano-études; duos and fantasias for vln. or 'cello and piano (written in collaboration with Léonard, Servais, and Vieuxtemps).

Gregoro'vitch, Charles, gifted violinist, b. Petrograd, Oct. 25, 1867. Pupil of Wieniawski, also of Dont (Vienna), and Joachim (Berlin). Has played in most European capitals; in America 1896–7. After that nothing was heard of him until 1909, when he appeared again in Berlin with great success.

Gregory I, 'the Great,' b. Rome, 540; Pope from 590–604; celebrated in mus. history as the reformer of the R. C. Church Musical Ritual. By his order, and under his supervision, a collection was made (599) of the music employed in the different churches; the various offertories, antiphons, responses, etc., were revised, and regularly and suitably distributed over the entire year, in an arrangement which remains practically intact to this day (Gregorian Chant). While for centuries the sole credit for this reform had been ascribed to G., recent investigations of such scholars as Gevaert, Riemann, P. Wagner, Frère, Houdard, Gastoué, Mocquereau, and others prove that some of G.'s predecessors had begun this reform, and even definitely fixed the order of certain portions of the liturgy; and that the work of reform was definitely completed under some of his immediate successors.

Greith [grīt], Karl, b. Aarau, Feb. 21, 1828; d. Munich, Nov. 17, 1887. Pupil of K. Ett and J. G. Herzog in Munich and of K. L. Drobisch in Augsburg; lived as singing-teacher in St. Gall, 1849–51, then until 1856 in Frankfort; 1857–61, choral cond. and prof. of Esthetics at the Coll. in Schwyz; 1861–71, org. and Kapellm. at the Cath. and prof. of organ at the Seminary in St. Gall; in 1871 he settled in Munich, where he became Kapellm. at the Cath. in 1877.—Works: 14 masses (mostly in severe style), a Requiem (op. 1), Weihnachtskantate (op. 60), an oratorio, St. Gallus (1849); litanies, offertories and numerous motets; 3 Singspiele, Jung Rubens (op. 14), Der Mutter Lied (op. 21), Der verzauberte Frosch (op. 23); a symphony; organ-works; sacred and secular songs.

Grell, Eduard August, b. Berlin, Nov. 6, 1800; d. Steglitz, near Berlin, Aug. 10, 1886. Pupil of his father (an organist), and of J. C. Kaufmann, Ritschl, and Zelter. Organist of the Nikolaikirche, Berlin, in 1817; entered the Singakademie in that year, and became vice-director in 1832; court-cathedral organist in 1839, member of the Berlin Academy in 1841, choirmaster at the cathedral, 1843–5; in 1851 he succeeded Rungenhagen as teacher of composition at the Akademie; he became a member of the Academical Senate, also chief conductor of the Singakademie, retiring from this post in 1876. In 1838 he was created Royal Music-Director; in 1858, Professor; and in 1864 received the Ordre pour le mérite. In 1838 the Univ. of Berlin bestowed on him the honorary title of Dr. phil. G. was highly respected as a learned musician and an excellent teacher and conductor. He considered vocal music the only music worthy of the name; consequently, excepting an overture and a few organ-preludes, his comps. are vocal.—Works: Missa Solemnis (16 parts a capp.); an oratorio, Die Israeliten in der Wüste; a Te Deum; psalms a 8 and 11; cantatas, motets, hymns, Christmas songs, duets, songs; also an arrangement, for 4-part male chorus, of the Evangelical Gesangbuch (1883). G.'s views on vocal and instrumental music are laid down in his Aufsätze und Gutachten (Berlin, 1887).—Cf. H. Bellermann, E. A. G. (Berlin, 1899).

Grenié [grŭ-ñā'], Gabriel-Joseph, b. Bordeaux, 1757; d. Paris, Sept. 3, 1837. Inventor of the 'orgue expressif' (harmonium), from which the 'orgue expressif' of Érard was developed.

Grenville, Lillian, gifted dramatic vocalist; b. New York, Nov. 20, 1888. After a two years' course of training (1903–5) at Paris under Algier and Aramis she made her début at Nice on Feb. 15, 1906, as Juliette (in Roméo et J.), and was engaged at the Nice Opera for four seasons (1906–9). Meantime she was finishing her studies with Rossi at Milan (1906), and Sebastiani at Naples (1908); also filled engagements at the Teatro Lirico in Milan (1906), the Monnaie in Brussels (1907), the San Carlo in Naples (1908), the San Carlos in Lisbon (1909), and the Carlo Felice in Genoa (1909). For the season of 1910–11 she was a member of the Chicago Grand Opera Company under Dippel's management; American début at Auditorium in Chicago, Nov. 8, 1910, as Mimi in La Bohème. She has created the title-rôles in Pons's Laura (1906), Messager's Fortunio (1907), and Giordano's Marcella (1907), also the leading rôles in Jean Noguès' Quo Vadis (Eunice) and l'Auberge rouge (Minna), and Victor Herbert's Natoma (Barbara). Her favorite rôles are Thaïs, Manon, Tosca, and Mélisande. Compass of voice, from b-e^3; quality, lyric soprano.

Gresnich [not -nick], Antoine-Frédéric, dramatic composer; b. Liège (bapt. March 2, 1755); d. Paris, Oct. 16, 1799. He studied at the 'Collège Liégeois', Rome, and with Sala at Naples, where he produced operas before 1780; visited London in 1784 and '85, his success causing the Prince of Wales to app. him director of music in 1786; he returned to Paris in 1791, and in 1793 was chef d'orchestre of the Grand Th., Lyons, where the success of his l'Amour à Cythère (1793) opened the way for him in Paris. Here, from 1795–9, he brought out 16 operas, the last, Léonidas ou les Spartiates, failing at the Grand Opéra. His works include over a score of operas and considerable chamber-music, ariettas, duos, songs, etc.—See Q.-Lex.

Gretchani'nov, Alexander Tichonovitch, b. Moscow, Oct. 25, 1864. St. pf. with Safonov at the Moscow Cons. from 1881–91, and comp. with Rimsky-Korsakov at the Petrograd Cons. from 1891–3; he has never filled any positions, but devoted his entire time to composition, occasionally appearing as conductor of his own works. He is not specifically Russian in his instrumental works, which show traces of German influence; but his church-music follows the best national traditions. Altogether, he is one of the most important of modern Russian composers, a musician of real inventive power and solid attainments.—Works: 2 operas, Dobrinya Nikititch (Moscow, 1903) and Sœur Béatrice [after Maeterlinck] (ib., 1912; censor ordered it withdrawn after 4 performances because the Virgin was represented on the stage); 2 symphonies (op. 6, 27); 3 string-quartets (op. 2 [won prize of Petrograd Chamber-Music Soc.], 14, 70); an Elegy for orch. (op. 18); At the Crossroads for bass and orch. (op. 21); 2 complete Liturgies (op. 13, 29); songs (op. 1, 5, 7, 15, 20, 51); Laudate Deum, cantata for chorus and orch. (op. 65); numerous sacred choruses a capp.; also incidental music to Ostrovsky's Snow-Maiden, A. Tolstoi's Tsar Feodor and Ivan the Terrible.

Grétry, André-Ernest-Modeste, dram. composer; b. Liège, Feb. 8, 1741; d. Montmorency, n. Paris, Sept. 24, 1813. His father was violinist in the St.-Denis Collegiate Ch., where, at six years of age, the boy was placed as chorister. The severity of the masters was not conducive to his advancement; his father withdrew him from the choir and placed him with Leclerc (under whose tuition he became a proficient reader) and Renekin. An Italian company was then performing operas of Pergolesi, Galuppi, etc., in Liège; these performances contributed greatly to the development of his musical instinct. He commenced composing with such evidence of ability that he was placed under Moreau, m. de chap. of St. Paul's, for lessons in counterpoint. But, unable to restrain his eagerness to write, he could not apply himself to a severe course of study; though he produced 6 symphonies at Liège in 1758, and in 1759 wrote a mass, which so interested the Canon du Harlez that he procured G. the means to study in Rome. Arriving there in 1759, he entered the Collège de Liège, where he studied cpt. and comp. under Casali and Martini for 5 years. But G. was an unsatisfactory pupil, being too impatient of the abstractions of science; he had an irresistible leaning towards dramatic music and declamatory melody. His first dramatic essay, the intermezzo Le Vendemmiatrici, was well received at Rome, 1765; and G. was praised by Piccinni. But a perusal of the score of Monsigny's Rose et Colas showed him that comedy-opera was his real vocation. After 9 years in Rome, he set out for Paris, via Geneva, where he remained a year in hopes of inducing Voltaire to write him a libretto. Failing in this, he wrote new music to Favart's Isabelle et Gertrude for the Geneva Theatre, which was very successful. Following Voltaire's advice, he went to Paris, where two years elapsed in difficulties before Du Rozoy, an amateur, gave him the libretto of Les mariages Samnites. This got no further than rehearsals, but secured him the patronage of Count Creutz, the Swedish minister, who obtained for him Marmontel's comedy Le Huron; produced at the Opéra-Comique, 1768, it commenced a series of successes seldom equalled: Lucile, and his popular Le Tableau parlant (1769); Les deux avares, Sylvain, and l'Amitié à l'épreuve (1770); Zémire et Azor, l'Ami de la maison (1771); Le Magnifique (1773); La Rosière de Salency (1774); Céphale et Procris and La fausse magie (1775); Les mariages Samnites [revised] (1776); Matroco and Les Événements imprévus (1777); Le jugement de Midas and l'Amant jaloux (1778); Aucassin et Nicolette (1779); the grand opera Andromaque (1780); Émilie, la belle esclave [as the fifth act of a ballet, La fête de Mirza] (Opéra, 1781); La double épreuve [Colinette à la cour], and l'Embarras des richesses (1782); Théodore et Pauline [l'Épreuve villageoise], Richard Cœur de Lion, the grand opera La caravane du Caïre (1784; libretto by Louis XVIII, then Comte de Provence; perf. 506 times); Panurge dans l'île des lanternes (1785); Les méprises par ressemblance (1786); Le comte d'Albert, La suite du comte d'Albert and Le prisonnier anglais [Clarice et Belton] (1787); Amphitryon (1788); Le rival confident, Raoul Barbe-Bleue, and Aspasie (1789); Pierre le Grand (1790); Guillaume Tell (1791); Basile [A trompeur, trompeur et demi] and Les deux couvents [Cécile et Dermance] (1792); La rosière républicaine (1793); Joseph Barra, Callias, Denys le tyran, La fête de la raison (1794; during the Revolution); Lisbeth, Le barbier de village, and Anacréon chez Polycrate (1797); Elisca (1799); La casque et les colombes (1801); Delphis et Mopsa and Le ménage (1803). Grétry produced fifty operas; their merit lies in their melodies and their dramatic expression. He was not deeply versed in harmony; still, despite meagre harmonization, his orchestration is frequently clever and very effective. His operas suffered temporary eclipse when Méhul and Cherubini entered the field; public interest was revived by the magnificent tenor Elleviou in 1801; the changes in operatic music during the next 30 years caused their subsequent neglect. Richard Cœur de Lion is still played in Paris. Nevertheless, Grétry—'the Molière of music,' as he was called—founded the school of French comedy-opera, of which Boieldieu, Auber, and Adam have been such distinguished alumni. Further proof of his lack of technical knowledge appears in his Méthode simple d'harmonie (1802). His Mémoires ou Essais sur la musique (1789; 3 vols.) set forth his views on the paramount importance of the just declamation of every syllable set to music. During his lifetime G. was greatly honored. In France and abroad he was elected a member of most artistic and learned institutions which admitted musicians. The Prince-Bishop of Liège made him privy-councillor in 1784. In 1785 a street in Paris was named after him. In 1795 he was admitted to the Institut, and was one of the three first chosen to represent the department of musical composition. The same year he was appointed Inspector of the Conservatoire, but resigned in a few months, feeling incompetent for the post. His bust was placed in the foyer of the Grand Opéra, and a marble statue in the entrance-hall of the Opéra-Comique. In 1802 Napoleon made him Chevalier of the Legion of Honor, and granted him a pension of 4,000 francs in compensation for losses during the Revolution. He bought 'l'Ermitage,' Rousseau's former residence at Montmorency, and lived there in retirement. He occupied his last years in writing Réflexions d'un Solitaire, which his friends did not deem expedient to publish. [The MS. was considered lost until Ch. Malherbe discovered it in 1908; it has not yet been publ.] De la Vérité, a high-pitched avowal of republican tenets, with remarks on the feelings, and the best means of exciting and expressing them by music, appeared in 1803. Grétry was married and had several children, but survived them all. His daughter, Lucille, born in 1770, produced two successful operas, the first at thirteen years of age. She married unhappily, and died in 1792. G. left six operas which have never been performed: Alcindor et Zaïde, Zimeo, Zelmar, Électre, Diogène et Alexandre and Les Maures en Espagne. Two of his operas, Zémire et Azor and Richard Cœur de Lion, were adapted for the English stage. His Guillaume Tell created interest on its revival in Paris, when Rossini produced his opera of the same name. Besides dramatic works, G. wrote a De Profundis, Confiteor, a Requiem, motets, 6 symphonies, prologues, epilogues, divertissements, 6 pf.-sonatas, 6 string-quartets and two quartets for pf., flute, violin, and bass.—Under the auspices of the Belgian government a complete ed. of his works (edited by Gevaert, Radoux, E. Fétis, Wotquenne, Wouters and Closson) was begun in 1883 (publishers, Breitkopf & Härtel); up to 1916, 42 vols. have been published.

Greulich [groi'liyh], Adolf, b. Schmiedeberg, Silesia, 1836; d. July 20, 1890, at Breslau, where, since 1884, he had been Brosig's successor as cathedral Kapellm. Pupil of Brosig, Mosewius, Baumgart, and P. Lüstner; 1857, chorister and bass soloist in the cath.; 1870, cath. organist.—Works: Much sacred music.

Greu'lich, Karl Wilhelm, b. Kunzendorf, n. Löwenberg, Silesia, Feb. 13, 1796; d. 1837 in Berlin, where he had lived since 1816 as comp. and teacher (pupils: Prince Georg von Cumberland [George V], C. Eckert, Henriette Sontag). Besides pf.-comps., he publ. a Method for piano.

Grey, Frank H., b. Philadelphia, Nov. 15, 1883. While pursuing the regular academic course at Harvard Univ. (1903–7) he studied harmony and cpt. with Prof. W. Spaulding and orchestration with Prof. J. K. Paine; later he cont. his studies at the N. E. Cons. under Ch. Dennée (pf.) and F. S. Converse (comp.); since 1909 cond. of light opera. He has publ. an overture, Sunny Sicily; Rêve d'été, for violin and piano; about 40 pf.-pieces (Ten Aquarelles, Winter Scenes, Suite, etc.); songs. In MS. he has an overture, Balaklava; a string-quartet in C♯ m.; a Canon in G m. for strings; Fuga a 3 voci in D m.; etc.

Grieg, Edvard Hagerup, Norwegian composer and pianist; b. Bergen, June 15, 1843; d. there Sept. 4, 1907. His mother, a woman of musical culture, and a gifted pianist, was his first instructor. At the suggestion of Ole Bull, Grieg entered the Leipzig Cons. in 1858; for four years he studied harm. and cpt. under Hauptmann and Richter, comp. under Rietz and Reinecke, and pianoforte-playing under Wenzel and Moscheles. The works of Mendelssohn and Schumann gave the prevailing tone to musical Leipzig; but Grieg, while profiting by them, was strong enough to preserve his Scandinavian individuality. This he demonstrated in 1863, when he studied in Copenhagen under Gade, and came under E. Hartmann's influence. Of great importance in Grieg's career was his intimacy with the young Norwegian composer Rikard Nordraak, whose premature death cut short their crusade (as Grieg himself wrote) "against the effeminate Mendelssohnian-Gade Scandinavianism, turning with enthusiasm into the new, well-defined path along which the Northern school is now travelling." In 1867 Grieg founded a Musical Union in Christiania, which he conducted until 1880. Previous to this, in 1865, he had visited Italy, and did so again in 1870; associating much with Liszt in Rome. He also made artistic journeys to Germany, especially Leipzig, where his visits were protracted; at a Gewandhaus concert in 1879 he perf. his own piano-concerto, op. 16. After 1880, excepting time spent on professional tours, he lived chiefly in Bergen. In 1888 he visited London, and at a Philharm. concert played his piano-concerto and conducted his op. 34 (2 melodies for string-orch.). He revisited England frequently, the last time in 1906; in 1894 the honorary degree of Mus. Doc., Cantab., was bestowed on him. In 1867 he married his cousin Nina Hagerup (b. Bergen, 1845), who inspired many of his most beautiful songs. She also did much by her rare interpretation to popularize them, although she sang but seldom in public (the last time in London, 1898). Several competent critics praised her dramatic fervor, soulful delivery and unaffected manner, although her vocalism was not above criticism. Grieg's importance as a composer lies in the fact that he did what Gade apparently shrank from; he imbued his music with a strong strain of Scandinavian tonality, so that, without innovations in form, his works possess marked racial characteristics, to which is due much of their charm. His shorter piano-pieces are among the most charming compositions of their kind (e.g., the delightful Humoresken). Many of his songs, full of poetic feeling, are equally popular; the same may be said of his 3 violin-sonatas. In an age of sensationalism, when many of his contemporaries were striving after the colossal at the expense of form and euphony, G. clung to his ideal of the beautiful; he never attempted anything but what he felt to be fully within his powers. Thus he preserved his individuality, and proved—as Chopin and Schumann had done before—that real masterpieces can be cast in the smaller, even the smallest, forms.—BIBLIOGRAPHY: E. Grie'penkerl, Wolfgang Robert, amateur musician, son of Friedrich; b. Hofwyl, May 4, 1810; d. Brunswick, Oct. 17, 1868, in poverty. 1839, teacher of art-history at the Carolinum, Brunswick; 1840–7, teacher of literature at the Military School.—Publ. Das Musikfest, oder die Beethovener (a novel, 1838); Ritter Berlioz in Braunschweig (1843); Die Oper der Gegenwart (1847); and papers in the 'Neue Zeitschrift für Musik.'

Gries'bach, John Henry, b. Windsor, June 20, 1798; d. London, Jan. 9, 1875. Son of the 'cellist J. C. Griesbach. Pianist (pupil of Kalkbrenner) and composer; 'cellist (from 1810–18) in the Queen's Band. Dir. of the London Philh. Soc.—Works: An oratorio, Daniel (1854); overture and music to The Tempest; an operetta, James I., or the Royal Captive; operas The Goldsmith of West Cheap and Eblis (unfinished); a mus. drama, Raby Ruins; overtures for orch.; cantatas, anthems, songs.—Also An Analysis of Mus. Sounds (no date); Elements of Mus. Notation (n. d.); Pf. Student's Companion (1825); other works in MS.

Griesbacher, Peter, b. Egglham, Mar. 25, 1864; ordained priest, 1886; 1894 prefect of St. Emeran's Seminary, teacher at the Kirchenmusikschule and choir-director at the Franciscan Ch. at Ratisbon; after some years of pastoral duties at Osterhofen he returned to Ratisbon, where in 1911 he was app. canon at St. John's and prof. of cpt. at the Kirchenmusikschule. He has written a Stabat Mater, about 40 masses, many motets, litanies, etc.; also some secular cantatas and songs; the number of his works has reached op. 180 (1916). He began as a composer in the severe style; his latest works, in which he grafts modern impressionistic harmonies upon Gregorian melodies, have aroused considerable opposition. He has also publ. Kontrapunkt (1910) and Kirchenmusikalische Stilistik und Formenlehre (2 parts, 1912).

Grie'singer, Georg August, Secretary to the Saxon Embassy at Vienna; d. Leipzig, April 27, 1828. A friend of Haydn, he wrote the earliest biography of H. (1810), on which Framéry founded his Notice sur Jos. Haydn (1810).

Grill, Franz, d. Ödenburg, Hungary, c. 1795; publ. 12 sonatas for piano and violin (in Haydn's style), 12 string-quartets, and a caprice for piano.

Grill, Leo, b. Pest, Feb. 24, 1846; pupil of Franz Lachner in Munich; from 1871–1907, teacher of choral singing and theory at Leipzig Cons.; composed an overture Hilarodia (1892) and chamber-music.

Grillet [grē-yā'], Laurent, b. Sancoins, Cher, France, May 22, 1851; d. Paris, Nov. 5, 1901. Pupil of Auguste Martin ('cello), E. Mangin (harm.), and E. Ratez (cpt. and fugue); was chef d'orchestre of various minor theatres and orchestras; after 1886, of the Nouveau-Cirque, Paris.—Works: Several ballets, pantomimes, and the 3-act comic opera Graciosa (Paris, 1892); pieces for voice, piano, and orch.; also Les Ancêtres du Violon (2 vols., 1898), an historico-critical study on primitive stringed instrs.—He was one of the founders of the 'Association Artistique' and of the 'Société des instrs. anciens.'

Grimm, Friedrich Melchior, Baron von, b. Ratisbon, Dec. 26, 1723; d. Gotha, Dec. 18, 1807. From 1747 till 1793 he lived in Paris on intimate terms with Diderot, Rousseau, d'Alembert, etc., and was co-editor of the great 'Encylopédie.' He espoused the cause of the Buffonists (the supporters of the Ital. opera buffa, pitted against those of the old French opera seria), and his Lettre sur 'Omphale' (1752) opened hostilities. As correspondent of the Duchess of Gotha from 1753, he wrote many letters containing interesting details on contemp. French music and literature (publ. 1812-14, in 17 vols., as Correspondence littéraire, philosophique et critique).

Grimm, Julius Otto, pianist and comp.; b. Pernau, Livonia, March 6, 1827; d. Münster, Westphalia, Dec. 7, 1903. Pupil of Leipzig Cons.; founded a vocal society in Göttingen; went to Münster as conductor of the 'Cäcilienverein'; in 1878, Royal Mus. Dir. at Münster Academy; 1895 made 'R. Prof.', and 1897 Ph.D. (hon. c.).—Works: 1 symphony, in D m., op. 19; 2 suites in canon-form, for string-orch. (very fine); a third suite, op. 25; An die Musik, for soli, ch. and orch.; a violin-sonata in A, op. 14; piano-pieces; songs.

Guadagni [gwäh-däh'ñē], Gaetano, a famous male contralto; b. Lodi (Vicenza, acc. to Burney), c. 1725; d. Padua, c. 1797. He began his career at Parma in 1747; the next year he sang in London with enormous success, and remained there till 1753; then he went to Paris and Versailles, and in 1755 studied with Gizziello in Lisbon; after he had there acquired the highest finish, he continued his triumphant tours through Europe till 1777, amassing a considerable fortune; he then settled in Padua, singing at the church of San Antonio. The MS. of an aria, Pensa a serbarmi, is in the library of Bologna; an aria written for Gluck's Orfeo was publ. in Bremner's 'The Favourite Songs in the opera Orfeo' (London, n. d.).

Guarne'ri [gwähr-nā'rē] (latinized Guarne'rius), a famous family of violin-makers at Cremona, Italy.—Pietro Andrea, head of the family, b. c. 1630; d. Dec. 7, 1698; was a pupil of Nicolò Amati, and worked 1650–95. His violins, labelled Andreas Guarnerius Cremonæ sub titolo Sanctæ Theresiæ 16—, are much inferior to those of his nephew, Gius. Antonio.—Giuseppe, son of the preceding, b. Nov. 25, 1666; d. circa 1739; worked 1690–1730; his best instruments are from 1690–1710. He imitated Stradivari models; his label was Joseph Guarnerius filius Andreæ fecit Cremonæ sub titolo St. Theresiæ 16—. Pietro, Andrea's second son, b. circa 1670, worked in Cremona 1690–1700, then at Mantua till 1725.—Pietro, son of Giuseppe, b. April 14, 1695; worked 1725–40, and made violins and violoncelli after his father's models.—Giuseppe Antonio, known as Guarneri del Gesù from the 'I H S' often appearing on his labels; b. Oct. 16, 1687; d. circa 1745. He was the most celebrated of the family; his father, though a brother of Andrea, was not an instrument-maker. He worked for himself 1725–45; the violins of his medium period vie with the best of Stradivari. His instruments bear the label Joseph Guarnerius, Andreæ Nepos Cremonæ 17—, I. H. S. The violins of his later period are so poor as to raise doubts of their origin—a fact explained (?) by various legends, such as his having been driven to drink by an unfaithful wife, or having had, during a long term of imprisonment, to work with inferior materials. —Cf. H. Petherick, Joseph Guarnerius, His Work and His Master (London, 1906); A. Pougin, Une famille de grands luthiers italiens; Lütgendorff, Die Geigen- und Lautenmacher vom Mittelalter bis zur Gegenwart (Frankfort, 1904; 2d augmented edition 1913).

Of his pilgrimage to Jerusalem in 1588 he wrote in El viage de Jerusalem que hizo Fr. G. (1611). Publ. Psalmorum 4 voc. liber I, accedit missa defunctorum 4 voc. (1559; 2d ed., with Ital. title, 1584); Canticum beatae Mariae. . . . (1563); Liber I, missarum (1566; contains 9 masses and 3 motets); Libro di Motetti a 4, 5, 6 e 8 voci; and 2 5-part Passiones in Eslava's 'Lira Sacro-Hispaña.'—See Q.-Lex.

Gueymard [gā-mahr′], Louis, fine dram. tenor; b. Chapponay (Isère), France, Aug. 17, 1822; d. Corbeil, n. Paris, July, 1880. Pupil of Paris Cons.; eng. 1848–68 at the Grand Opéra.

Gueymard, Pauline, née Lautres, wife of Louis; mezzo-soprano stage-singer; b. Brussels, Dec. 1, 1834, and trained in the Cons. there; début 1855 at the Th.-Lyrique, Paris; sang, after 1855, at the Gr. Opéra.

Guglielmi [gŏŏl-yel′mē], Pietro, celebrated and prolific dram. composer; b. Massa di Carrara, Italy, in May, 1727; d. Rome, Nov. 19, 1804. His first music-teacher was his father [Pietro G., m. di capp. to the Duke of Modena]; he then studied at Naples under Durante in the Cons. di S. Loreto; and brought out his first opera at Turin in 1755. This was followed by nearly 200 more dram. works; after conquering the principal Italian stages, he acted for some years as Kapellm. to the Elector at Dresden (1762), then went to Brunswick, and from 1772–7 was in London. Returning to Naples, he found the operatic field occupied by two rivals, Paisiello and Cimarosa, and his own works nearly forgotten; but, by extraordinary efforts, he regained the public favor. His most noteworthy operas were I Viaggiatori ridicoli (1772), La Frascatana (1773), La Serva innamorata (1778), La bella pescatrice (1779), I fratelli Pappa Mosca (1783), La Pastorella nobile (1783), La Didone (1785), Enea e Lavinia (1785), I due gemelli (1787). App. maestro at the Vatican in 1793, he turned to church-music, composing the oratorios La morte d'Abele, Betulia liberata, La distruzione di Gerusalemme, Debora e Sisara (1794, considered by Zingarelli to be his masterpiece), and Le lagrime di S. Pietro; also an orchestral mass à 5, a Miserere a 5, a Psalm a 8, 6 divertissements for clavichord, vln., and 'cello; pieces for clavichord; etc.—Cf. G. Bustico, P. G. (Massa, 1899).—See also Q.-Lex.

Gugliel′mi, Pietro Carlo, son of preceding (called Guglielmi′ni to distinguish him from his father), b. Naples, 1763; d. Massa di Carrara, Feb. 28, 1827. A pupil of the Cons. S. Maria di Loreto, he likewise became a noted opera-composer, producing 25 operas in Naples and Milan; lived several years as a vocal teacher in London; and circa 1810 became m. di capp. to the Duchess of Massa di Carrara.

Guidet′ti [gwē-], Giovanni, baptized Bologna, Jan. 1, 1531; d. Rome, Nov. 30, 1592. After taking holy orders, he became Palestrina's pupil, and in 1575 was appointed 'cappellano' (a clerical beneficiary) and chorister in the Papal choir. For several years he worked with Palestrina on a revised edition of the Gradual and Antiphonary; but this work being forestalled by the publication of Leichtenstein's edition (Venice, 1580), he turned his attention to other fields, and publ. Directorium chori ad usum sacro-sanctæ basilicæ Vaticanæ . . . (Rome, 1582, and other editions); Cantus eccl. passionis Domini Nostri Jesu Christi, secundum Matthæum, Marcum, Lucam et Joannem (Rome, 1586); Cantus eccles. officii majoris hebdomadæ . . . (Rome, 1587; new ed. 1619); and Præfationes in cantu firmo . . . (Rome, 1588).—See Q.-Lex.

Gui′do d'Arez′zo [gwhē′dŏh dah-ret′sŏh] (Guido Areti′nus), famous reformer of musical notation and vocal instruction. It was generally believed that he was born at Arezzo, Tuscany, circa 995. Dom G. Morin, in 'Revue de l'art Chrétien' (vol. iii, 1888), brings evidence that G. was educated in the monastery St. Maur des Fossés, near Paris, and makes it seem probable that he was born in that vicinity. [Some of his writings are quoted under the name 'Guido de Sancto Mauro'.] He died (probably) at Avellano, May 17, 1050. He became a monk in the Benedictine monastery of Pomposa, near Ferrara; here his superior musical ability, and especially his method of vocal teaching, aroused the envy of his fellow-monks, and even of the abbot; so that G. left the monastery and (according to some authorities) wandered from place to place, disseminating his new ideas, or (according to others) repaired to the Benedictine monastery of Arezzo. However this may be, his fame spread, and reached the ears of Pope John XIX, who called him to Rome, in order to learn his novel system of teaching. After this G. became (1029) Prior of the Camaldolite fraternity at Avellano, where he died.—After the ascription of all possible reforms, and even the invention of music itself, to Guido, by earlier historians, some later writers, with an excess of caution, have gone to the opposite extreme of denying him all originality. But it is certain that he introduced the staff of four lines, retaining the red f-line and the yellow c-line of his predecessors, and drawing between them a black a-line, above them a black e-line, and writing the mensural notes (which he did not invent) in regular order on these lines and in the spaces:

He also added new lines above or below these, as occasion required; thus, wherever his invention was adopted, it finally did away with all uncertainty of pitch. It is likewise highly probable that he invented the system of Solmisation, the syllables being derived from the song to St. John:

Ut queant laxis Resonare fibris
Mira gestorum Famuli tuorum, Solve polluti Labii reatum, Sancte Joannes.

Whether he practically applied this invention in the hexachordal system of Mutation is disputed. Fétis considers his chief merit to have been his method of teaching vocal intervals by the aid of a sliding graduated scale adapted to the ancient monochord.

Guignon [gē-ñŏhn′], Jean-Pierre, b. Turin, Feb. 10, 1702; d. Versailles, Jan. 30, 1774; was the last to bear the title of 'roi des violons et maître des ménétriers' (relinquished by the younger Dumanoir in 1695). G. came to Paris, studied the violin, entered the King's service in 1733, and by ingratiating himself with the monarch, persuaded him to issue letters patent reviving the absurd and obnoxious office [the prerogative of which, as claimed by the elder Dumanoir, was to require all musicians, even organists, to obtain diplomas as dancing-masters—a fee to be paid for the privilege, of course]. But the parliament was stormed with petitions and memorials innumerable, and G. was forced to 'abdicate' in 1773.—He composed several books of concertos, sonatas, and duos for violin.

Guilmant [gēl-măhn′], Alexandre-Félix, eminent organist and composer; b. Boulogne, March 12, 1837; d. Meudon, near Paris, March 30, 1911. Organ pupil of his father [Jean-Baptiste G., b. Boulogne, 1793; d. there 1890]; later of Lemmens; studied harmony with G. Carulli. Eager student of musical literature and organ, practising 8 to 10 hours at a time; at 12, often substituted for his father at the church of St.-Nicholas; at 16, organist at St.-Joseph; at 18, his first composition, a solemn mass, was produced; at 20, choirmaster at St.-Nicholas, teacher in Boulogne Cons., and conductor of a mus. society. His fine playing at the inauguration of the organs at St.-Sulpice and Notre-Dame, Paris, caused his app. as organist of Ste.-Trinité in 1871, succeeding Chauvet; he resigned this position in 1901; in 1894, co-founder of, and teacher at, the Schola Cantorum; 1896, organ-prof. at Paris Cons.; in 1910 the Univ. of Manchester conferred upon him the degree of Mus. Doc. (hon. c.). His concert-tours in England, Italy, Russia, and (1893, 1897–8) the United States were extremely successful. He was not only a virtuoso of the first rank, but also a master in the art of improvisation; his influence upon contemporary organists is enormous, and, thanks to the achievements of his many distinguished pupils, will long continue to be felt. Of the highest importance, because they shed new light on the history of organ-music, are his two monumental editions, 'Archives des Maîtres de l'Orgue,' and 'École classique d'Orgue.' The former, with biographical studies by André Pirro, is a new edition of works by early French masters (Titelouze, Raison, Roberday, du Mage, Marchand, Clérambault, Daquin, Gigoult); the latter, of all important masters from Frescobaldi to Wilh. Friedemann Bach (25 books). G.'s importance as a composer rests upon his organ-works, and these occupy a very high rank. The sum total of his compositions comprises 94 opus-numbers.—Works (N. B. Several works are publ. with the same opus-number [e. g., 3 entirely different works are publ. as op. 44]): For organ: 8 sonatas (op. 42, D m.; op. 50, D; op. 56, C m.; op. 61, D m.; op. 80, C m.; op. 86, B m.; op. 89, F; op. 91, A); 18 books of Pièces d'Orgue (op. 15–20, 24, 25, 33, 40, 44, 45, 69–72, 74, 75); 12 books of l'Organiste pratique (op. 39, 41, 46, 47, 49, 50, 52, 55–59); The Practical Organist (also 12 books, partly identical with preceding); op. 65, l'Organiste liturgiste (10 books); op. 60, Noëls, Offertoires, Élévations, etc. (4 books); op. 90, 18 Pièces nouvelles; op. 93, Chorals et Noëls; op. 94, 3 Oraisons.—For organ and orch.: Op. 41, Marche funèbre; op. 42, Symphonie No. 1 (later rewritten as 1st organ-sonata); op. 44, Marche-Fantaisie; op. 63, Méditation sur le Stabat Mater; op. 74, Marche élégiaque; op. 81, Allegro; op. 83, Final alla Schumann; Adoration (no opus-number).—For various instruments: Op. 22, Prière for vcl. and pf.; op. 26, Pastorale for pf. and organ; op. 34, Marche triomphale for pf. and organ (or orch.); op. 36, Scherzo capriccioso; op. 40, Finale in E♭; op. 44, Élégie-Fugue for pf. and organ; op. 46, Mélodie for vln. and pf. (or organ); op. 78, Berceuse for flute and pf.; op. 78, Romance sans paroles for flute and pf.; op. 88, Morceau symphonique for trombone and pf.; 2 Romances sàns paroles for vcl. (or vln.) and pf. (no opus-number).—The vocal works comprise 3 grand masses for soli, ch. and org. (or orch.), in F, A m., E♭; Psalms 24 and 83; Belsazar, lyric scene for soli, ch. and orch.; litanies, vespers, and numerous motets. Besides, he edited 'Répertoire des Concerts du Trocadero' (4 books; selected works of old masters perf. at his historical concerts, 1902–6). He also published a vast number of transcriptions and arrangements of old and modern masters.—Cf. de La Tombelle, et al., A la mémoire de A. G. (Paris, 1911).

Guiraud [gē-roh'], Ernest, b. New Orleans, June 23, 1837; d. Paris, May 6, 1892. A precocious composer, pupil of his father [Jean-Baptiste G., Prix de Rome at Paris Cons., 1827], a music-teacher. He visited Paris at 12; at 15, he produced the opera Le roi David in New Orleans. Returning to Paris, he studied in the Cons. under Marmontel (pf.), Barbereau (harm.), and Halévy (comp.), taking the Grand prix de Rome, 1859, for his cantata Bajazet et le joueur de flûte. Studied in Rome 1860–3; served in the campaign of 1870–1; later played at the Concerts Populaires, and brought out an orch. suite, in 1872, which secured him a high position as a comp.; in 1876 he was app. prof. of harm. and accomp. at the Cons.; in 1880 he succ. Massé as prof. of comp.; succ. Delibes in 1891 as member of the Academy.—Operas: Sylvie (Paris, Op.-Com., 1846); En prison (Th.-Lyrique, 1869); Le Kobold (Op.-Com., 1870); Mme. Turlupin (Th. de l'Athéneé, 1872); Gretna Green [ballet] (Gr. Opéra, 1873); Piccolino (Op.-Com., 1876); La galante aventure (ib., 1882); the posth. opera Brunhilde (finished by Saint-Saëns, and prod., as Frédégonde, at Paris, 1895); also a solemn mass, an overture, etc.; and a Traité d'Instrumentation.

Gulbins, Max, b. Kammetschen, East Prussia, July 18, 1862. Pupil at Kgl. Hochschule in Berlin of Härtel, Kiel and Herzogenberg, 1882–8; choral cond. at Insterburg, 1896; 1900–8, cond. and org. at Elbing; since 1908, org. at St. Elisabeth's in Breslau.—Works: Op. 13, Sturmlied for male ch. and orch.; An das Vaterland, do.; op. 30, Burggraf Friedrich von Nürnberg, do.; male choruses a capp.; songs; organ-works (4 sonatas, op. 4, 18, 19, 28; Choral-Vorspiele, op. 16), etc.

Gulbranson, Ellen (née Norgren), famous dramatic soprano; b. Stockholm, March 4, 1863. She ent. the Cons. there in 1880, and in 1883 went to Paris to Mme. Marchesi; début in concert at Stockholm in 1886 with great success; three years later she made her operatic début there as Amneris. Her powerful and sympathetic voice, dramatic intensity and splendid stage-appearance rapidly made her famous, so that in 1892 she was brought to Frau Wagner's attention, who recognized in her an ideal Brünnhilde; in 1896 she sang this part at Bayreuth (in all the dramas) with overwhelming success, and has since then been heard repeatedly at the Festivals. For many years she was a member of the R. Opera at Berlin, and received the title 'Kammersängerin.' In 1890 she married Hans G., an officer in the Norwegian army; now (1916) living in Christiania.

Gulli, Luigi, concert-pianist; b. Scilla, Calabria, June 17, 1859. He received his first instruction from his father, a talented amateur. From 1870–9 he was a pupil of B. Cesi at the R. Collegio di Musica in Naples; then settled in Rome as teacher; in 1896 he formed the 'Società del Quintetto,' which soon was famous throughout Italy for its finished performances of both classical and modern chamber-music; France, Germany and Scandinavia received the organization with marked favor. G.'s playing is characterized by poetic conception and great refinement. Now (1916) living in Chicago; member of the R. Acad. of St. Cecilia; Chev. of the Crown of Italy. He has publ. some interesting comps. for piano.

Gum'bert, Ferdinand, b. Berlin, April 21, 1818; d. there on April 6, 1896. Pupil of E. Fischer and Cläpius. Began his artistic career as tenor singer at Sondershausen Th.; 1840–42, baritone singer at Cologne Th. St. comp. under Constantin Kreutzer, by whose advice he left the stage, and settled in Berlin as comp., vocal teacher, and, later, music critic.—Works: About 500 songs, some eminently popular; his operettas, prod. in Berlin [Die schöne Schusterin (1844), Die Kunst, geliebt zu werden (1850), Der kleine Ziegenhirt (1854), Bis der Rechte kommt (1856), Karolina, etc.,] were not so successful. He began his career as a flutist, but pulmonary trouble compelled him to abandon that instrument. Having become a virtuoso on the cembalo, he made successful tours of Europe, playing almost exclusively his own comps. and transcriptions. He died suddenly at his instrument during a concert. —Cf. S. Schlesinger, J. G. (Vienna, 1836).

Gutheil-Schoder [goot'hīl], Marie, celebrated dramatic mezzo-soprano; b. Weimar, Feb. 10, 1874. Pupil of Virginia Gungl at the Grossherzogl. Musikschule in Weimar; her successful début there in 1891 led to an immediate enagagement; member of the Weimar court opera till 1900; since then one of the stars of the Vienna court opera.

Gut'mann [goot'-], Adolf, b. Heidelberg, Jan. 12, 1819; d. Spezia, Oct. 27, 1882. Pupil and friend of Chopin; von Lenz considered his playing bad, but other critics praised him. He was a prolific comp. of piano-music.

Guźewski [goo-zheff'skē], Adolf, b. Dyrwianz, Lithuania, 1876. Pupil of the Petrograd Cons., then of Noskowski in Warsaw; since 1910 prof. of pf. and theory at the Warsaw Cons.—Comp. of a Polish opera, The Ice-Maiden (Warsaw, 1907), a set of vars. for orch., and a symph. in A; has also publ. A Practical Treatise on Instrumentation (1909; in Polish).

Gy'rowetz [gē'roh-vets], Adalbert, b. Budweis, Bohemia, Feb. 19, 1763; d. Vienna, March 19, 1850. Originally a law-student, he studied music with his father, a choirmaster; became secretary to Count Fünfkirchen, with whom he went to Vienna, where his symphonies won favor through Mozart's aid. He studied for 2 years under Sala, at Naples; went to Paris and London, where he prod. an opera, Semiramide (1792), and returned to Vienna in 1793. As a lawyer speaking six languages, he acted as secretary of legation in various German cities. From 1804–31, Kapellm. of the Court Opera at Vienna, retiring on a small pension. He was an extraordinarily productive composer; one of his operas, Der Augenarzt (Vienna, 1811), enjoyed long-continued popularity; but his 30 operas and operettas; 40 ballets; 60 symphonies; 12 serenades; 3 quintets; 60 quartets; 24 trios; 36 pf.-sonatas; 12 nocturnes; 19 masses; also cantatas, part-songs, songs; overtures, marches, dances, etc., are forgotten.—Autobiogr. as Biographie des A. G. (1848; new edition by A. Einstein, 1915).—See Q.-Lex.

Haack, Friedrich, b. Potsdam, c. 1760. Even as a boy he was a celebrated violinist; was app. member of the orch. of the Prince of Prussia; 1779 org. in Stargardt, Pomerania, and 1793 Musikdirektor in Stettin; wrote symphonies and vocal works in the larger forms. Rochlitz speaks of him as among the foremost composers of his day.

Haack, Karl, b. Potsdam, Feb. 18, 1751; d. there Sept. 28, 1819. Pupil of Franz Benda; violinist, and later concert-master, in the orch. of the Prince of Prussia; on the latter's accession to the throne (Friedrich Wilhelm II) he became conc.-master of the R. Orch.; pensioned in 1811. His concertos and sonatas were esteemed by his contemporaries; among his pupils were L. Maurer and K. Möser.

Haarklou [hahr'kloo], Johannes, b. Söndfjord, n. Bergen, Norway, May 13, 1847. From 1873–6 pupil of the Leipzig Cons.; 1877–8 in Berlin of Haupt (org.) and Kiel and Bungert (comp.); since 1880 org. at the old Akers Ch. in Christiania; 1885–8, cond. of the symph. concerts there. His 5 operas have not found their way beyond Norway, but among the works more generally known are an oratorio, Skapelsen (The Creation), 2 symphonies (B♭ and D m.) and Olafs-Legende for orch.; has also publ. a sonata for vln. and pf.; organ-works (a sonata, preludes and fugues, etc.); piano-pieces; songs.

Haas, Alma (née Hollaender, sister of Alexis H.), b. Ratibor, Jan. 31, 1847. Pupil of Wandelt in Breslau and of Kullak in Berlin, 1862–8; pianistic début at Gewandhaus in 1868, followed by tours of Germany and England. After her marriage in 1872 to Prof. Ernest H., the Oriental scholar, she settled in London and gave up her concert-career, but taught; 1876, instr. at Bradford Coll.; since 1886 at King's Coll. After her husband's death in 1882 she returned to the concert-stage.

Haas, Joseph, b. Maihingen, Bavaria, March 19, 1879. Pupil of M. Reger in Munich, then of the Leipzig Cons.; since 1911 teacher of comp. at the Stuttgart Cons. Has written a Serenade for orch., op. 33; sonata for violin and pf., op. 21; 2 sonatinas for do., op. 4; Suite for do., op. 40; a sonata for horn and pf., op. 29; Divertimento f. str.-quartet, op. 32; a string-trio, op. 22; trio f. 2 vlns. and pf., op. 38; org.-works (2 suites, sonata, fugues and preludes); pf.-pieces; choruses and songs.

Haas, Robert Maria, b. Prague, Aug. 15, 1886. Studied musicol. in Prague, Berlin and Vienna; Ph.D., Prague, 1908; was for some time asst. to G. Adler at the Inst. for Mus. Hist. inVienna; then cond. in Münster, Erfurt, Constance and Dresden; now (1916) Secr. of the 'Corpus Scriptorum de Musica' and 'Dkm. der Tonk. in Österreich.' Has publ. valuable essays in 'Sbd. d. Int. M.-G.' and Adler's 'Studien zur Musikwissenchaft,' and edited works of Umlauf and Gassmann for the 'Dkm. der T. in Ö.' (vols. xviii, l and xxi). Comps.: String-quartets, pf.-quintets, 2 pf.-sonatas, a 'cello-sonata, a vln.-sonata, a trio-suite and songs.

Ha'beneck, François-Antoine, b. Mézières (Ardennes), France, June 1 (Jan. 23?), 1781; d. Paris, Feb. 8, 1849. His father, a native of Mannheim, and member of a French regimental band, taught him the violin, and H. composed quite extensive works without theoretical teaching. Entering Baillot's class in the Paris Cons. in 1801, he won the first prize, in 1804, for violin-playing; then joined the Opéra-Comique orch., but soon entered the Opéra orch., and became leader under Kreutzer. From 1806 until the (temporary) suspension of the Cons., H. conducted most of the concerts; in 1828 he became the permanent concert-director, and made the concerts famous. He was Director of the Grand Opéra 1821–4, and succeeded Kreutzer in 1826 as conductor, holding this position 20 years. He was also app. prof. of vln. at, and Inspector-General of, the Cons.; among his pupils were Alard and Léonard. By introducing Beethoven's symphonies to the French public, he did inestimable service to the cause of good music.—Publ. works: 2 vln-concertos; 3 duos concertants for 2 vlns.; one set of orchl. variations; a set of variations for string-quartet; a nocturne for 2 vlns. on motives from La Gazza ladra; 3 caprices for vln. solo with bass; polonaises for vln. and orch.; and fantasias for vln. and piano.

Ha'berbier, Ernst, accomplished pianist; b. Königsberg, Oct. 5, 1813; d. Bergen, Norway, March 12, 1869, while playing at a concert. A pupil of his father, an organist, he left home in 1832, a well-equipped pianist, and went to Petrograd, where he had good fortune as a concert-giver and teacher, becoming court pianist in 1847. Gave concerts in London in 1850; then retired to Christiania, and perfected what he considered a novel system of piano-technique—the division of difficult passages between the two hands (Scarlatti and Bach had done the same thing). After brilliant concerts in Copenhagen, Kiel, and Hamburg, he appeared at Paris in 1852, and created a sensation. Thereafter he made tours through Germany, Russia, and Denm., and in 1866 settled in Bergen as a teacher.—Brilliant pf.-music (Études-Poésies, op. 53).

Ha'berl, Franz Xaver, eminent theorist, mus. editor, and historiographer; b. Oberellenbach, Lower Bavaria, April 12, 1840; d. Ratisbon, Sept. 5, 1910. Studied in the Boys' Seminary at Passau, and took holy orders in 1862; 1862–7, cathedral-Kapellm. and mus. dir. at the Seminary; 1867–70, org. at Sta. Maria dell' Anima, Rome; 1871–82, cathedral-Kapellm. at Ratisbon, where he founded, in 1875, a world-renowned school for church-music. He is an authority on Catholic church-music, past and present. In 1872 he assumed the editorship (vacated by Schrems' death) of the collection 'Musica divina'; and has edited the periodical 'Musica sacra' since Witt's death in 1888. In 1876 he began to publish the 'Cäcilienkalender,' the scope of which was gradually widened, until, after 1885, it was issued under the more appropriate name of 'Kirchenmusikalisches Jahrbuch'; as such it has become one of the most important publications for historical studies concerning the church-music of the 15th, 16th and 17th centuries; H. continued as editor until 1907, when he resigned and was succ. by Karl Weinmann. He founded a Palestrina Soc. in 1879, and (beginning with vol. x) was editor-in-chief of Breitkopf & Härtel's complete edition of Palestrina's works (33 vols., finished on the tercentenary of the master's death, 1894), which he aided not only by his experience and learning, but also by rare MSS. from his private collection. In 1899 he was elected Pres. of the 'Allgem. Cäcilienverein,' and became editor of its official organ, 'Fliegende Blätter für Kathol. Kirchenmusik.' In 1889 he was made Dr. theol. (hon. c.) by the University of Würzburg; in 1908 'Monsignore.' Under his general supervision a new edition of the 'Editio Medicea' (1614) of the Plain-Chant melodies was issued, with Papal sanction, at Ratisbon (1871–81). When modern scholarship had proved beyond a doubt that the original edition had not been published with Papal sanction and had not been revised by Palestrina, that, in fact, it contained the old melodies in badly distorted and mutilated form, the Papal sanction was withdrawn, the edition suppressed and replaced by a new 'Editio Vaticana' in 1904. The result of this was that H.'s books dealing with Plain-Chant (which had been held in the highest esteem, and had passed through many editions) became practically worthless. The books thus affected are: Praktische Anweisung zum harmonischen Kirchengesang (1864), Magister Choralis (1865; 12th ed. 1899; transl. into Engl., Fr., Ital., Span., Polish and Hung.), Officium hebdomadae sanctae (1887, in Ger.), Psalterium vespertinum (1888). His other writings, the value of which remains unimpaired, are Bertalotti's Solfeggien (1880), Wilhelm Dufay (1885), Die Römische 'Schola Cantorum' u. die päpstlichen Kapellsänger bis zur Mitte des 16. Jahrh. (1887), Bibliographischer u. thematischer Musikkatalog des päpstlichen Kapellarchivs im Vatikan zu Rom (1888).

Ha'berfmann, Franz Johann, b. Königswarth, Bohemia, 1706; d. Eger, April 7, 1783. He studied in Italy; became maître de chap. to the Prince of Condé in Paris, 1731; then maestro di capp. to the Grand Duke at Florence; going to Prague, he wrote an opera for Maria Theresa's coronation, was Kapellm. of two churches, and gave many lessons; in 1773 he became mus. dir. in the Dekanatkirche at Eger. He published 12 masses and 6 litanies, and left in MS. 2 oratorios, besides symphonies, sonatas, and church-music.

Ha'bert, Johannes Evangelista, b. Oberplan, Bohemia, Oct. 18, 1833; d. Gmunden, Sept. 1, 1896. From 1861 he was org. at Gmunden, and comp. masses, offertories, organ-pieces, pf.-music, and songs; a complete ed. of his works was publ. by Breitkopf & Härtel. But he is more important as a writer. In 1868 he founded, and till 1883 edited, 'Zeitschrift für Kathol. Kirchenmusik.' Publ. Beiträge zur Lehre von der musikalischen Komposition (4 vols., 1899).—Cf. A. Hartl, Joh. Ev. H., Organist in Gmunden (Vienna, 1900).

Ha'ckel, Anton, b. Vienna, April 17, 1779; d. there July 1, 1846. Amateur composer, government official in the dept. of buildings. Comp. church- and military music, and many songs (the ballad Die nächtliche Heerschau had great vogue).

Hackh, Otto (Christoph), b. Stuttgart, Sept. 30, 1852. Pupil 1871–5, at Stuttgart Cons., of Pruckner and Speidel (pf.), and Seifriz (harm. and comp.); also 1887–8 of A. de Kontski (pf.) at New York. From 1872–5 H. was Speidel's first asst.-teacher; 1877–8, concert-tours in S. Germany, Tyrol, and Switzerland; taught and concertized in London during 1878; tours in 1879; went to New York in 1880, where, until 1889, he was head of pf.-dept. in the Grand Cons. Then, after private teaching for 2 years, he spent 3 years in Europe to recover from nervous exhaustion. Since 1895, teacher in New York and Brooklyn.—One of the most fecund of contemporary pf.-composers, H. has publ. some 200 pieces for solo pf., pf. 4 hands, and pf. with orch., incl. salon-works in modern brilliant style, instructive comps., dance-music, etc.; many of these, and also many of his numerous songs, are extremely popular.

Hadley, Henry (Kimball), b. Somerville, Mass., Dec. 20, 1871. He received his first instruction on the piano and violin from his father, and then studied theory and comp. at the N. E. Cons. with S. Emery and G. W. Chadwick; in 1894 he studied cpt. with E. Mandyczewski in Vienna; 1895–1902, dir. of music at St. Paul's School, Garden City; 1904–9, in Germany, where he app. in various cities as cond. of his own works; 1908–9 cond. at the Stadtth. in Mayence, where he brought out his 1-act opera Safie (April 6, 1909). In 1909 he returned to the U. S., and was cond. of the Seattle Symph. Orch. from 1909–11; 1911–15, cond. of the San Francisco Symph. Orch.; has also appeared with several of the larger orchs. and at Music Festivals as cond. of his works. Among American composers H. occupies a position of prominence. He not only has the gift of melody, but also the courage to write it, without straining after 'original,' ultra-modern effects and intangible 'atmosphere.' His music is sane and fresh, written with regard for the fundamental principles of form and euphony; his orchestration is always natural, skilful and effective.—Works: A comic opera, Nancy Brown; the grand operas Safie (Mayence, 1909) and Azora Daughter of Montezuma (Chicago, 1917); a festival play The Atonement of Pan (Bohemian Grove Club, 1912); 4 symphonies: No. 1, Youth and Life (1897), No. 2, The Four Seasons (1902; won the Paderewski Prize and another offered by the N. E. Cons.), No. 3, in B m. (1906), No. 4, North, East, South, West (Norfolk Fest., 1911); 3 overtures: Hector and Andromache, In Bohemia, Herod (after S. Phillips' play); 2 tone-poems, Salome (1905) and Lucifer (1913); a Symphonic Fantasy; a rhapsody, The Culprit Fay (1909; won a $1,000 prize of the Nat. Fed. of Mus. Clubs); an Oriental Suite; 3 Ballet-Suites; a Konzertstück for 'cello and orch. (1907); a string-trio; a string-quartet; the cantatas In Music's Praise (1899; won O. Ditson Prize), Lelewala, A Legend of Granada, Merlin and Vivien, The Fate of Princess Kiyo; incid. music to The Daughter of Hamilcar and Audrey; 6 Ballads with orch.; over 100 songs (German and English). A

Hadow, William Henry, b. Ebrington, Gloucestershire, Dec. 27, 1859. He received the regular classical education at Malvern Coll. (1871–8) and Worcester Coll., Oxford (1878–82); studied pf. at Darmstadt (1882) and comp. with Dr. C. H. Lloyd in Oxford (1884–5); A. M., 1888; Mus. Bac., 1890. In 1885 he was app. Fellow and Tutor in Worcester Coll.; Dean, 1888–1909; Examiner in Oxford Locals (1894–1909), in Literæ Humaniores (1900–2), in Modern Languages (1905), in Engl. Lang. and Lit. (1907–9). Since 1909 Principal of Armstrong Coll., Newcastle-upon-Tyne; since 1916 Vice-Chancellor of the Univ. of Durham. In 1890–2 he delivered the lectures on Mus. Form in place of Sir. J Stainer; has also given three courses of lectures on music before the 'R. Institution' in London. In 1909 he was made Hon. Fellow of Worcester Coll. and Mus. Doc. (hon. c.); the next year Durham Univ. also conferred upon him the same degree; Member of Council of R. C. M. and Vice-Pres. of R. C. O.; Fellow R. Soc. Lit.—He has written a cantata, The Soul's Pilgrimage; incid. music to R. Bridges' Demeter; anthems, songs and a considerable quantity of chamber-music (a string-quartet, 2 sonatas for vln. and pf., a sonata for piano and vla., piano-trios, etc. [in MS.]). Of more importance are his books: Studies in Modern Music (1st series, 1892; 2d series, 1894); Sonata-Form (1896); A Croatian Composer (1897); The Viennese Period (vol. v of the 'Oxford Hist. of Music,' 1904). He has edited 'Songs of the British Islands' (1903) and was editor-in-chief of the 'Oxford History of Music' (1901–5); contrib. to 'Encycl. Brit.', 'Quarterly Rev.', 'Edinburgh Rev.', 'Mus. Quarterly' (Schirmer), etc. A Hainl, Georges-François, noted 'cellist; b. Issoire, Puy-de-Dôme, Nov. 19, 1807; d. Paris, June 2, 1873. Pupil of Norblin in Paris Cons. (1829); took 1st 'cello-prize in 1830. He then travelled; in 1840 accepted the post of 1st 'chef d'orchestre' at the Grand Théâtre, Lyons, and in 1863 a similar position at the Grand Opéra, Paris (Gevaert being his assistant). He also cond. the Cons. concerts for some years, and the court concerts (with the title of 'Maître de chapelle impériale').—Works: An essay De la musique à Lyon depuis 1712 jusqu'à 1852 (1852); 'cello-music.

Hai'zinger, Anton, tenor opera-singer, b. Wilfersdorf, Liechtenstein, March 14, 1796; d. Vienna, Dec. 31, 1869. At first a singing-master in Vienna, where he was taught by Salieri, he was eng. for the Th. an der Wien by Count Palffy in 1821. Some years later, after a succession of starring-tours to principal German cities, he was eng. at Karlsruhe for life, at the court theatre. His subsequent excursions to Paris and London were very successful. He returned to Vienna in 1850.

Hale, Philip, b. Norwich, Vt., Mar. 5, 1854. Took music-lessons from early youth and as a boy played the organ in the Unit. ch., Northampton, Mass. Graduate of Yale Univ., 1876; admitted to the Albany bar, 1880. First studied music seriously with D. Buck in 1876; studied in Europe 1882–7 (organ with Haupt, Faiszt, Rheinberger and Guilmant,—comp. with Urban, Bargiel, Rheinberger and Guilmant,—pf. with Raif and Scholz). Was organist 1879–82 at St. Peter's, Albany; 1887–9 at St. John's, Troy; 1889–1905 of First Religious Soc., Roxbury, Mass. From 1887–9, also cond. of the Schubert Club, male chorus, at Albany. Halévy, Jacques-François-Fromental-Élie, gifted dramatic composer; b. Paris, May 27, 1799; d. Nice, March 17, 1862. His parents were Jews. At ten he entered the Paris Cons. as an elementary pupil of Cazot. In 1810 he studied piano with Lambert; in 1811, harmony with Berton; and counterpoint for five years with Cherubini. At seventeen he was allowed to compete for the Prix de Rome; he won it in 1819 with his cantata Herminie. He had previously composed an opera, Les Bohémiennes (never perf.), published a piano-sonata for 4 hands, and set to music the 130th Psalm in Hebrew, the De Profundis. During his three years' stay in Italy he made great progress, writing another opera, etc. In 1822, on his return to Paris, he made vain attempts to produce his grand opera Pygmalion, and Les deux pavillons (comedy-opera). It was not until 1827 that he brought out a one-act comedy-opera, l'Artisan, at the Th. Feydeau; though with little success. The same year he succeeded Daussoigne as prof. of harmony and accomp. at the Cons.; following Fétis as prof. of cpt. and fugue in 1833, and taking a class of advanced composition in 1840. In 1827 he was engaged as cembalist at the Italian Opera. In 1828, with Rifaut, he composed Le Roi et le Bâtelier in honor of Charles X. In 1829, Clari (with Malibran as prima donna) was a success at the Th. Italien; Le dilettante d'Avignon was produced the same year, and in 1830 the grand ballet Manon Lescaut. H. was now app. 'chef du chant' at the Opéra, a post retained during 16 years. In 1831 La Langue musicale was prod. at the Op.-

Com.; La Tentation (1832; ballet-opera, with Gide), at the Opéra; Les Souvenirs de Lafleur (1833); and the same year a completion of Hérold's unfinished Ludovic, which proved very successful. In 1835 La Juive (grand opera in 5 acts, H.'s masterpiece) was prod. at the Opéra on Feb. 23, and soon obtained great vogue throughout Europe. Six months later appeared l'Éclair, a sparkling comedy-opera. To add to his growing reputation, H. was created Chevalier of the Legion of Honor. On the death of Reicha (1836) H. succeeded him as one of the three musical members of the Académie; and in 1854 was appointed secretary for life. With La Juive H. attained not only the zenith of his powers, but also of his triumphs. In 1836 the blazing apparition of Les Huguenots paled the milder fires of the French composer, and Meyerbeer became the idol of the hour. La Juive was followed by Guido et Ginevra (1838); Les Treize (1839); Le Drapier (1840); La Reine de Chypre, a brilliant success, and Le Guitarrero (1841); Charles VI (1843); Le Lazzarone (1844); Les Mousquetaires de la reine (1846). He collaborated with Adam, Auber and Carafa in Les premiers pas for the inauguration of the National Opera (1847). Le Val d'Andorre was given in 1848 (adapted for the English stage in London, 1850); La Fée aux roses, in 1849; La Dame de pique, 1850. In 1850 H. conducted in London an Italian opera, La Tempesta. Le Juif errant was produced in 1852; Le Nabab, 1853; Jaguarita, 1855; l'Inconsolable [under the nom-de-plume 'Albert'], 1855; Valentine d'Aubigny, 1856; La Magicienne, 1858.—H. was more inclined to aim at a high ideal than to please the popular taste. His music possesses true emotional and dramatic power, and is 'melodious, but combined with so many details and refinements of harmony and instrumentation' that it could not be appreciated by the general public; though he held a high rank among artists.—Besides his operas, he wrote a pf.-sonata for 4 hands, romances, nocturnes, part-songs for male voices; scenes from Prometheus Unbound (1849); the cantatas Les plages du Nil and Italie (1859); and left the almost finished scores of two operas, Vanina d'Ornano (completed by Bizet) and Le Déluge. In the Paris schools his Leçons de lecture musicale was adopted as the text-book for singing. Souvenirs et portraits (1861) and Derniers souvenirs et portraits (1863) were collections of the funeral orations that, as Secretary of the Académie, he had delivered at the obsequies of deceased members.—Short biographies of H. were published by his brother Léon (1862), E. Monnais (1863), A. Catelin (1863) and A. Pougin (1865).

Halir [hah'lĭr], Karl, distinguished violinist; b. Hohenelbe, Bohemia, Feb. 1, 1859; d. Berlin, Dec. 21, 1909. A pupil of Bennewitz at Prague Cons.; later of Joachim in Berlin (1874–6). After playing as 1st violinist in Bilse's orch., and short engagements at Königsberg and Mannheim, he was app. in 1884–93 leader of the court orch. at Weimar; in 1893 he succeeded de Ahna as 'Hofkonzertmeister' in Berlin; for a time he was a member of the Joachim Quartet, but later formed his own quartet (with Exner, Müller and Dechert), which became famous. He resigned as concert-master in 1907. His first tour in the United States (1896–7) was very successful.—His wife Theresa (née Zerbst), b. Berlin, Nov. 6, 1859, married in 1888, is a fine soprano (pupil of Otto Eichberg).

Hall, Charles King, b. London, 1845 (?); d. there Sept. 1, 1895. English composer and theoretical writer; org. successively at St. Paul's (Camden Sq.), St. Luke's, and Christ Ch.—Wrote School for the Harmonium; Harmonium Primer (Novello).—Compositions: Much church-music, many songs, and pf.-pcs.; also numerous operettas for German Reed's entertainments at St. George's Hall, among them being Foster-brothers, Doubleday's Will, and A Tremendous Mystery (books by F. C. Burnand); The Artful Automaton, and A Strange Host (books by A. Law); Grimstone Grange and A Christmas Stocking (books by G. à Becket); The Naturalist (book by C. Carr). These were his most popular works.

Hall, Marie [Mary Paulina], b. Newcastle-on-Tyne, England, April 8, 1884. Talented violinist, pupil of her father and Miss Hildegard Werner. As a small child, she used to play to her father's harp-accompaniment in the streets of Bristol; at 10 she had mastered Bach's sonatas. Her talent finding recognition, she was aided to study under Johann Kruse in London, and at 15 won the first Wessely Exhibition at the R. A. M. On Kubelik's recommendation she was sent in 1901 to Ševčík, at Prague, and in one year was considered ready for public playing; her appearances in Prague (début Nov., 1902), Vienna and London were successful beyond expectation. Since then she has toured Great Britain, Germany, Canada, Australia, New Zealand and the U. S.

Hall, Walter Henry, b. London, Apr. 25, 1862. From 1877–81 he was a pupil at the R. A. M.; came to America in 1883; 1884, org. and choirm. at St. Luke's ch., Germantown, Pa.; 1890, at St. Peter's, Albany; at St. James', New York, 1896–1913. In 1893 he founded the Brooklyn Oratorio Soc., which he has cond. since; cond. of Musurgia Soc., 1889–1906; of the Mozart Soc. since 1913; app. lecturer on music and cond. of the University Chorus at Columbia Univ. in 1909; Prof. of choral music in 1913. He is a specialist in the training of boys' choirs; comp. of mus. services, anthems, etc.; has publ. Essentials of Choir-Training (1907).

Halvorsen, Johan, b. Drammen, Norway, March 15, 1864. From 1884–6 pupil of Lindberg (vln.) and Nordquist (theory) at the Stockholm Cons. Having served a short time as conc.-master of the Harmonie at Bergen, he went in 1888 to Brodsky in Leipzig; then toured as violin-virtuoso, was conc.-master of the Philh. Soc. at Aberdeen, and taught 3 years at the Helsingfors Cons. After further study under A. Becker (comp.) in Berlin and C. Thomson (vln.) in Liège, he returned in 1893 to Bergen as cond. of the Harmonie; since 1899 cond. at the National Th. in Christiania.—Works: Cantata for the coronation of King Haakon; a violin-concerto; 3 suites for vln. and piano; incid. music to Björnson's Vasantasena and The King, Drachmann's Gurre, Eldegard's Fossegrimen, etc.

Hambourg, Boris, famous 'cellist, brother of Mark and Jan; b. Voronesh, Russia, Dec. 27, 1884. In 1891 his parents settled in London, and there he began to study the pf. with his father, Michael, but soon took up the 'cello with Prof. Walenn, and decided to choose that instrument. From 1898–1903 he was a pupil at the Hoch Cons. in Frankfort of Hugo Becker ('cello) and I. Knorr (comp.); he made his début, with striking success, at the Tchaikovsky Festival in Pyrmont in June, 1903, playing the Vars. on a Rococo theme; the following winter he made an extended concert-tour of Australia and New Zealand. On his return he spent the summer of 1904 at Godinne with Ysaÿe, playing quartets and profiting from the master's advice regarding interpretation; his London début in Nov. was followed by a tour of the British Isles; the next winter he appeared in Berlin and other German cities. By this time his reputation was firmly established; he created a sensation in London (May and June, 1906) by his series of five historical recitals illustrating the development of 'cello-music from the earliest beginnings to the present day. The next two years he spent touring Germany, Belgium, Holland and France; in 1908 he toured South Africa. He made his Amer. début at Pittsburgh, Oct. 28, 1910, and has since been heard frequently with orchestras and in recitals. In 1911 he settled in Toronto, Canada, where with his father and brother Jan he founded the H. Cons., which in 1914 had a staff of 50 instructors. After his father's death, in 1916, he gave up the Cons. and settled in New York. He has edited a coll. of unknown 'cello-pieces by Italian composers of the 18th cent., which he discovered in various libraries (all performed in his historical series).

Hambourg, Jan, distinguished violinist; brother of preceding; b. Voronesh, Russia, Aug. 27, 1882. Pupil in London of Sauret and Wilhelmj, then of H. Heermann (Frankfort), O. Ševčik (Prague) and E. Ysaÿe (Brussels); début in Berlin in 1905; has toured Germany, France, the Netherlands, Great Britain and America. With his brothers Boris and Mark he made a most successful tour of England in 1909, appearing in 100 concerts as soloist and ensemble player. Now living in New York (1916).—See preceding article.

Hambourg, Mark, famous pianist, brother of Boris and Jan; b. Voronesh, Russia, May 31, 1879. Pupil of his father, Michael; début in March, 1888, with the Moscow Philh. Soc. Although he appeared frequently as a child-prodigy, he continued his studies with his father and then with Leschetizky in Vienna. Here he began his regular career as a virtuoso in 1895; tour of Australia, 1895–6; Germany, 1897; first American tour, 1899–1900; second, 1902–3; third, 1907–8; fourth, 1915–16; has also made 4 tours of Australia and New Zealand, and 2 of South Africa. As regards his touch and temperament he has often been compared to Rubinstein; his memory is prodigious, since in his repertory he has ready for performance almost 40 concertos and over 800 other pieces. On June 16, 1906, he made his one thousandth appearance. He is a naturalized British subject, and resides in London. At various times he has offered prizes for original piano-works in certain forms, and performed the successful works in his recitals. He has publ. a number of piano-pieces (Vars. on a theme by Paganini, Impromptu-Minuet, Romance, Espièglerie, etc.).—See the articles on his brothers.

Hambourg, Michael, b. Yaroslav, Russia, 1856; d. Toronto, Canada, June 18, 1916. Studied piano at the Cons. in Petrograd and in Moscow; app. prof. of piano at Moscow Cons. in 1880. The phenomenal success of his son and pupil, Mark, in London in 1890 determined him to settle in the English capital in 1891. There he lived as a successful teacher until 1911, when he went to Toronto, where, with his two sons Boris and Jan, he founded the H. Conservatory.

Ha'mel, Eduard, violinist, pianist, and comp.; b. Hamburg, 1811. Violinist for many years in the orch. of the Grand Opéra, Paris. Returned to Hamburg in 1846 as teacher of vln. and piano.—Works: Malvina, opera; pf.-quartets, piano-pieces; ballads, songs, etc.

Ha'mel, Margarethe. See SCHICK.

Hamel [ah-mel'], Marie-Pierre, organ-expert; b. Auneuil (Oise), France, Feb. 24, 1786; d. Beauvais, after 1870. Studied music and vln. from an early age, but was self-taught in the art of organ-building. In his 13th year, with schoolboy implements, he manufactured a small organ of three octaves, and at 14 years of age restored the 16th-cent. organ of Clermont village ch. so satisfactorily that he was specially complimented and thanked by the churchwardens. Did not follow the profession of organ-building, but later rebuilt the grand organ of Beauvais cath. (5 claviers, 84 stops). He was made 'Membre de la Commission des Arts et des Monuments,' and prepared reports on the states of nearly all the principal organs in France for the Ministry of Public Instruction and Worship. Founded the Beauvais Philharmonic Society, one of the first to introduce Beethoven's symphonies in France. Author of a valuable work, Nouveau Manuel complet du facteur d'orgues, ou traité théorique et pratique de l'art de construire les orgues, contenant l'orgue de Dom Bédos et tous les progrès et perfectionnements de la facture jusqu'à ce jour, précédé d'une notice historique sur l'orgue, et suivi d'une Biographie des principaux facteurs d'orgues français ou étrangers (3 vols., Paris, 1849; new ed. by J. Guédon, 1903; not merely a reprint, but completes the history of the organ down to 1903).

Ha'merik (real name Hammerich), Asger, b. Copenhagen, Apr. 8, 1843. Son of a prof. of divinity, who discouraged his musical leanings, he instructed himself in the art, and at 15 became the pupil of Gade, Matthison-Hansen, and Haberbier. In 1862, piano-pupil of Bülow at Berlin, and at Paris in 1864 met Berlioz, who went with him to Vienna in 1866–7. H. was a member of the musical jury of the Paris Exhibition, and received a gold medal for his richly orchestrated Hymne de la Paix. He wrote two operas, Tovelille and Hjalmar and Ingeborg, fragments of which were performed in Paris and Copenhagen. H. visited Italy in 1869, and at Milan (1870) prod. an Italian opera, La Vendetta. In 1871 app. director of the Conservatory of the Peabody Institute, and of the Peabody symphony concerts, Baltimore, which positions he held till 1898. In 1890 H. was knighted by the King of Denmark; living in Copenhagen since 1898.—Works (besides the operas mentioned): Der Wanderer (1872), a festival cantata to commemorate the new Swedish constitution of 1866; an Oper ohne Worte (1883); choral work, Christliche Trilogie (a pendant to a Trilogie judaique brought out in Paris); 7 symphonies (op. 29, F, poétique; op. 32, C m., tragique; op. 33, E, lyrique; op. 35, C, majestueuse; op. 36, G m., sérieuse; op. 38, spirituelle; op. 40, chorale [for m.-sop. solo and ch.]); 5 Nordische Suiten for orch.; 'cello and piano fantasia; concert romance for 'cello and orch.; piano-quartet (op. 61); several cantatas, vocal pieces, etc.

Hamilton, Clarence Grant, b. Providence, R. I., June 9, 1865. Studied piano with A. Foote (Boston) and T. Matthay (London), and theory with H. C. MacDougall and G. W. Chadwick (Boston). Has filled various positions as organist; since 1904 Assoc. Prof. of music at Wellesley Coll.; also dir. of the Commonwealth (summer) School of Music, Boothbay Harbor; lecturer, and contrib. to various journals; comp. of pf.-pieces, anthems and songs. Has publ. Outlines of Music History (1908; 2d revised ed. 1913), Piano Teaching (1910), Sound and Its Relation to Music (1911).

Hamilton, James Alexander, theorist and prolific writer; b. London, 1785; d. there Aug. 2, 1845. Son of a dealer in second-hand books, his education was neglected; but naturally intelligent, voluminous reading from his father's stock supplied the lack of instruction. Unfortunately of intemperate habits, he was always in want, selling for a few pounds the copyright of elementary works which passed through numerous editions. He died in utter misery.—Writings: Modern Instruction for the Piano; Catechism of Singing; Catechism of the Rudiments of Har- mony and Thoroughbass; Catechism of Counterpoint, Melody, and Composition; Catechism of Double Counterpoint and Fugue; Catechism on Art of Writing for an Orchestra and of Playing from Score; Catechism of the Invention, Exposition, Development, and Concatenation of Mus. Ideas; A New Theoretical Musical Grammar; Dictionary Comprising an Explication of 3,500 Italian, French, etc., Terms (3d edition 1848). Also translated Cherubini's Counterpoint and Fugue, Baillot's Méthode de Violon, Frölich's Kontrabassschule, Joh. G. Vierling's Anleitung zum Präludieren, etc.

Hamlin, George, dramatic and concert-tenor; b. Elgin, Ill., Sept. 20, 1868. He received his vocal training from various American and European teachers, but never had more than a few lessons from any one. Having made his début in oratorio with the St. Louis Choral Soc. (Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise), he devoted himself, with much success, to concert-work, appearing in recital and with the leading choral societies of the U. S. He was the first to introduce the songs of R. Strauss to America; in fact, made propaganda by giving recitals devoted exclusively to the songs of that composer at a time when his orchestral works were just beginning to spread his fame. For some years H. lived in Germany, where his success was not less pronounced than it had been in his native country. After his return to the U. S. he made a successful début as a dramatic singer in V. Herbert's Natoma in Philadelphia, Dec. 15, 1911 (taking the place of John McCormack, who had created Paul Merrill at the première, Feb. 21); since then has been a regular member of the company; is also treasurer and a director. In 1915 he offered a prize of $200 for the best aria for tenor with orch. by a resident composer of the U. S.; the prize was awarded to Carlo Minetti of Pittsburgh for his Mark Antony. So far H. has been heard as Caravadossi (Tosca), Pinkerton (Madama Butterfly), Gennaro (Jewels of the Madonna), Florindo (Lovers' Quarrel), Edward Plummer (Cricket on the Hearth) and Don José (Carmen).

Ham'ma, Benjamin, comp., cond., and teacher; b. Dreisslingen, Württemberg, Oct. 10, 1831. Studied comp. with Lindpaintner at Stuttgart; went to Paris, thence to Rome. Till 1872, cond. and teacher at Königsberg, then director of a new school of music at Stuttgart.—Works: Opera, Zarrisko; piano-pieces, part-songs, songs, etc.—His brother, Ham'ma, Franz Xaver, pianist, comp., and org.; b. Wehingen, Württemberg, Dec. 3, 1835; was org. of the St. Anna Ch., Basel, and dir. of the 'Cäcilienverein' there, later org. at Oberstadion, Württemberg; then music-teacher at Metz.—Works: A vocal method, org.-music, songs, etc.

Hammer, Heinrich Albert Eduard, b. Erfurt, Thuringia, Oct. 27, 1862. From 1876–80 he studied in Magdeburg with A. Pott (vln.) and H. Ritter (pf. and harm.); 1890–2 in Paris with Viardot-Garcia (singing) and Marsick (vln.); 1890–4, leader of Amsterdam String-Quartet; 1894–6, cond. of 'Euterpe' mixed chorus at The Hague; 1897–1901, cond. of the Munic. Symph. Orch. in Bochum, Westphalia; in 1901 he organized the Lausanne Symph. Orch. and cond. its concerts till 1905; in 1903 he was cond. of the Berlioz Centennial Fest. in Geneva, and during the next two years conducted a series of Beethoven, Brahms and Berlioz Festivals in Berlin; in 1905 he founded a Symph. Orch. in Göteborg, Sweden, and was the cond. for two years. In 1908 he settled in Washington, D. C., where he organized the W. Symph. Orch. and the 'Friday Morning Music Club' (women's vcs.), both having been under his direction since then.—Works: An oratorio, Der heilige Georg; a symphony in F m.; 3 Amer. Indian Rhapsodies for orch.; Sunset at Sea for orch.; a national Ode, Columbia Triumphant in Peace (1915), for soli, ch. and orch.; a Te Deum and Magnificat; pieces for vln. and pf., choruses, and songs.

Ham'merich, Angul, b. Copenhagen, Nov. 25, 1848, studied the 'cello under Rüdinger and Neruda, and after 6 years in the Department of Finance devoted himself (1880) wholly to music, accepting the post of mus. critic for the 'Nationaltidende.' In 1892 lecturer, 1896 prof. of mus. science, at the Copenhagen Univ.; 1898, founded the Collection of Ancient Mus. Instrs.—Writings: Studies in Old Icelandic Music (1890; Danish and Germ.); The Cons. of Music at C. (1892; in Danish); Essay on the Music at the Court of Christian IV (1892; in German, 1893); On the Old Norse Lurs (1893; in German, 1894); Descriptive Illustrated Catalogue of the Historical Musical Museum of Copenhagen (1909; in Danish; Ger. tr. by E. Bobé, 1911); Mediæval Musical Relics of Denmark (1912; in Danish; Engl. tr. by M. Williams Hamerik, 1912).—He is the brother of Asger Hamerik, who changed the spelling of his name.

Ham'merschmidt, Andreas, org. and comp.; b. Brüx, Bohemia, 1612; d. Zittau, Oct. 29, 1675. Studied cpt. at Schandau with cantor Stephen Otto. Org. of St. Peter's, Freiberg, 1635, and from 1639 at Zittau, where a statue was erected to his memory. Of marked originality, his numerous works are of importance in the mus. history of the 17th century. He was one of the earliest composers to adopt the new Italian style of writing elaborate instrumental accompaniments to polyphonic vocal works. He wrote 2 vols. of Dialogi oder Gespräche zwischen Gott und einer gläubigen Seele (1645), Geistliche Symphonien, Weltliche Oden, Psalms, Motets, Madrigals, etc., etc. H. Leichtentritt publ. a selection in vol. xl of 'Dkm. der Tonkunst' (1910).

Hammerstein, Oscar, b. Berlin, 1847. In 1863 he came to the U. S., and after a checkered career as cigarmaker, inventor, editor of a trade-journal, writer and composer of operettas, became a theatrical manager. In 1888 he built the 'Harlem Opera House' in New York, the first of a number of theatres which he erected during the next twenty years and managed with his own means and on his own responsibility. For the avowed purpose of giving opera in the vernacular at popular prices he built the 'Manhattan Opera House,' but while it was in course of construction he changed his mind. On Dec. 3, 1906, the house was opened with Bellini's Puritani. Before the season had progressed far it became clear that the new undertaking would prove a dangerous rival to the Metropolitan Opera House, for H. had secured such artists as Melba, Nordica, Tetrazzini, Bonci, Dalmorès, Renaud, while Cleofonte Campanini, who was both conductor and artistic director, secured a perfection of ensemble that caused surprise and admiration. For four years the bitterest rivalry existed between the Manhattan and Metropolitan companies, each straining every nerve in order to reach the highest artistic level. The sums paid to the stars soared to fabulous heights, and the unlimited resources of the older company forced H. to withdraw. In April, 1910, he sold his interests to the M. O. H. for $2,000,000, signing an agreement to abstain for ten years from producing grand opera in any territory in which the latter might be operating. However, during those four years of rivalry new standards were set; the chorus, costumes and stage-setting were vastly improved, and more new works were brought out in that short time than had been the case in the preceding fifteen years. The novelties produced at the Manhattan were Massenet's Thaïs, Jongleur de Notre-Dame, Hérodiade, Sapho and Grisélidis, Debussy's Pelléas et Mélisande, Charpentier's Louise, Blockx' Princesse d'Auberge and Strauss's Elektra, while the Metropolitan brought out in the same period (1907–10) Strauss's Salome, d'Albert's Tiefland, Puccini's Le Villi and Girl of the Golden West, Catalani's La Wally, Smetana's Bartered Bride, Franchetti's Germania, Bruneau's l'Attaque du Moulin, Tchaikovsky's Pique Dame, Converse's Pipe of Desire, Gluck's Armide and Humperdinck's Königskinder.—Even during his second season at the Manh. O. H. the enterprising impresario built the 'Philadelphia Opera House,' which he opened on Nov. 17, 1908, bringing his New York company there on certain nights; but after two seasons he abandoned the project and sold the house. Having sold his interests to the M. O. H., he transferred the scene of his restless activity to London, where he built the 'London Opera House,' which was opened on Nov. 13, 1911, with a gorgeous performance of Nougès' spectacular Quo Vadis. Here he pursued the same policy which had proved so successful in New York, but London was not interested in French opera, and the season ended in disaster. H. sold the house, returned to New York, and, forgetting his agreement with the M. O. H., promptly erected the American Opera House in 1912. Contracts with the artists had been signed, and the opening date announced, when the M. O. H. secured an injunction, compelling H. to abide by his agreement. The new house was opened in 1914 as the 'Lexington Theatre,' and has since been devoted to the ordinary forms of theatrical entertainment.

Ham'pel, Hans, pianist and comp., born Prague, Oct. 5, 1822; d. there March 30, 1884. St. under Wenzel Tomaschek, and became org. at Prague. Comps.: Requiem; pf.-works (Das Entzücken, op. 8; Lieb Aennchen, op. 10; three rhapsodies, op. 16; Clavierfuge, op. 21; variations for left hand, op. 26; concert-waltzes); etc.

Hanboys (or Hamboys), John, English mus. theorist of the 15th century. Mus. Doc., one of the first Englishmen on whom the degree was conferred. Coussemaker printed his Latin treatise, Summa super musicam continuam et discretam, in his 'Scriptores,' vol. i, p. 416.

Hanchett, Dr. Henry Granger, b. Syracuse, N. Y., Aug. 29, 1853. He studied at the Syracuse Classical School and Univ. Med. Coll., finishing his medical studies at the New York Homœopathic Med. Coll. (M. D., 1884); began to study piano in 1859 with E. Held in Syracuse, continuing with him for ten years; studied theory with A. J. Goodrich, 1872–3; continued his pianistic studies at various times with W. H. Sherwood (1878–80), Th. Kullak (1882–3), A. K. Virgil (1891–2) and W. Mason (1894). Prof. of Mus. Hist., Analysis and Pedagogy at Metropolitan Coll. of Mus., New York (1890–3); dir. of School of Mus. Art, Adelphi Coll., Brooklyn (1900–3); dir. of music, Nat. Park Seminary, Forest Glen, Md. (1907–10); head of department of theory and org., Brenan Coll. Cons., Gainesville, Ga. (1913–5); lecturer on mus., Brooklyn Inst. (1894–1903) and Board of Educ., New York (1896–1909); has given numerous lecture-recitals (300 in N. Y. alone) at institutes, clubs, colleges, etc.; org. at Ch. of the Ascension, New York (1884–7) and Marble Collegiate Ch. (1889–93); at Central Congr. Ch., Brooklyn (1893–8); one of the founders of the A. G. O. In 1873 he invented the 'Sostenuto' or 'third' pedal now used on all grand pianofortes. Has comp. an Easter Anthem, Te Deum in G, Benedictus in B♭, etc.; author of Teaching as a Science (1882), The Art of the Musician (1905), An Introduction to the Theory of Music (1916).

Hand, Ferdinand Gotthelf, b. Plauen, Saxony, Feb. 15, 1786; d. Jena, March 14, 1851. Studied at Leipzig Univ. under the celebrated Greek scholar G. Hermann. In 1817, app. prof. of Greek, etc., at Jena.—Publ. Aesthetik der Tonkunst (Jena, 2 vols., 1837–41; 2d ed. Leipzig, 1846).

Han'del (or Händel, Handl). See GALLUS.

Han'del (written Händel in Germany, Hændel in France; also spelt Hendel, Hendeler, Händeler, or Hendtler, by various branches of the family), Georg Friedrich [at first spelt Hendel, in England; in his later period, he himself adopted the quasi anglicized form of George Frideric Handel]; b. Halle, Feb. 23, 1685; d. London, April 14, 1759. His father, a barber, afterwards surgeon and valet to the Prince of Saxe-Magdeburg, at the age of 62 [SPITTA] married a second wife, Dorothea Taust, daughter of the pastor at Giebichenstein, n. Halle. Their second son was the composer. Handel was intended for a lawyer; but, in spite of his father's strenuous opposition, he secretly taught himself to play the harpsichord. In 1692, at 7 years of age, his father took him on a visit to an elder step-brother, valet at the court of Saxe-Weissenfels; here the boy gained access to the chapel-organ, and was heard by the Duke, who insisted on his receiving a good musical education. Under Zachau, org. of Halle cathedral, he studied cpt., canon, and fugue, and practised the oboe, spinet, harpischord and organ; he comp. 6 sonatas for 2 oboes and bass, became asst.-organist to his teacher, and for three years wrote a motet for every Sunday. In 1696 his father took him to Berlin, where his remarkable skill in playing and improvising on the organ and harpsichord excited the admiration of Ariosti and the jealousy of Bononcini. The Elector Friedrich offered to defray the expenses of his musical education in Italy; but Handel's father declined, and returned with the boy to Halle. The following year (1697) the father died, and H., after completing his studies at the gymnasium, entered Halle Univ. (1702–3) as stud. jur. (in pious fulfilment of his father's desire), occupying, at the same time, the position of organist at the Moritzburg Calvinistic cathedral, with a salary of $50 a year. In 1703, however, he went to Hamburg, where he was engaged as violino di ripieno by Keiser, the director of the German opera. When Keiser was temporarily obliged to hide from his creditors, H. took his place at the harpsichord with such skill that he was eng. permanently as clavecinist. His friendship with Telemann, the composer, and Mattheson, subsequently his biographer, was begun here. He wrote a Passion to words by Postel, and brought out two operas, Almira and Nero (1705); he was also commissioned by Keiser's successor, Saurbrey, to write Florindo und Daphne (1708), an opera filling two evenings. In 1706, with 200 ducats saved from music-teaching, H. went to Italy, visiting Florence, Venice, Rome, and Naples. In Florence (1707) he brought out his first Italian opera, Rodrigo, with Tesi, the afterwards famous singer, in the leading rôle. In Venice (1708) Agrippina created a furore and spread his fame throughout Italy. In Rome he prod. two oratorios, La Risurrezione and Il Trionfo del Tempo e del Disinganno, with the famous violin-virtuoso Corelli as leader; and in Naples the serenata Aci, Galatea e Polifemo, remarkable for its bass solo for a voice of 2 octaves and a fifth in compass. He made the acquaintance of Lotti, and Domenico Scarlatti, with whom he vied at the harpsichord and organ, S. admitting his supremacy at the latter. In Naples he met Alessandro Scarlatti, whose works exercised a strong influence on H. It was with regret that, in 1709, he returned to Germany. He accepted the post of Kapellm. to the Elector of Hanover, replacing Steffani, who had recommended him as his successor. In 1710 he visited England. His opera Rinaldo, 'composed' in 2 weeks by piecing together a number of arias, etc., of earlier date, was prod. at the Haymarket Th. with such success that he was pressed to remain in England, but had to return to his duties. In 1712 he again obtained leave of absence, with the proviso 'that he should engage to return in a reasonable time,' and travelled to London. Two new operas, Il Pastor fido and Teseo, were not specially successful; but an ode for the Queen's birthday, and a Te Deum and Jubilate in celebration of the Peace of Utrecht, won him public and royal favor, with an annuity of £200; and H. conveniently forgot his Hanoverian position. On Queen Anne's sudden death in 1714, however, the Elector of Hanover became George I of England, and was not inclined to regard his absentee Kapellm. with favor. The intercession of Baron Kilmanseck, and the production of the Water Musick by an orch. at a royal aquatic fête, procured him regal grace, with a confirmation of his annuity. In 1716 he went to Hanover in the suite of the King, and remained till 1718. He there comp. his one German oratorio, the Passion, to the words of Heinrich Brockes' poem. In 1718 he returned to England, and succeeded Pepusch as organist and composer to the Duke of Chandos, for whom he wrote his first great English oratorio, Esther (1720), the secular oratorio Acis and Galatea, and the Chandos Te Deums and Anthems. He was also music-master to the Prince of Wales' daughters, and wrote for Princess Anne his 1st coll. of Suites de Pièces for harpsichord [The Lessons], which include the air with variations, The Harmonious Blacksmith. He was app. dir. of the new Royal Academy of Music, established chiefly for the prod. of Italian opera, and in 1720 successfully brought out Radamisto, with Senesino and the celebrated Margherita Durantasti in the chief rôles (prod. in Hamburg, 1721, as Zenobia). His success excited the envy of Bononcini and Ariosti, who had also been invited to London, and who each had a following among the supporters of the R. Academy. Matters were not improved by H.'s independent spirit, blunt manners, and sharp tongue. Two factions arose, one supporting Bononcini and the other H., the rivalry extending to the singers on either side. This went on for several years; although H.'s work was the better, B. was more in popular favor, and might have continued so, but he was caught in an act of plagiarism (v. Lotti) which compelled him to leave England in humiliation (1731). During this period, H. produced the operas Floridante (1721), Ottone, Giulio Cesare, Flavio (1723), Tamerlano (1724), Rodelinda (1725), Scipione, Alessandro (1726), Admeto, Riccardo Primo (1727), Siroe and Tolemeo (1728). In 1726 he received letters of naturalization, and in 1727 comp. the 4 grand anthems for the coronation of George II and Queen Caroline. In 1729, after a visit to Germany and Italy, H. associated himself with Heidegger, the proprietor of the King's Theatre, and inaugurated the season with Lotario, followed by Partenope (1730), Poro and Ezio (1731), Sosarme and Orlando (1732), when the partnership ended. In 1732 H. gave a special production of his revised oratorio Esther, with success, followed by Acis and Galatea. In 1733 he brought out, besides the above, the oratorios Deborah and Athaliah, at Oxford, where he publicly played the organ, and excited as much admiration by his performance as by his works; he received the degree of Mus. Doc. (hon. c.). The same year, H. undertook the sole management of opera, but his manners and methods, a quarrel with his principal singer, Senesino, and a raising of prices, caused many of his chief subscribers to suspend their support and start a rival troupe, 'The Opera of the Nobility,' with Porpora, and afterwards Hasse, as comp. and cond. They took possession of the King's Theatre, and Handel first went to Lincoln's Inn Fields, and then to Covent Garden, but in 1737 failed, the rival house also having to close for want of support. The operas of this period were Terpsichore (1734), Ariodante and Alcina (1735), Atalanta (1736), Arminio, Giustino and Berenice (1737); the ode Alexander's Feast [Dryden] was also prod. at Covent Garden in 1736, and the revised Trionfo del tempo e della verità in 1737. H.'s superhuman efforts to hold his own, and his many difficulties during this period, caused a failing of his strength; a stroke of paralysis incapacitated one of his hands, his brain was overtaxed, and, by the urgent advice of his friends, he went to Aix-la-Chapelle, whence he returned to London in November, 1737, with improved health. Heidegger had meantime formed a new company from the ruins of the two, and for this venture H. wrote several operas: Faramondo, Serse (1738), Jupiter in Argos (not perf.), Imeneo (1740), and Deidamia (1741). This last date marks a decisive turning-point; he now abandoned stage-composition for the work to which he owes enduring fame—oratorio. The oratorios Saul and Israel in Egypt had been performed in 1739, also another important work, the Ode for St. Cecilia's Day, and, in 1740, the ode L'allegro, il penseroso, ed il moderato. In 1741, at the invitation of the viceroy of Ireland, H. visited Dublin, and produced his immortal Messiah on April the 13th, 1742. His cordial reception in Ireland greatly compensated for previous disasters. On his return to London, he again became the popular favorite. The Messiah was followed by Samson, the Dettingen Te Deum, Semele, Joseph (1743); Belshazzar, and Heracles (1745). This year he was again involved in monetary troubles, and a year and a half elapsed before his Occasional Oratorio (1746) and Judas Maccabæus (1747) were brought out; then appeared Joshua (1748), Solomon (1749), Susannah (1749), Theodora (1750), The Choice of Hercules (1751), and Jephthah (1752; his last). In 1750, for the third time, H. had retrieved his fortunes, and revisited his native country. In 1752, during the composition of Jephthah, he was afflicted with failing eyesight, and underwent three unsuccessful operations for cataract, total blindness being the result. He continued his musical performances under the direction of his pupil John Christopher Smith, and accompanied his oratorios, on the organ, up to 1759. On April 6, The Messiah was given as the final performance of the season, H. presiding at the organ; on the 14th, the Saturday between Good Friday and Easter, he died. He was buried in Westminster Abbey, where a monument by Roubillac marks his grave.

H. had a commanding presence, and his features were animated and dignified. His health was usually robust. Of fearless independence, he was of a choleric temperament, and prone to forcible outbreaks, but he was easily restored to good humor, and possessed a fund of humor, and a ready wit. His liberality and charitableness were renowned. He remained unmarried, and was never known to have fallen in love.

The grandeur and sustained power of H.'s oratorio-style, the expressive simplicity of his melody and the breadth and clarity of the harmonic structure, form a wonderful and (at his time) unexampled artistic whole. He is unquestionably one of the 'great masters.' His Messiah took England, and after her the rest of the musical world, by storm. At the first London performance, when the grand 'Hallelujah Chorus' rang out, the entire audience rose like one man, carried away by lofty enthusiasm:—thus originated the custom of standing during this chorus. Many of the treasures of Handel are locked to the general public on account of the incomplete instrumentation of the original scores; Mozart, Mendelssohn, Franz, Brahms, and others, have provided additional accompaniments to several of these works, thus rendering possible their adequate performance.—Handel was peculiarly fortunate in coming to England just as the ebb of English national stage-music after the death of Purcell (from whom H. learned much) was turning toward the flood-tide of Italian opera. His own dramatic works, also strongly influenced by Keiser in Hamburg and the two Scarlattis in Italy, vie with the finest of the period, and the best of them bear comparison with his oratorios. Precisely contemporary with J. S. Bach, he was quite outside the latter's sphere of influence, and no communication existed between them. Of purely instrumental comps. H. wrote a considerable number; FOR HARPSICHORD: The Lessons, in 3 sets; 6 fugues; 4 minuets and a march; the Forest Musick (Dublin, 1742); short pieces;—FOR STRINGS, etc.: the Water Musick (1715); the Fireworks Musick (1749); 4 sets of 6 organ-concertos (1738, '40, '60, '61); three organ-concertos (1797); numerous string-trios (sonatas); concertone in 9 parts, for 2 solo vlns., 'cello, oboe, and string-orch. (1741); concerto for trumpets and horns; do. for horns and side-drums (MS.); sonata for 2 vlns.; sonatas for vln., vla. and oboe; etc.—Many original MSS. of his works he bequeathed to his amanuensis, John Chr. Smith; the latter's son, H.'s pupil, presented them to George III. They are still in Buckingham Palace library, and comprise 32 vols. of operas, 21 of oratorios, 7 of odes and serenatas, 12 of sacred music, 11 of cantatas and sketches, and 5 vols. of instrumental music.—In the Fitzwilliam Collection at Cambridge are 7 vols. containing rough drafts, notes and sketches for various works; also a complete Chandos anthem, O praise the Lord with one consent.

An edition of H.'s works in 36 vols., by Arnold, was publ. by command of George III in 1786, but is incomplete and incorrect. A monumental edition of his works, completed in 100 vols., was issued (1856–94) by the German Händel Society, under the editorship of Dr. Chrysander (q. v.).

Org. and pianist; wrote some valuable studies for pf., Méthode élémentaire de piano, Extraits des chefs-d'œuvre des grands maîtres, and especially Le pianiste-virtuose (60 progressive studies). Among mus. curiosities must be counted his Système nouveau. . . pour apprendre à accompagner tout plain-chant. . . sans savoir la musique.

Hänsel, Peter, b. Leipa, Silesia, Nov. 29, 1770; d. Vienna, Sept. 18, 1831. In 1787 he was vlnst. in the orch. of Count Potemkin in Petrograd; 1791, concert-master of Countess Lubomirski in Vienna; 1802–3, in Paris; then again in Vienna. He was a prolific composer of chamber-music, which is well written, but without originality or depth. He publ. 55 str.-quartets, 4 quintets, 6 trios, 3 quartets for fl., cl., horn and bassoon, 15 vln.-duets, solo-pcs. f. vln. and pcs. f. pf.

Hansen, (Emil) Robert, fine 'cellist; b. Copenhagen, Feb. 25, 1860. He received his first instruction from his father, then st. with F. Neruda at the Copenhagen Cons. and with Fr. Grützmacher in Dresden; from 1877–89 member of the court orch. in Copenhagen. After a two years' stay in London he settled in 1891 in Leipzig, where he joined the Gewandhaus orch. and became prof. at the Cons. Has comp. an opera, Frauenlist (Sondershausen, 1911) and an operetta, Die wilde Komtesse (Eisenach, 1913); a symphony; a symph. suite f. strings and 2 horns; a pf.-concerto; a vcl.-concerto; an overture, Phädra; a pf.-quintet; sonata for vl. and pf.; etc.

Hans'lick, Eduard, influential writer and mus. critic; b. Prague, Sept. 11, 1825; d. Baden, n. Vienna, Aug. 6, 1904. Stud. law at Prague and Vienna; took degree of Dr. jur. in 1849, qualifying himself for an official position. But he had already studied music under Tomaschek at Prague; from 1848–9 was mus. critic for the 'Wiener Zeitung,' and soon adopted a literary career. His first work, Vom Musikalisch-Schönen: ein Beitrag zur Revision der Aesthetik der Tonkunst (Leipzig, 1854; 11th ed. 1910; Fr. trl., 1877; Span. trl. 1879; Ital. trl., 1883; Engl. trl., 1891; Russ. trl., 1895); has done more to discredit silly sentimentalism in mus. criticism than any other book. Its leading idea is, that the the beauty of a mus. comp.

lies wholly and specifically in the music itself; i. e., it is immanent to the relations of the tones, without any reference whatever to extraneous (non-musical) ideas: Briefly, music expresses, in itself, musical ideas, and can express no others. Such being his view point through life, it follows logically that he could not entertain sympathy for Wagner's art; his violent opposition to the music-drama was a matter of profound conviction, not personal spite. On the other hand, he was one of the very first and most influential champions of Brahms. From 1855–64 H. was musical editor of the 'Presse'; thereafter of the 'Neue freie Presse'; he became lecturer on mus. hist. and esthetics at Vienna Univ., prof. extraordinary in 1861, and, in 1870, full professor, retiring 1895, and succeeded by G. Adler. At the Paris Expositions of 1867 and 1878, and the Vienna Exp. of 1873, H. was a juror in the department of music. What gives his writings permanent value is the sound musicianship shown everywhere and their brilliant, masterly style.—Works: Geschichte des Concertwesens in Wien (1869); Aus dem Concertsaal (1870; 2d ed. 1896); Die moderne Oper (1875), followed by 8 vols. giving a fairly comprehensive view of the development of opera from Gluck to 1900: ii. Musikalische Stationen (1880); iii. Aus dem Opernleben der Gegenwart (1884); iv. Musikalisches Skizzenbuch (1888); v. Musikalisches u. Litterarisches (1889); vi. Aus dem Tagebuch eines Musikers (1892); vii. Fünf Jahre Musik (1896); viii. Am Ende des Jahrhmderts (1899); ix. Aus neuer und neuester Zeit (1900). Suite, Aufsätze über Musik u. Musiker (1885), Konzerte, Komponisten u. Virtuosen der letzten fünfzehn Jahre [1870–85] (1886); Aus meinem Leben (2 vols., 1894). All these works have passed through several editions. He also edited Th. Billroth's posthumous essay, Wer ist musikalisch? (1895; 4th ed. 1912); and wrote the letterpress for the illustrated Galerie deutscher Tondichter (1873), and Galerie franz. u. ital. Tondichter (1874).

Hansmann, Victor, b. Warasdin, Croatia, Aug. 14, 1871; d. Berlin, Dec. 12, 1909. —Operas Enoch Arden (Berlin, 1897), Die Nazarener (Brunswick, 1906), Unter der Reichsfahne (Hohentwiel, 1906); and songs.

Hanssens, Charles-Louis-Joseph (aîné), dram. comp.; b. Ghent, May 4, 1777; d. Brussels, May 6, 1852. St. w. Vauthier, Verheym, and Fémy (Ghent); in Paris w. Berton. App. chef d'orchestre of an amateur theatre at Ghent, afterwards of a company giving operatic performances in Amsterdam, Rotterdam, and Utrecht. In 1804, went to Antwerp and Ghent in the same capacity. In 1825, invited to Brussels as orchl. dir. of the Th. de la Monnaie; in 1827, dir. of the Royal orch.; in 1828, app. Inspector of the Cons. He lost both positions through the political events of 1830, but in 1835–38 was again opera-conductor, and also in 1840, when he was ruined through the failure of the enterprise.—Works: Operas, masses, and sacred vocal music.

Hanssens, Charles-Louis (cadet), violoncellist, and distinguished Belgian comp.; b. Ghent, July 12, 1802; d. Brussels, Apr. 8, 1871. At ten, member of the orch. of the National Th., Amsterdam, and at twenty was app. vice-kapelmeester. In 1824, 'cellist, later asst.-cond., of the orch. in the Brussels Th. In 1827, app. prof. of harm. at the Cons. The political events of 1830 also caused his retreat to Holland. In 1834, solo 'cellist at the Théâtre Ventadour, Paris, later becoming comp. and asst.-cond. In 1835, directed French opera at The Hague, again in Paris, then at Ghent. From 1848–69, cond. Th. de la Monnaie, Brussels, also (1851–4) dir. of the Opera, and prof. at the Conservatory. Prolific composer.—Works: 8 operas, ballets, symphonies, overtures, orchl. fantasias, 'cello-, vln.-, clarinet- and pf.-concertos, string-quartets, Symphonie concertante f. clar. and vln., masses, cantatas, a capp. choruses, etc.—Cf. L. de Burbure, Notice sur C.-L. H. (Antwerp, 1872); and L. Bäwolf, C.-L. H. (Brussels, 1895).

d'Harcourt [dahr-koor'], Eugène, b. Paris, 1855. Pupil at Paris Cons. of Savard, Durand and Massenet (1882–6), then of A. Schulze and W. Bargiel in Berlin (until 1890). In 1892 he built the 'Salle d'Harcourt' in Paris, and inaugurated the 'Concerts éclectiques populaires,' which, however, came to an end after the third season; in 1900 he tried to revive them as 'Grands Oratorios à l'Église St.-Eustache.' In 1906 he was sent by the govt. to study musical conditions in Italy, and the following year he spent on a similar mission in Germany and Austria; at the Panama Expos. of 1915 d'H. and Saint-Saëns represented the French govt., while the former was also commissioned to report on mus. conditions in the U. S. He wrote an opera, Le Tasse (Monte Carlo, 1903), a mass in E; 2 ballets (in collaboration with dell'Era and Germain); 3 symphonies; 2 str.-quartets; cantatas and motets. His Symphonie néo-classique (1907) was written as a protest against formlessness and to prove that modern impressionism can be expressed in the classic forms. He transl. into French Schumann's Genoveva and (with Ch. Grandmougin) Weber's Freischütz; has publ. Quelques remarques sur l'exécution de Tannhäuser à l'Opéra (1895), Aperçu analy- tique de la 1re à la 9me symphonie de Beethoven (1898), La musique actuelle en Italie (1907), La musique actuelle en Allemagne et en Autriche-Hongrie (1908), La musique actuelle aux États Scandinaves (1910).

d'Hardelot [dähr-d'loh'], Guy (Mrs. W. I. Rhodes, née Helen Guy), contemporary composer of charming songs (chiefly French; a few to Engl. texts, and all with English transl.), was born at the Château d'Hardelot, about 7 miles from Boulogne-sur-Mer, France. At the age of 15 she went to Paris, studying at the Cons. with R. Maury; Gounod and Maurel became interested in her songs, and advised her to publish them. In 1896 she made a six months' tour of the U. S. with Calvé. Since her marriage she has been living in London. With her first publication, the melancholy and dramatic Sans toi, her artistic reputation was established. The long list of her lyrics, ranging from gayest humor to pathetic sentiment, includes Sous les branches, A vous! Chanson de la mie, The Bee's Courtship, Avec toi! Valse des libellules, Tristesse, True-love Land, Almond-blossoms, etc. Calvé, Melba, Plançon, and others, have made striking concert-success with these songs. Her sole attempt in larger forms is the operetta Elle et Lui.

Harding, Henry Alfred, b. Salisbury, July 25, 1856. Pupil of Abram, Keeton and Corfe; Mus. Doc., Oxon., 1882; was org. at Sidmouth; now (1916) org. and choirm. at the principal ch. in Bedford; comp. of Psalm CVI, a morning service and other ch.-mus., songs and pf.-pcs.; has publ. Analysis of Form (1890) and Musical Ornaments (1898).

Har'raden, Samuel, b. Cambridge, Engl., 1821 (?); d. Hampstead, July 17, 1897. Pupil of Walmisley; 1841, org. of St. Luke's, Manchester; in 1846, at the 'Old Mission Church,' Calcutta. His influence was great on the mus. life of the town; he founded the first Glee Club, became an enthusiastic student of Hindoo music, prof. at the Hindoo Coll. of Mus., and at the Free School. For his attainments in Hindoo music he was made Mus. Doc. by the Bengal R. Acad. of Music.

Harriers-Wippern, Luise (née Wippern), operatic singer; b. Hildesheim, 1837; d. Görbersdorf, Silesia, Oct. 5, 1878. Début 1857, Royal Opera, Berlin, as Agathe in Der Freischütz. Also sang in Vienna and London, but permanently engaged for Berlin. Her superb voice was heard to advantage both in dramatic and lyrical parts. In 1868, after long illness, she retired with a pension.

Harris, (Sir) Augustus, b. Paris, 1852; d. Folkestone, Engl., June 22, 1896. One of the most celebrated and successful impresarii of the 19th century. An actor by profession, he was engaged, soon after his début as Macbeth, at Manchester, 1873, by Col. Mapleson as stage-manager. In 1879 he leased Drury Lane Th., where he won brilliant success with spectacular plays and pantomimes; in 1887, he took up Italian opera, and secured control successively of H. M.'s Th., Cov. Garden, the Olympia, and various provincial stages. He also cultivated French, German and English opera with almost uniform success. He introduced to the Engl. public many of the most famous singers of the day (Melba, Nordica, Hauk, Maurel, the de Reskés, etc.), and all operas were mounted with great care.

Harris, Clement Hugh Gilbert, b. Wimbledon, July 8, 1871; d. (in battle) Pentepigadia, April 23, 1897. Excellent pianist, pupil at Hoch's Cons. in Frankfort of Clara Schumann; wrote a symph. poem, Paradise Lost; Festival March for orch.; Romanza for vln.; do. for cl., vcl. and piano; concert-études and other works for piano; songs (Songs of the Sea, etc.).

Harris, (William) Victor, song-composer; b. New York, April 27, 1869. Pupil of Charles Blum (pf.), 1879–86; of Wm. Courtney (voice), 1887–91; of Fred. K. Schilling (harm. and comp.), 1890–92; and of Anton Seidl (conducting), 1895–96. From 1889–95, org. at various churches in Tuxedo Park, Brooklyn, and New York; 1893–4, cond. Utica Choral Union; 1892–5 répétiteur and coach at Metropolitan Opera, N. Y.; 1895–6, asst.-cond. to Seidl at the Brighton Beach Summer Concerts. Since 1902, cond. St. Cecilia Club, New York; now (1917) living in New York as a vocal instructor, cond. and composer. He has publ. about 100 songs, many of which enjoy considerable vogue; also a number of choruses for men's, women's and mixed voices. In MS. he has several orchl. works.

Ha'se, (Dr.) Oskar von. See Breitkopf & Härtel.

Hä'ser, August Ferdinand, b. Leipzig, Oct. 15, 1779; d. Weimar, Nov. 1, 1844. Educated at the Thomasschule, and student of divinity at the Univ., Leipzig. In 1817, music teacher to the Duke of Weimar's family, and became church musical director, teacher of music in the Weimar Training-School, chorusmaster of the Court Opera, and finally theatre-Kapellm.—Works: Oratorio, Der Triumph des Glaubens (Weimar, 1828; Birmingham, 1837; words by Klopstock); masses, Te Deums, Paternosters, requiems, misereres, etc.; also orchl. music, overtures etc.; 3 operas, pianopieces, songs, etc.—Writings: Versuch einer systematischen Übersicht der Gesanglehre (1820); Chorgesangschule (1831).—His sister, Hä'ser, Charlotte Henriette, celebrated singer; b. Leipzig, Jan. 24, 1784; d. Rome, May, 1871; made her début at the Dresden Opera, and afterwards sang at Vienna and in Italy. In 1813, married a lawyer named Vera, at Rome. Her youngest brother, Hä'ser, Heinrich, prof. of medicine at Jena and Breslau; b. Rome, Oct. 15, 1811; d. Breslau, Sept. 13, 1885; wrote Die menschliche Stimme, ihre Organe, ihre Ausbildung, Pflege und Erhaltung (1839).

Ha'sert, Rudolf, pianist and doctor of theology; b. Greifswald, Feb. 4, 1826; d. Gristow, n. Greifswald, Jan. 4, 1877. Intended for a lawyer, he turned to music through Robt. Franz's influence, and from 1848–50 studied piano with Kullak, and comp. with Dehn, at Berlin. He made successful artistic tours, visiting Stockholm, Gothenburg, Christiania, Copenhagen, Paris (1855), and Weimar, where he met Liszt; settled in Berlin in 1861 as teacher, virtuoso, and composer. In 1870, he passed the govt. exam. in theology, and became minister in the Strausberg penitentiary. In 1873, he came into the family-living at Gristow, n. his birth-place, and was pastor there till his death.

Has'ler (or Hassler), Hans Leo von, celebrated org. and comp.; b. Nuremberg, 1564; d. Frankfort, June 8, 1612. The eldest of 3 sons of Isaac Hassler, town-musician of Nuremberg. Studied with his father, and was a fellow-pupil of G. Gabrieli under Andrea Gabrieli in Venice (1584). Was the first notable German comp. who went to Italy for study. 1585–1600, org. to Count Octavianus Fugger at Augsburg; in 1600 he was app. mus. director at Augsburg, and from 1601–8 was org. at the Frauenkirche there; in 1608, received an appointment at the court of the Elector of Saxony. He died of phthisis while travelling. [The statement found in earlier dictionaries that H. was court-org. to Emperor Rudolf II in Prague, is due to the fact that in 1602 a certain Jakob Häsler was app. to that position.] H. was on friendly terms with the Emperor, and actually had the title 'Ksl. May. Hofdiener und Cammerorganist,' but it was only honorary.—One of the most famous composers of his epoch, with Gumpeltzhaimer, Erbach, Melchior, and Franck, H. is considered one of the founders of German music; the style of his work is strongly influenced by the two Gabrielis. He wrote numerous secular and sacred canzonette, motets, psalms, litanies and instrl. works (for organ, Ger. and Polish dances, etc.). A number of motets are found in collections of the period. The following have been reprinted: Lustgarten newer teutscher Gesäng; Balletti, Galliarden und Intraden mit 4–8 Stimmen, in Eitner's 'Publikationen,' vol. xv; in 'Dkm. deutscher Tonkunst': Cantiones Sacrae . . . 4, 8 et plur. voc. (vol. ii, H. Gehrmann); Sacri Concentus 5–12 voc. (vols. xxiv and xxv, J. Auer); in 'Dkm. der Tonk. in Bayern': Selected organ-works (vol. iv, 2, E. v. Werra); Newe teutsche Gesäng nach Art der welschen Madrigalien und Canzonetten a 4–8 (vol. v, 2, R. Schwartz); Madrigali a 5–8 voci (vol. xl, 1, R. Schwartz). A chronological list of H.'s printed works was publ. by R. Eitner (Mtshefte für M.-Gesch., 1874).—Cf. R. Schwartz, H. L. H. unter dem Einfluss der italienischen Madrigalisten (Vschr. für M.-W., lx); A. Sandberger, Bemerkungen zur Biographie H. L. H.'s und seiner Brüder (Dkm. der Tonk. in Bayern, v, 1).—See also Q.-Lex.—His brother Jakob, b. Nuremberg, 1566; org. in Hechingen 1601, to Graf Eytel Friedrich von Hohenzollern-Herbingen. A famous virtuoso, he also comp. much sacred music.—The third brother, Kaspar, b. Nuremberg, 1570; d. there 1618 as org., edited a collection of church-music, Symphoniae sacrae (Nuremberg, 1598–1600).

Has'linger, Tobias, Viennese music-publ.; b. Zell, Upper Austria, March 1, 1787; d. Vienna; June 18, 1842. Studied music with Glöggl, Kapellm. at Linz; in 1810 went to Vienna as bookkeeper in Steiner's music-establishment, later became partner, and, on Steiner's retirement in 1826, sole proprietor. Cond. the business thenceforth under his own name; was on intimate terms with the most famous musicians of Vienna, especially Beethoven, whose musically-addressed letters to H. (such as 'O Tobias Dominus Haslinger,' in canon-form) are still extant.—He was succeeded by his son Karl, b. Vienna, June 11, 1816; d. there Dec. 26, 1868, a brilliant pianist and industrious comp.—Works: Wanda, opera, and over 100 comps. of various kinds. Carried on the business as 'Karl H., late Tobias'; the present proprietor is Schlesinger (Lienau) of Berlin, who bought it from the widow in 1875.

Hassard, John Rose Green, journalist and musical critic; b. New York, Sept. 4, 1836; d. there April 18, 1888. Studied at St. John's College, Fordham; 1865–6, a writer on the Chicago 'Republican'; in 1866 joined the staff of the New York Tribune as editorial writer, and literary and music critic. In the last-named capacity he was succeeded in 1884 by H. E. Krehbiel. His account of the Festival Plays at Bayreuth in 1876 (later publ. as a pamphlet) was the fullest sent to any American newspaper. H. was an ardent admirer of Wagner's later works before their general recognition, and a champion of modern music.

Has'se, Faustina (née Bordoni), wife of Joh. Ad., and a famous dram. mezzo-soprano of noble birth; b. Venice, 1700; d. there Nov. 4, 1781. Studied with Gasparini and B. Marcello; in 1716, achieved fame by her début in Pollarolo's Ariodante, and became widely known as the 'Nuova Sirena'. In 1719 sang at Venice with Cuzzoni and Bernacchi; in 1722 at Naples and Florence, where a medal was struck in her honor. In 1724, while singing at Vienna, Handel eng. her for his London opera (1726–8), where she outrivalled Cuzzoni. In 1729 she returned to Venice, and married Hasse in 1730, her life thenceforward being bound up in his. In 1751 she retired from the stage, receiving her full salary of 3,000 thalers as pension; but after the conclusion of the Seven Years' War (1673) this pension was stopped for reasons of economy. In her zenith, she was unrivalled in the brilliance and finish of her vocalization.—Cf. A. Niggli, F. B.-H., in Waldersee's 'Samml. Mus. Vorträge' (Leipzig, 1880); G. M. Urbani de Gheltof, 'La Nuova Sirena' ed il 'Caro Sassone' (Venice, 1890). An interesting novel rather than a biogr. is Elise Polko's F. H. (2 vols., Leipzig, 1860; new ed. 1895).

Has'se, Gustav, popular song-composer; b. Peitz, Brandenburg, Sept. 4, 1834; d. Berlin, Dec. 31, 1889. Studied at Leipzig Cons.; afterwards in Berlin with Kiel and F. Kroll. Settled in Berlin as music-teacher.

Has'se, Johann Adolph, dram. comp.; bapt. Bergedorf, near Hamburg, March 25, 1699; d. Venice, Dec. 16, 1783. His father, a school-master and org., first instructed him. In 1717, at 18 yrs. of age, he went to Hamburg, where Ulrich König, the poet, recommended him to Keiser, dir. of the Hamburg Opera, as tenor, a position he held for 4 years. König's good offices again, in 1721, secured him an appointment at the Brunswick theatre, where H. successfully prod. his first opera, Antigonus (1721). In 1722 he went to Italy with Porpora, whom he soon left for A. Scarlatti. He secured Italian fame with Il Sesostrate (Naples, 1726), written after the success (1725) of a serenade for two voices, sung by Farinelli and Signora Tesi. He was app. (1727) prof. at the Scuola degl' Incurabili, Venice, for which he wrote a celebrated Miserere. His talents, vocal and instrumental, and his handsome appearance, made him a society favorite, and he became known as 'il caro Sassone' (the amiable Saxon). Attalo, re di Bitinia (Naples, 1728), was also a success. In 1730, at Venice, he married the celebrated Faustina Bordoni, for whom he comp. the operas Dalisa and Artaserse. In 1731, August II app. him Kapellm. and opera-dir. at Dresden, his wife being eng. as prima donna. Their rivalry with Porpora and his pupil Regina Mingotti ensued, and H. did not altogether shine in his efforts to place them at a disadvantage. He frequently obtained leave of absence, and visited Venice, Milan, and Naples, where he prod. several operas, also going to London, where Handel reigned supreme. Recognizing Handel's superiority, he did not contest the position, but returned to Dresden in 1739, when Porpora and the Mingotti had left, and remained there with his wife, popular favorites, till 1763. By the siege of Dresden, in 1760, H. suffered great losses; his MSS., prepared for a complete ed. of his works by command of the King of Poland, being destroyed. At the conclusion of the war, from economy, opera was suppressed, and H. and his wife were dismissed without pension, retiring to Vienna. Here he comp. several new operas to Metastasio's libretti, in successful rivalry with Gluck, and in his 72d year produced at Milan (1771) his last opera, Ruggiero, for the marriage of Archduke Ferdinand. A dramatic serenade, Ascanio in Alba, by Mozart (then 15 years of age), being performed at the same time, 'This boy will throw us all into the shade,' was the elder's truthful prediction. The last ten years of his life were spent in Venice. His facility and fertility of composition were astounding, and he possessed a ceaseless flow of delightful melody. Pallido è il sole, and Per questo dolce amplesso, from his Artaserse, were the two airs which Farinelli sang every evening for 10 years, to soothe Philip of Spain's melancholy. Hasse wrote more than 100 operas, and 14 oratorios; 5 Te Deums w. orch.; a requiem, masses, magnificats, misereres, litanies, motets, psalms, cantatas, clavier-sonatas, flute-concertos, clavier-concertos, etc. An important collection of MSS. is in the Dresden Library. A selection of his works was published by A. Schering in vols. xx, xxix of 'Dkm. deutscher Tonkunst' and O. Schmid in vols. i, ii, vii and viii of 'Musik am sächsischen Hofe.' —BIBLIOGRAPHY: W. H. Riehl, Musikalische Charakterköpfe, vol. i (6th ed., Stuttgart, 1879); K. Mennicke, J. A. H., in 'Sbd. Int. M.-G.' Has'selt-Barth, Anna Maria Wilhelmine (née van Hasselt), renowned soprano, b. Amsterdam, July 15, 1813; d. Mannheim, Jan. 6, 1881. Studied at Frankfort, at Carlsruhe w. J. Fischer, and in Florence (1829) with Romani. Début at Trieste (1831). Sang on various Italian stages, and at Munich, 1833–38. In 1838, eng. at the Kärnthnerthor Th., Vienna, till pensioned.

Hass'ler. See HASLER.

Häss'ler, Johann Wilhelm, notable pf.-comp.; b. Erfurt, March 29, 1747; d. Moscow, March 29, 1822. Son of a cap-maker, he followed his father's trade, while studying the piano and organ with his uncle, Kittel, and became org. of the Barfüsserkirche, Erfurt, at the age of 14. During his apprenticeship wanderings, he gave concerts in the leading German towns. At Erfurt, in 1780, he founded winter concerts, and established a music-business. His wife Sophie, an esteemed singer, took part in these concerts, and after his departure to England, and to Russia, where, in 1792, he was app. Imp. Kapellm. at Petrograd, dir. the concerts, and also the music business, till 1797, when these enterprises failed, and she started to rejoin her husband, but returned, and remained in Erfurt the remainder of her life. In 1794, H. went to Moscow, and remained there much sought after as a teacher. His works form an interesting link in piano-comp. between Bach and Beethoven, and consist of the well-known D minor gigue, sonatas, concertos, fantasias, variations, organ-pieces, songs, etc.

Hastings, Thomas, b. Washington, Litchfield Co., Conn., Oct. 15, 1787; d. New York, May 2, 1872. A self-taught musician, teacher, and writer; 1823–32, editor of the Utica, New York, 'Recorder'; then settled in New York as an organizer of church-choirs and teacher of psalmody. His writings, The History of Forty Choirs (1854), and Dissertation on Musical Taste (1822; 2d enlarged ed. 1853), throw light on musical development in the United States. He composed simple hymn-tunes and anthems.

Hast'reiter, Helene, fine dram. contralto; b. Louisville, Ky., Nov. 14, 1858. At the age of 12 she was soloist in a Chicago church. About 1880 she went to Italy and studied w. the Lampertis (father and son) at Milan; after her début 1883 (?) she returned to Chicago, where Col. Mapleson heard her, and engaged her for his London season in 1885; in 1886 she was principal contralto of the Natl. Op. Co. and created a profound impression. After that she sang exclusively in Italy (a few times in France), where she was a great favorite; after her marriage to Dr. Burgunzio she retired, and has since been living in Genoa. Her voice was rich and powerful and had the enormous compass of 3 full octaves (a–a^3); some of her leading rôles were Orfeo, Euridice, Dalila, Senta, and Ortrud.

Hatto (stage-name of Marguerite-Jeanne Frère), dramatic soprano; b. Lyons, Jan. 30, 1879. In 1899 she took first prize at the Paris Cons. in singing and opera. Début at the Grand Opéra, Dec. 29, 1899, as Brunehilde in Reyer's Sigurd; in 1900 she sang Salammbô; in 1901, created Iole in Leroux's Astarte; on Oct. 23, 1901, she created Floria in Saint-Saëns's Les Barbares, at the Opéra.

Hatton, John Liptrot, cond. and comp.; b. Liverpool, Oct. 12, 1809; d. Margate, Sept. 20, 1886. Excepting rudimentary instruction, was self-taught. Went to London in 1832; app. cond. at Drury Lane Theatre, 1842, and prod. The Queen of the Thames, his first operetta. The same year went to Vienna, and in 1844 prod. there the opera Pascal Bruno. Visited America in 1848. Mus. Dir. at the Princess' Th., London, 1853–8. Comp. much incid. music to stage-plays, publ. a number of successful songs under the pen-name of 'Czapek,' a cantata, Robin Hood (1856), another opera, Rose, or Love's Ransom (London, 1864), and a sacred drama, Hezekiah (1877).

Hatt'staedt, John James, b. Monroe, Mich., Dec. 29, 1851. After studying with several Amer. and Ger. teachers, he taught pf.-playing at Detroit, St. Louis, and for 11 years at the Chicago Coll. of Mus., where he also lectured on mus. history. In 1886 he founded the Amer. Cons. of Music at Chicago, and has been its dir. ever since; still (1916) teaching piano there, and conducting a Teachers' Normal Dept. He is an occasional contributor to the press, and has publ. a Manual of Musical History.

Hau'er, Karl Heinrich Ernst, b. Halberstadt, Oct. 28, 1828; d. Berlin, March 16, 1892. Son of the cantor and teacher, from 1844 he attended the Halberstadt Gymnasium. For two years he studied with Marx (Berlin), and for three years (distinguishing himself in comp.) at the Royal Akademie (Bach, Rungenhagen, and Grell). In 1853, won a silver medal with an orchestrated Psalm a 8. App. music-teacher at the Andreas Gymnasium, 1856; organist of the Markuskirche, 1866.—Comps.: Ave Maria a 6 a cappella; Paternoster for soli and chorus; Luther-Hymnus, motets, sacred songs; quartets for male and mixed voices, secular songs, etc.

Hauff, Johann Christian, theorist and comp.; b. Frankfort, Sept. 8, 1811; d. there April 30, 1891. One of the founders of and first professors in the Frankfort School of Music. Wrote a Theorie der Tonsetzkunst (1863–9); 3 vols. in 5 parts. Orchestral and chamber-music.

Hauf'fe, Luise. See HÄRTEL, LUISE.

Hauk, Minnie, b. New York, Nov. 16, 1852; d. Munich, Nov. 16, 1912. Dramatic soprano; pupil of A. Errani in New York; début in Brooklyn, Oct. 13, 1866, as Amina (Somnambula) with emphatic success; sang at Cov. G. in 1868, and in Vienna 1870–3;

1873–5 at R. Opera in Berlin; after that she appeared repeatedly in the capitals of Europe and in America; recognized as one of the greatest singers of her time. In the annals of opera in America, her name is associated with the American premières of many important operas (Carmen, Roméo et Juliette, Manon, etc.). Her répertoire comprised about 100 rôles (but none in Wagner's works). In 1881 she married Count Hesse-Wartegg; retired in 1896, living then in her villa at Lucerne.

Haupt, Karl August, organ-virtuoso; b. Kuhnau, Silesia, Aug. 25, 1810; d. Berlin, July 4, 1891. Pupil of A. W. Bach, Klein, and Dehn (Berlin), 1827–30. Org. in succession of various Berlin churches; app. 1849 to the Parochialkirche, and became famous for his fine improvisations in the style of J. S. Bach. Was one of the experts consulted for the specification of the Crystal Palace grand organ. Teacher of theory and organ-playing for some years at the 'Königliches Kirchenmusik-Institut,' Berlin, and on A. W. Bach's death (1869) he was app. director of the musical section of the senate of the Akademie, at the same time receiving the title of Professor. Taught many distinguished pupils, including over 35 American organists.—In MS., numerous org.-comps. Publ. part-songs, songs and a valuable Choralbuch (1869).

Haupt'mann, Moritz, eminent theorist and comp.; b. Dresden, Oct. 13, 1792; d. Leipzig, Jan. 3, 1868. His father was State-architect, and hoped to bring up his son to that profession. But the results of his musical studies, piano and harm. (Grosse), vln. (Scholz), comp. (Morlacchi), betokened such talent that no obstacle was allowed to interfere with its development. In 1811 he went to Gotha to study vln. and comp. under Spohr, and became his life-long friend. In 1812 he was violinist in the Dresden court orch., became music-teacher to the family of the Russian governor of Dresden, Prince Repnin, and in 1815 went with them to Russia, where he stayed five years. Returning to Germany, he was admitted into Spohr's court orch. at Kassel, in 1822. He exhibited remarkable ability as instructor in cpt. and comp., and in 1842, on the recommendation of Mendelssohn and Spohr, was app. cantor and Musikdirektor at the Thomasschule, as Weinlig's successor, and prof. of cpt. and comp. at Leipzig Cons., retaining these posts until his death. A master of classic mus. form, he followed a fundamental rule, that 'unity of idea and perfection of form' were indispensable in all comps. and exemplified it in his own music, which is remarkable for architectonic symmetry of form and purity of part-leading; his vocal music, especially the motets, is particularly beautiful. Still, although a finished composer, he is more famous as a theorist and teacher; among his numerous distinguished pupils were Ferd. David, Burgmüller, Kiel, the Baches, Joachim, Sullivan, von Bülow, Cowen, etc. The scientific foundation of modern musical theory, amplified by A. v. Oettingen (Harmoniesystem in dualer Entwickelung, 1866), Riemann (Handbuch der Harmonielehre, etc.), and others, is laid by H. in Die Natur der Harmonik und Metrik (1853, 2d ed. 1873; Engl. 1888). His other writings are Erläuterungen zu J. S. Bach's Kunst der Fuge (Peters); Über die Beantwortung des Fugenthemas (printed in the 'Wiener Recensionen'); also short essays in various mus. periodicals, many of which were collected and publ. by H.'s son as Opuscula (1874). In 1868 a posthumous work, Die Lehre von der Harmonik, appeared (edited by Oscar Paul). H.'s Briefe an Franz Hauser (ed. by A. Schöne; 1871, 2 vols.) and Briefe an L. Spohr und andere (ed. by F. Hiller, 1876) have also been publ.—Comps.: Opera Mathilde (Kassel, 1826); string-quartets, vln.-duets, vln.-sonatas; also 2 masses, motets, part-songs for mixed voices, canons a 3 for sopr. voices, duets, and songs for solo voice.

Haus'mann, Robert, 'cellist; b. Rottleberode, Harz Mts., Aug. 13, 1852; d. Vienna, Jan. 18, 1909. To 1869, studied at the Brunswick Gymnasium. 1869–71, pupil of Theodor Müller at the Berlin 'Hochschule,' and finished studies with Piatti in London. 1872–6, at Dresden, 'cellist of the 'Hochberg' quartet; became teacher at the Berlin Royal 'Hochschule.' 1879–1907 member of the Joachim quartet.

Haus'mann, Valentin. Five musicians in direct lineal descent bore this name: V. i, the eldest; b. Nuremberg, 1484, comp. chorales, and was a friend of Luther and of Kapellm. Joh. Walter. His son, V. ii, was org. and councillor at Gerbstädt, and an industrious comp. of motets, canzonets, and dances (intrade, paduane, etc.). A selection of secular songs and instrl. works was publ. by F. Bölsche in 'Dkm. deutscher Tonk.' (vol. xvi). —See Q.-Lex. V. iii, son of preceding, org. at Löbejün, was an expert in org.-construction. His son, V. iv, occupied the posts of chapel-mus. to the Köthen court; org. of Alsleben Ch., and wrote a treatise on solmisation. V. v, Bartholomäus, son of preceding; b. Löbejün, 1678, became cath.-org. at Merseburg and Halle, and d. as org. and burgomaster at Lauchstädt after 1740. Left in MS. several theoretical works.

Hawes, William, Engl. comp. and cond.; b. London, June 21, 1785; d. there Feb. 18, 1846. 1793–1801, Chapel Royal chorister; 1802, violinist at Covent Garden; became Gentleman of the Chapel Royal in 1805; vicar-choral and Master of Choristers at St. Paul's 1814; Master of the Children of the Chapel Royal, 1817; and lay-vicar of Westminster Abbey, 1817–20. From 1824–36, director of English opera at the Lyceum. He adapted and prod. many operas for the English stage, also comp. comic operas, glees, madrigals, etc.

Hawkins, Sir John, musical historian; b. London, March 30, 1719; d. Westminster, May 21, 1789. By profession an attorney, he was also an ardent mus. dilettante; he became a member of various societies, and wrote cantatas set to music by John Stanley. A wealthy marriage (1753) rendered him independent, and he devoted his leisure to literature, more especially that of music. In 1770 he publ. anonymously An Account of the Institution and Progress of the Acad. of Ancient Music. He was knighted in 1772. The result of 16 years' labor was his General History of the Science and Practice of Music (1776; 5 vols. 4to, containing 58 portraits of musicians; republ. by Novello, 1875, 3 vols. 8vo). The 1st vol. of Burney's General History of Music appeared at the same time as H.'s complete work, and was then considered superior. For the other three vols. of his work, Burney drew on H., who was indebted to Cooke for the transcription of the old notation, etc., and to Boyce for the selection of the musical illustrations. Burney was brilliant, and the better musician, but frequently careless and inaccurate; while H., more painstaking and conscientious, made his compilation more reliable as a work of reference; Burney's never reached a 2d edition. H. died of paralysis, and was buried in Westminster Abbey. The monograph on Corelli ('Universal Magazine of Knowledge and Pleasure,' April, 1777) was not new, but a reprint from H.'s principal work.

Hawley, Charles Beach, b. Brookfield, Mass., Feb. 14, 1858; d. Red Bank, N. J., Dec. 29, 1915. While a student at the Cheshire Military Acad. he studied pf. and organ, acting as org. at the Acad. and directing the mus. activities. After graduation he went to New York in 1875, and studied singing with G. J. Webb and comp. with Dudley Buck, J. Mosenthal and Rutenber; 1876, bass soloist at Calvary Ch.; later asst.-org. to G. W. Warren at St. Thomas's Ch.; from 1900 he was organist at St. James's Chapel in Elberon, N. J. For many years he was one of the most active members of the Mendelssohn Glee Club and the Mendelssohn Quartet Club. He publ. some songs and part-songs, showing a facile melodic invention.
